Mr. HOAR. May I be permitted to ask the Senator from Georgia a question? The Senator from Georgia has uttered, and to some extent has represented the opinion of those persons who are spoken of by the Senator from South Carolina as ex-confederates. Does he think that a measure of national importance or any measure of national gratitude should in the least be connected with such a consideration as that of our policy towards ex-confederates? Are we to buy every thing that this country ought to do of proper legislation by some concession of this character? It seems to me the sooner we deal with each of these classes of questions alone, on its merits, without mixing it up with any other, the better.

Mr. BROWN. It is out of the line of my argument, but I have no objection to these interruptions at all, as this question ought to be fairly discussed. I have no fault to find thus far with the action of the Republicans in the Senate Chamber on the question of the relief of the young gentleman whose name was reported in the bill this morning, as there has been no final action taken there, and no vote against the relief. There was an amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, for which I shall very cheerfully vote in any shape that it comes up here, I do not care how, repealing the section that is in the way of a confederate being appointed to a position in the Army as a surgeon or otherwise. But I did not think it was unreasonable on the part of a Republican Senator to say, "as this involves a repeal of the statute, let it go to the committee, and let them make a report;" and that is all that I understand was done. I might feel like complaining, when a report has been made and the Senate has acted, if the Republican Senators should come here and vote to refuse to remove that disability, because this young gentleman who went when a mere youth, as it was stated, into the confederate service, has come and asked relief; and I believe in almost every case, of political disability or other disability imposed by the Constitution or by the laws of Congress, where the person laboring under the disability has applied for relief it has been accorded to him.

Mr. TELLER. In all cases.

Mr. LOGAN. In every case.

Mr. BROWN. It is said in every case. I was not certain that was true. I do not think it a hardship, as I said, that a confederate who is under those disabilities, the fortunes of war having placed him there, should do as the rest of us have been required to do—indicate his wish that the disability be removed. Therefore I cannot undertake to find particular fault with the action of Senators on the other side upon that question.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I am finding fault with nobody. I had no purpose in propounding the inquiry that I did of mixing up any question of national importance with any concession to anybody; but it is constantly drummed into our ears day after day and week after week that we ought to be magnanimous; that we ought to do this and we ought to do that. When a question of that kind came up for action I have never permitted my section or my relations to anybody to influence me; I have been governed by what I thought to be right; but I think there should be some end to this constant demand that is made in some quarters. Hence it was that I propounded the inquiry, simply in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia when he spoke of our being magnanimous to General Grant. As I said the other day, there is nothing that I can do to show respect to General Grant that I am not quite willing to do; I have no feeling upon earth against him; but I think there should be some termination, some end to this thing, so far as the appeals to us are concerned.

Mr. BROWN. I know my friend from South Carolina does not believe that in the remarks I made I had any intention of attempting to lecture my friends from the South. I expressed my opinion as to what was best for us to do, and I said that I should act upon that opinion. I have no question that they were as honest in their opinions and their action as I was in mine. In other words, I was assigning the reasons why, as a confederate, I sustain this measure. That is all I intended.

I had reached the point when I was interrupted where I was referring to the sacrifices made by the southern people. While I think the Republican party has dealt harshly with us in some cases, I do not say that all that has been done where we made sacrifices has been under the lash of the Republican party. At the end of the contest, although President Johnson had been elected by the Republican party as Vice-President, and by the most unfortunate occurrence, which terminated the life of President Lincoln, he had become President of the United States, I do not think he and the Republican party agreed in all that he did at that time. He was elected by them, but was not, in fact, their representative. What did he say to us as confederates? He originated a policy of his own, which, I believe, was known at the time as "my policy." He did not call Congress together and lay his plans before them, but he appointed governors of the Southern States and called conventions in the Southern States, and what did he dictate? He required by express instruction to Governor Johnson, appointed by him in Georgia, that the convention should adopt the thirteenth amendment abolishing slavery, and that they should repudiate our war debt.

That convention was not made up of negroes, or carpet-baggers, or as the term sometimes was, scalawags. But it was made up of the representative people of Georgia; men of the first ability and standing, and of the highest order of patriotism. We knew that we had failed; we knew that we occupied the position of the conquered; and as we could not deal with Congress, we must deal with the representative of the conqueror who then held the power in his hands. He said to the Southern States, "abolish slavery." The representative assemblies there, with the proudest and ablest men of the States in those bodies, promptly responded, and they swept away (if there was vitality still left in it—at least we gave our consent to it) two thousand million dollars' worth of property in slaves. He made the further requirement of us that we should repudiate the war debt. The fourteenth constitutional amendment had not then been ratified; we went as far as we could in doing it. We passed, in my State, and I believe they did in all the other States, for I think it was a requirement of all, an ordinance repudiating the debt, when many of us did not believe we ought to do it. But the representative of the conqueror having dictated it we, lying as the conquered at his feet, responded and gave our assent.

If we could afford to do that in obedience to the dictation of the conqueror whose armies were led by General Grant and by the present General of the Army, and make the sacrifice in the loss of slavery and by the repudiation of the war debt of between four and five thousand millions of dollars as the result of our failure, I am prepared to-day to take another little step for harmony. I have often said that I acquiesce in the past; that I return in good faith to the Union; that I renew my allegiance, and that I will vie with any Senator from the northern section in doing all in my power to promote the future welfare and progress of the people of this great Republic; and as they look to General Grant as the first hero of the war, and after having honored him with the Presidency they propose now to restore him to his position on the Army list and retire him, I say I will throw no obstructions in the way; I think it appropriate, all the circumstances considered.

It is said enough has been done for him. It is true much has been done. He has been honored by the American people with the highest honors of the Republic, civil and military. He has held the position of Chief Magistrate of this Union as long as Washington, the Father of his Country, held it, and as long as Jackson, the hero of the second war, held it; and the civil war having been much grander and more magnificent in its proportions and probably much further-reaching in its results, it is not predicting too much to say that posterity will assign to General Grant the position of having been the second to save the country. If so, future Senators or future sessions of Congress may still do higher honors to his memory than we now do to him living. We have not done too much for Washington; he had all the honors his countrymen could heap upon him during his life. A hundred years have passed, and to-day the American people by appropriations from the American Treasury are raising high in sight of this place a costly monument to the perpetuation of his memory. If we can do that for the hero of the first war, I can afford to vote to put the hero of the late war upon the retired list of the Army with the usual pay of a retired officer of his rank. Posterity will assign him a position among the greatest military captains of past ages. And those who come after us, and read the history of the present period, and see what distinguished honors he received from the greatest nations of this day during his trip around the world, will probably wonder that the record shows that there was a division in the Senate of the United States on the proposition to pay him the tribute designated in this bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, the transaction in which we are engaged to-day will outlive the memory of the actors. The petty difference of opinion which may divide this Chamber on the final vote on this bill will never be thought of or considered by the historian who shall tell of what happened here to-day. We are now making history on a great scale. The record of our ordinary morning business will go into the rubbish basket of the future and will never be heard of beyond the narrow circle whose interests are affected by it. But this business will live; and it will be as impossible to drive the sun out of his fiery and illuminating orbit as to prevent this man whose name is embodied in this bill from being the central figure of our history in all time to come. I say this out of no lavish spirit of adulation; I have it not. I have had reason to criticise much that is objectionable in his political career, but his faults and failings will die with him, and the memory of the great military transactions affecting the interests of fifty millions of people alone will live.

The question is, can the Senate of the United States, representing now a united country, afford to deny what is asked in behalf of General Grant? I have nothing to say about his poverty or his wealth; he may not need the relief asked for, it is likely he does not. This is the narrowest ground upon which the case could rest. The country and posterity will know him only as the chief director of the greatest military movements the world ever saw, and the commander of armies and phalanxes beside which those of Waterloo and Austerlitz sink into insignificance. I do not wish to set up the example of monarchies for the guidance of a republic. But republics cannot afford to appear contemptible in the eyes of their own people or of the world. The fame of this man, whether deserved or not, as a military leader will eclipse that of Wellington. His services were rendered for a republic, and it may be they ought not to be regarded; but the people, despite of all that may be said here, will regard them just in the same way that the British people considered Wellington's. The latter's government freely gave £60,000, or $300,000, to pay his funeral expenses. This was the greatest sum of money Englishmen ever gave to honor the bones of an Irishman, but it was given without the least regard to the fact that the estate of the great Duke was as well able to pay his funeral expenses as any estate in the kingdom. Suppose the pay of a retired General is $12,000 a year; you would not give to your General in the aggregate and during the whole of his life what England paid to carry the remains of Wellington to Saint Paul's.

Now when it was proposed to retire General Shields, whom nobody respected more than I did, I voted for the resolution freely. General Shields well deserves all that the Senator from Missouri said of him. He was a gallant and grand old Irish gentleman, and shed his blood like water for his adopted country. He had been highly honored for his services; he represented three different States in this body, a very rare honor, and those who knew him know very well that it was his military services which secured it. In voting to put this old soldier on the retired list, I did so because I thought his services to the country entitled him to it. I had no right to put my vote on any other ground. If I vote against this resolution I will say to the country that in my judgment the military services of General Shields were better worth rewarding than those of General Grant; and while I might claim a license for pardonable extravagance, I do not think it would protect me in saying that. But, sir, outside of all this, I cannot ignore the fact that an overwhelming majority of the American people will regard this question as a sectional one. There are some cases where the individual is nothing, and the principle everything. I shall not stop to quarrel or contend with public sentiment, nor will I, with this light before me, cast a vote which I feel quite sure will have the effect of inflaming and strengthening the dread spirit of sectionalism, now happily on the decline in this country. I shall vote for this bill.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this bill proposes an acknowledgment for distinguished public services rendered by an eminent citizen. The only two questions that are legitimate to the consideration of the bill are as to the character of the services and as to the form in which the public acknowledgment shall be made. Ordinarily these two divisions would comprehend the entire consideration of the subject, but there are circumstances outside of the subject of the bill which relate to the Senate as it is now constituted, which will influence my action, and which I think may very properly influence the action of other Senators here.

We are here in part Senators from the States formerly engaged in resistance to the national authority, and in the larger part Senators from the States that maintained the national authority. The bill proposes a recognition of the military services of the leader of the armies that sustained the national authority; and it is proposed in this body by the Senators from those States that adhered to that authority. It is submitted to us, now restored to our constitutional relations to the Union, whether we shall say that they who maintained the authority of the Union shall not bestow upon the distinguished general of their armies such public reward and such recognition as to them and their people shall seem meet and proper.

Sir, I maintain that if there is no constitutional objection to the measure; if there is no important ground of public policy to require it, that it would be ungracious, as well as unwise, in us to sit in disapproval and rebuke upon the judgment of the people of the North as to the form, and the manner, or the extent in which they shall make that public recognition of the services of the leader of their armies. For that reason I shall not allow my judgment to be put in opposition to theirs; nor can I, upon an investigation of the subject, find any ground of constitutional objection or of public policy that would justify me in doing so. The whole extent of the question is, shall a public acknowledgment by the Congress of the United States be made of military services which by the general verdict of the American people have been recognized as pre-eminent? Upon that question there can be no great difference of opinion.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] argued this question in the light of the argument of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] as to the objection found in the existing law. I can never upon any subject that addresses itself to my judgment apply that argument as a reasonable ground for refusing to support a bill which proposes to change the existing law. We are here with an ever-present authority to make law, to correct law; and it is no objection to my mind that the existing law is of one character or another, if the object of the proposed law is wise and just.

The Senator from Missouri also considered the subject in the light of the objectionable measures of General Grant's civil administration, and of his voluntary resignation of the office of General, and of the high civil position conferred upon him, and of his affluence, and in the light of the unjustifiable opposition to General Shields's pension. In all this I find nothing which denies the eminent military services of General Grant or the general verdict of the American people in regard to them; and these constitute the meritorious consideration upon which such measures as this bill proposes must rest.

I do not find in the proposition of the eminent Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] that which commends itself to me as a substitute for the bill, although I should most gladly see it added as an amendment to the bill. I would vote for it in that form, or as a distinct measure.

I believe that the dignity of this Republic of this American people requires an ample acknowledgment, both pecuniary and otherwise, of the eminent military or civil services of their citizens. I think it is no boon to the poor people of this country to say that they shall not hold office, and that the doors of high official position shall be open only to the rich because of an inadequate compensation for services rendered, or the absence of a provision by law for their support at the close of long or eminent periods of public service. My vote shall always be for a liberal compensation and a large acknowledgment of eminent public services military or civil. In this instance, while I, standing at a different point of view, might perhaps compare not unfavorably in my own mind and in the judgment of the people of my State the eminent fame of a hero who sleeps the last sleep of death, and who was great in the midst of defeat, with that of the General of the Union armies, I shall not allow any consideration of that kind to disparage the distinguished fame and services of the eminent military man who stood in arms against him.

I shall vote for the bill, sir, and vote for it with pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware. I do not wish to discuss the merits of that amendment at this time. I will merely say that in the introduction of this bill before the Senate by myself it was intended then, and my intention now is, that if the bill passes it shall be passed on the ground of the extraordinary military services rendered this country by General U. S. Grant, not on account of his civil position at any time, but as a recognition of those services which have not been recognized in this way.

I do not wish it to ever stand as a precedent for any other case. I never myself have voted to put a civilian on the retired list that I recollect of, and this is the exception to the rule. There have been, as I quoted the other day, numerous instances where it has been done, and the record shows it, and they are on the record to-day; but this particular case I presented to the Senate because I thought it was a recognition of the military services of this man that was due to him by the Government of the United States, and I think so now. The power exists to do it. It is a mere question whether we shall do it or not. I hope we shall, and I hope the bill will be stripped of any amendment that would be calculated to defeat the intent of it.

My own judgment is, that if the amendment of the Senator from Delaware was adopted the bill would be defeated; whether defeated here or not it certainly, in my judgment, would not get through Congress. If there is merit in the proposition that he presents let it be offered as a separate measure and stand upon its own merits.

Some objection was made by the Senator to the effect that this bill would interfere with the retired list, and I rose as much to correct that as anything else. It does not interfere with it. If any Senator thinks it would interfere with the retirement of any officer in the Army, or the promotion of any officer in the Army, it is not necessary to make that an objection to the bill, because it is the easiest thing in the world to change it just by adding a few words. If it is desirable I shall move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the retirement of U. S. Grant shall be in addition to the number now allowed to be retired by law.

Just a slight amendment would strike from the record and also the law every objection that has been made by the Senator from Delaware. I should suppose if that had been an objection in his mind he would have drawn up and proposed such an amendment. These little objections to bills are made because you are not for the bill, because the bill can be so easily prepared as to coincide with the views expressed and meet the objections. I insist that the bill does not interfere in that respect, and if any Senator thinks it does I am willing that an amendment shall be added to the bill which will make it so specific that every one can understand it.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President, I have been sick and absent from my seat for several days, and had no intention of taking part in this debate. As it seems, however, that we will be called upon in a few moments to vote, I desire briefly to give the reasons why I cannot vote for this bill, or for the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

While Senators from the South have been airing their confederate reminiscences, and acknowledging their patriotic adhesion to this Government, which again and again they have adhered to, and to which they have again and again vowed allegiance, while they are making their new protestations they seem to have forgotten the fact that sixteen years have passed since the war ended. They seem to have forgotten that there are no longer any sectional distinctions or divisions in this country. They seem, some of them, to have forgotten that they sit on this floor not as southern Senators, or ex-confederates, but as American Senators representing States in the Union.

I was astonished a few moments ago to see my esteemed friend from Florida [Mr. CALL] arise and to hear him, in the character of an ex-confederate, say that he sat here for the purpose of doing that which the Senators of the North and the people of the North desire to have done. I acknowledge no such obligations and I acknowledge no such distinctions. This is an American Senate, and I represent in part one State of this Union, as the Senators from northern States represent their States and their constituents, and I will be guided in the votes which I cast by my idea of my duty to my whole people instead of what I think it becomes me to do as an ex-sinner and ex-confederate in order to atone for that sin which I committed twenty years ago by offering here in my place to execute the edict of the northern members of this body, or what is supposed to be the will and pleasure of the northern people. I do not think that this is the proper way in which this measure should be considered.

I am not opposed to this bill simply because of its unusual character. I am not opposed to the bill simply because it proposes to put a civilian on the retired list of the Army. I am still less opposed to it because I would in the slightest degree detract from the great fame, the great renown, which has been conferred upon General Grant not only by the people of this country but by the people of the world, who have proclaimed him to be one of the greatest and most successful military commanders of modern days.

I was an humble soldier in the confederate army; but I have never revamped my recollections of secession, rebellion, and war and brought them upon this floor. I have never alluded in words of criticism to anything which occurred during the war. I have said nothing and have nothing to say in condemnation of any military act committed during the war. I have stood ready here to give all honors, and all praise, and all glories to the heroes of the war. I have stood here ready to yield to no man in my devotion to the interests of the soldiers who fought against me. I have been willing to vote for their pensions; I have been willing to vote for their promotions; I have been willing to accede to all honors and to all glories which a grateful people, rightly in my opinion, have been disposed to shower upon them.

But the proposed beneficiary of this bill, at a time when the people had placed him at the head of the Army, when they had created the highest military office in the land for him to fill, when they had placed him in a position full of honor and full of emolument, which he could have occupied to his last days with the approbation and unanimous approval of the whole people of the country, North and South, thought fit to abdicate that position, and to enter upon the career of a civilian and a politician. Elected by his people to the highest office in the Government, honored equally with the Father of his Country, and equally with any of the best and greatest in our country's history, he retired from that position only because the people were faithful to their traditions, and considered that his measure of civic honor had been filled. I have not heard that he has lost fortune. If so, I stand here ready to assist in voting him a pension, in voting him money, in voting him any thing which will aid in paying the debt which the nation owes him as a successful commander of her Army, and probably as such her savior in her hour of peril. When, however, he comes here as a civilian, and when we are asked to place him upon the retired list of the Army as a reward, not for his military services, because we rewarded them to our uttermost at the time he was a soldier, but to reward him as a civilian, I stand here as the representative of a people who have the right to challenge his acts as a civilian, and to ask in what he has earned their gratitude and in what he is entitled to their praise or further honor.

Mr. President, I cannot vote for General Grant, because as President in 1873, and in 1875, he subverted and destroyed the liberties of the people whom I represent upon this floor. I cannot vote for General Grant, because when he was President in 1873 and the people of Louisiana were being deprived of their constitutional rights and privileges, and a government foreign to them and not elected by them was being installed over them by his order and by military force, they sent on to him a committee of two hundred of their best citizens, not politicians but citizens and tax-payers, men possessing an interest in the State as the representatives of property, and they telegraphed to him:

> Please do not take any final action in the recognition of this government until we shall have a chance to lay our case before you.

He responded to them through his Attorney-General:

> It is useless for you to send 200,000 of your best citizens; they cannot be heard; the case is adjudged; the Pinchback government is acknowledged, and it will be maintained.

Am I to vote civic honors, am I to vote military honors, to the man who thus set his foot upon the liberties of my State? and was deaf to the appeal of her people to be heard?

Again, in 1875, when the Legislature of the State of Louisiana was assembled and organized, a belted officer, followed by his bayonets, entered the legislative chamber of the State and unseated the speaker whom the members had elected, and dissolved that Legislature, which had organized, and this was done by the order and command of General Grant, President of the Nation, and as such, acting Commander-in-Chief of the Army. Did this entitle him to the regard and support of my people; and for this shall he be rewarded?

No, Mr. President; for what he did in war, all honor; no one will accord it to him more cheerfully than I; but not for what he did in peace as a civilian, (and I consider the bill before us now to confer reward as a civilian, he steps upon this ground as a civilian, he is to be crowned as a civilian, and as such he is to be promoted,) I for one shall never consent by my vote to reward or approve such victories as he gained in Louisiana over republican institutions and the liberty of the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say a word before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be first read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is moved to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

> That hereafter there shall be paid to every President of the United States who shall have served, or may hereafter serve, in said office, and who shall have retired from the same, a sum annually, during his life, equal to one-quarter part of the annual salary paid him while in said office: Provided, however, That said sum shall not be paid to any President while holding said office by any re-election thereto.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Florida will pardon me one moment, I should like to have an amendment to the amendment read which I propose to offer. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "hereafter" in the first line of the amendment, and after the word "office," before the word "provided," to insert:

> And the same amount shall be paid to any surviving widow of any one who has been President of the United States.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, my friend, the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS,] for whom I have very great respect, alluded to a statement that I made to the effect that the Senators from the Southern States could not well sit in judgment upon the general verdict of the States and people of the North in regard to the military services of General Grant. My friend takes exception to that remark. My honorable friend cannot be ignorant of the fact that although more than "fifteen years have elapsed since the war" there are many of us who shared its sympathies and its hopes on either side of this Chamber, and he cannot ignore what all men know, that we are at least liable more or less to color our convictions with the sympathies brought from those times. It is only just and proper, where no considerations of constitutional duty and of sound policy require it, that we should not place our judgment against that of the great majority of the people of the North upon a subject which specially concerns the fame and reputation and services of their leading military men, at least in the exercise of our constitutional and legislative power in respect to providing a pecuniary compensation or reward for such service.

Sir, I reiterate the declaration; I have a profound conviction in my mind of its truth and its propriety. I wish further to say that my honorable friend's forcible remarks, (which but reiterate the general declarations and the opinions of a great political party, somewhat intensified perhaps by our southern feeling in regard to several acts of his administrations,) which met with profound disapproval in our States by almost all of our people, only serve to show how much more of peace and good feeling will come from a recognition of a proposition to reward the conspicuous military services of a great military chieftain without bringing it into party politics, or meeting it with the condemnation which we think properly belongs to the civil administration of the Government; the responsibility for which General Grant must bear only in common with a great political party which with its allies constitutes at least one-half and perhaps a little more of this body, and which I hope was in part at least owing to the excitements and bitter antagonisms of a protracted civil war. That is one reason why I accept this bill, and gladly accept it; and I am satisfied that a large majority of the southern people in that point of view would gladly accord to General Grant or the other distinguished leaders of the armies a like recognition of their public services. They only ask and hope that the war being now a long time past, we should meet each other on all questions that concerned the war in a spirit of generous fairness, and of charity for whatever of wrong or error there was on either side in our relations toward each other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. BUTLER. Upon reflection I withdraw the amendment to the amendment. I do not wish to embarrass the question by it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I am in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, taking it as a distinct proposition. I think it is a wise and sound public policy to exonerate persons who have held the office of President of the United States from the necessity of ordinary labor for the rest of their lives, and I think we ought to provide that a President of the United States shall not accept or serve in his great office, to use the phrase of the mover of the amendment, with the specter of poverty staring him in the face. I should have preferred that measure as a solution of the problem what ought to be done in the case of the illustrious soldier who is named in the bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois, but I am constrained to vote against that amendment as an amendment to the bill for several reasons.

In the first place, I do not think I ought to disregard in the solution of a method of publicly honoring General Grant the wishes and opinions of those persons who are nearest to him. Gentlemen who are likely to know his desires, gentlemen who are understood to be his intimate personal friends, who have been his companions in social and in public life, the representatives in the Senate of the State of which he is a citizen, as I understand, concur in the opinion that this will be the most acceptable and appropriate method of paying toward General Grant the honor which I believe every Senator who has spoken, without exception, is desirous of paying that great and illustrious name. I do not think it wise to interfere with such a measure, when it is about to be consummated, by insisting upon dealing with a question which is to be permanent, perpetual, applicable to all future Presidents of the United States, and a question which arises out of the demands and necessities of a different office.

I am not here inquiring how we may properly honor the name or provide for the old age of General Grant, the ex-President of the United States. Whether his services in that office were great or were not great, is a question upon which gentlemen differ politically; but it is not the question which is here presented. It is agreed that among the illustrious military names of the world is this military name; that among the illustrious services which great soldiers have been able to render to their country in its time of danger, perhaps the most illustrious of modern times, are those which this man has rendered to our country; and it seems not inappropriate that we should make this inadequate expression of our gratitude for those services by appointing him to a military rank and decorating him again with his old military title.

For that reason I shall surrender my own judgment as to the proper method of honoring General Grant to the judgment of the representatives of the State to which he belongs, and I shall defer voting upon the question of what is the proper method of dealing with ex-Presidents until that question shall come up in a proper way and at a proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALDRICH.]

Mr. FRYE, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] but as this is not a political question, and as the colleague of that Senator [Mr. BROWN] has declared that he will vote for the main bill, and as I am very desirous of recording my appreciation of the distinguished military services of General Grant, I shall take the liberty to vote on all questions touching this subject. I vote "nay" on the amendment.

Mr. GARLAND, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I do not know how he would vote upon this question if he were here; but if he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL.] Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I shall withhold my own vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER.] I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am in favor of the proposition as a separate bill, but I shall vote "nay" so as not to encumber this bill.

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 51; as follows:

YEAS—5.

Bayard,	Davis of W. Va.,	Groome,	Hampton.
Butler,

NAYS—51.

Allison,	Cockrell,	George,	Jackson,
Anthony,	Coke,	Grover,	Jonas,
Beck,	Conger,	Harris,	Jones of Florida,
Blair,	Davis of Illinois,	Harrison,	Jones of Nevada,
Brown,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Lapham,
Call,	Farley,	Hill of Colorado,	Logan,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Hoar,	McDill,
Cameron of Wis.,	Frye,	Ingalls,	McMillan,
Maxey,	Platt,	Saunders,	Van Wyck,
Miller of Cal.,	Plumb,	Sawyer,	Vest,
Mitchell,	Pugh,	Sherman,	Walker,
Morrill,	Ransom,	Slater,	Windom.
Pendleton,	Rollins,	Teller,

ABSENT—20.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Hale,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Edmunds,	Hill of Georgia,	Mahone,	Vance,
Fair,	Johnston,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,
Garland,	Kellogg,	Morgan,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill in order to meet a point suggested by the Senator from Delaware. I move to add at the end of the bill:

The retirement herein provided for shall be in addition to the number now authorized by law.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to the amendment; it is just what I suggested a while ago if any one thought it desirable. I am willing to accept it if the Senate will agree to my doing so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot accept it.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; let the vote be taken on agreeing to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VEST. I suggest that the yeas and nays be taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. It would be better to take the vote by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it, and then the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays can be taken on the engrossment of the bill as well as on the passage. That is often done.

Mr. ROLLINS and others. Let us take a division on this question.

Mr. HARRIS. The demand for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn by unanimous consent, and the Senate can divide on the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays can be withdrawn. Shall the ordering of the yeas and nays be withdrawn?

Mr. HARRIS and others. No objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to withdrawing the demand for the yeas and nays for the purpose of having a division, but I do not want to have it withdrawn so as to have the vote decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The demand for the yeas and nays will be regarded as withdrawn if there be no objection. Those who are in favor of the engrossment of the bill will rise and stand until counted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, there being on a division—ayes 34, noes 15.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VEST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE.] If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea." I am authorized to say that for him.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) As I stated, I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALDRICH.] Not knowing how he would vote if he were here, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GARLAND, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were here, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. SEWELL.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Dawes,	Hill of Colorado,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ferry,	Hoar,
Blair,	Conger,	Frye,	Ingalls,
Brown,	Davis of Illinois,	Harrison,	Jones of Florida,
Call,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Jones of Nevada,

Lapham,	Miller of Cal.,	Ransom,	Sherman,
Logan,	Mitchell,	Rollins,	Teller,
McDill,	Morrill,	Saunders,	Windom.
McMillan,	Platt,	Sawyer,

NAYS—17.

Bayard,	Groome,	Jonas,	Vest,
Butler,	Grover,	Maxey,	Walker.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Pendleton,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,
Farley,	Jackson,	Slater,

ABSENT—24.

Aldrich,	George,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,

Edmunds,	Hill of Georgia,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Fair,	Johnston,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Garland,	Kellogg.	Plumb,	Williams.

So the bill was passed.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to give way to me to allow me to bring up the resolution that was introduced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] this morning in reference to certain suffering people in the South, and which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have a letter from the Secretary of War upon the subject, and if he will not object, inasmuch as it is desirable to have the resolution acted upon to-day, I ask leave to report it back from the committee favorably with a substitute, and ask that it be passed at once.

Mr. McPHERSON. I give way to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Military Affairs report back the joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations for the relief of the laboring classes in the districts overflowed by the Mississippi River.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish the attention of the Senator from Illinois. Does he report back the original resolution?

Mr. LOGAN. With an amendment as a substitute.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, being to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, of which sum so much as is necessary shall be used by the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to aid in the relief of the laboring classes in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries; and he is authorized to cooperate with the authorities of the several States of which such district is a part in making distribution of the same.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The phrase "the laboring classes" may possibly not include aged persons, or children who are not old enough to have any occupation in life. It seems to me "destitute persons" would be better.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to the change. The Senator can offer that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to insert the words——

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert after "laboring classes"—perhaps they may as well remain—the words "and other destitute people."

Mr. LOGAN. I think probably that would be better.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now read the amendment as amended.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the words "laboring classes and other."

Mr. LOGAN. You mean to leave it stand "destitute persons," simply.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection, because that will cover all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none and it will be regarded as agreed to.

The committee's amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A joint resolution appropriating $100,000, or so much as shall be necessary, to be used by the Secretary of War for the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to aid in the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes the object of the Senator is to make the bill the unfinished business?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business with the understanding that the bill just called up shall be in order to-morrow. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There cannot, in the opinion of the Chair, be any way of getting the bill before the Senate except by a vote.

Mr. BAYARD. Before the question is put, I wish to be heard.

Mr. McPHERSON. I can hear nothing that is going on on the other side of the Chamber. I did not hear the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Does the Senator adhere to that motion?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. BAYARD. Will not the Senator withdraw that to allow the order of business to be fixed?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, which motion is not debatable.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senate will not agree to that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that the bill referred to by the Senator from New Jersey will not involve a long time in its consideration and decision, or I should now antagonize it by moving to take up Senate bill No. 22, to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal revenue laws. While I shall not now antagonize the motion of the Senator from New Jersey that his bill be taken up for the purpose of making it the unfinished business for to-morrow, I give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the debate upon the bill offered by the Senator from New Jersey, I shall press the tariff-commission bill on the attention of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Allow me to say to the Senator from Delaware that my impression is that the bill reported by the Senator from New Jersey will take a week's time.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well, then, if——

Mr. MORRILL. And it is of far less importance than the bill the Senator from Delaware refers to.

Mr. BAYARD. I am assured to the contrary. Of course we cannot tell until it is tried. What I mean to say is that if the bill referred to by the Senator from New Jersey shall prove to be a bill of long and dilatory debate, I shall ask the sense of the Senate whether they will not lay it aside and take up the tariff commission bill. I think we ought to pass upon it; at least the Senate shall have the opportunity of saying whether they will or not.

Mr. McPHERSON. So far as the debate is concerned on the bill that I have asked may be taken up, there will be no discussion in the Senate on my part. The report is all I wish to have presented to the Senate to show every thing that is proposed. I do not think it need take twenty minutes to dispose of it. I renew my motion to take up Senate bill No. 12.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to say a word in this stage of the proceedings. Some three weeks ago I gave notice that I would move at a certain time to take up Senate bill No. 71, which relates to the Chinese question. I did not have the opportunity to do so at that time; I gave another notice, and I was crowded out a second time. I gave a third notice that at the conclusion of the business which has occupied this day, I should make that motion and take the sense of the Senate upon it. It is a matter of great importance, at least to the people of the Pacific coast. There is now a great deal of excitement in reference to that question there, and I think the Senate ought to take it up and dispose of it; either pass the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations or vote it down, so that the question may be ended one way or the other.

I appeal to the Senate to do this. I do so because I consider it a question of as great importance as any that has come before the Senate, and to our people it is certainly of greater importance than any I know of that will come before the Senate. We have waited patiently a long time. While I would not desire to antagonize the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, if his bill is to occupy a great length of time, a week in debate, I shall feel it my duty to antagonize it and test the sense of the Senate. If it will take but a short time I shall be willing, if my bill be taken up, to give way to him and give him an opportunity to pass his bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. If it takes more than an hour in its consideration I will agree to have it laid aside.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Then I shall agree to give way with that understanding. I therefore, if it is acceptable to the Senator from New Jersey, make the motion to take the sense of the Senate now that the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese be taken up and left as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey withdraw his motion?

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from California will understand that I am also antagonizing the Senator from Delaware on the measure he wishes to take up.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think the Senator from Delaware will give way.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Well we will take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word, though I do not wish to interfere with the order of business. I only wish to give notice that at half past one o'clock to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to take up the immediate deficiency appropriation bill to the exclusion of everything else. It is of absolute importance that that bill shall pass the Senate this week, for the reason that it involves, among other things, a deficiency in the public printing, which makes it necessary that an appropriation for that service should be passed this week if we are to continue the printing necessary for the Senate and House.

Mr. MILLER, of California. How long will that take?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know, but probably an hour or two. I merely wish to give that notice in order that Senators may know that whatever they take up to-night will be set aside to-morrow at half past one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The deficiency bill will in all probability take up the whole of to-morrow after half past one.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to any understanding that will be in an honorary way binding on any Senator as to the order of business after the disposition of the bill which is brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from New Jersey. I have no objection to that bill being now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey adhere to his motion?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I adhere to my motion.

Mr. HOAR. It is quite obvious that the taking up of any measure by vote to-night will be a mere idle ceremony. Here are half a dozen Senators, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] with his bill, the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] with his bill, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] with his bill, and perhaps others, all struggling to get their bills taken up to-night that they may be the unfinished business, when it is perfectly manifest that whatever bill is taken up will be displaced by the appropriation bill, which always has the right of way, at half past one to-morrow, and it will require to try the question all over again then.

Mr. MCPHERSON. My bill will take no time scarcely; it can be determined readily.

Mr. HOAR. No matter how much time it takes the appropriation bill will displace the pending measure, except by unanimous consent. You either have to have unanimous consent to lay aside the pending measure informally, which you will not get, or you have to displace it by the appropriation bill. It makes no difference whether it takes five minutes or five seconds, it is an entire waste of time. To-morrow, when the Senate gets through with the appropriation bill, it will be in order for either of these Senators to call up the bill that he wants and proceed with it. Nothing is gained by our spending this time and having a struggle now. I therefore move that we proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and at (four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of Tuesday last was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. ATHERTON. I rise to make a correction. On Tuesday last I was absent under leave of the House, obtained on last Saturday, and I had a pair with my colleague, [Mr. MOREY.] For some reason—I presume through misapprehension on the part of the Clerk—that pair was not read on Tuesday. I desire it to appear in the RECORD that I was paired on that day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement will go into the RECORD; and if further correction be needed, it can be made.

LINCOLN MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. ORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association be taken from the Speaker's table for the purpose of concurring in an amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas owing to the large number of trustees named in the "Act to incorporate the Lincoln Monument Association," approved March 13, 1867, it proves to be impracticable for a majority of said trustees to meet for the transaction of the business of said association: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter five of the trustees of said association, whether named in said act or subsequently appointed, shall constitute a legal quorum and may exercise all the powers conferred by law upon said association.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That each of the said trustees shall be notified by the president or secretary twenty days in advance of any meeting of said trustees."

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and the amendment of the Senate concurred in.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;" in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

RELIEF OF MISSISSIPPI SUFFERERS.

Mr. CHALMERS. I ask unanimous consent to have read the telegram which I send to the Clerk, after which I propose to submit a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, February 21, 1882.

Quitman County overflowed. Thousands of colored people starving. We must have assistance at once.

W. T. JEMISON.

Hon. J. R. CHALMERS, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CHALMERS. I ask unanimous consent to present for immediate consideration a joint resolution, which will be found to be in exact accordance with the precedents of the House of Representatives established in the Forty-third Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 143) to provide relief for Mississippi sufferers.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to direct the issue temporarily of supplies of food and disused Army clothing sufficient to prevent starvation and suffering and extreme want to any and all classes of destitute or helpless persons living on or near the Lower Mississippi River who have been rendered so by reason of the present overflow of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. KASSON. To whom does the resolution give authority?

Mr. CHALMERS. To the President of the United States. This is an exact copy of a resolution passed in the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. MARSH. I simply want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi why he confines this resolution to people living along the Lower Mississippi River. I see by the dispatches that this overflow extends to the Ohio and along the Upper Mississippi. I object to the resolution in its present shape.

Mr. CHALMERS. I ask the Clerk to modify the resolution by striking out "lower."

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi accept the suggestion that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs with authority to report it back at any time?

Mr. CHALMERS. I will consent to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be considered as read a first and second time, and will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with leave to report it back at any time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DECISIONS OF POINTS OF ORDER.

Mr. REED. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Journal Clerk be directed to compile for the use of the House all questions of order raised and decided in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on general appropriation and revenue bills from the Fortieth to the Forty-sixth Congress, inclusive, and the necessary expense incurred for copying and indexing the same shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, subject to the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is there any report on that?

Mr. REED. I desire to say it is a proposition simply to compile the decisions of the chairmen of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for a few Congresses, for our guidance in the passage of appropriation and revenue bills. It is a very small matter, the extra expense, I am informed, amounting to less than $100.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope my colleague will not object to it.

Mr. REED. I have no doubt it is for the advantage of the business of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have not heard it on this side, and I ask that the resolution be again reported.

Mr. REED. I am sure that when the House understands the resolution there cannot be the slightest objection to it.

The resolution was again read.

There was no objection, and the resolution was received and agreed to.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNSEAWORTHY STEAMERS.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question. The Committee on Commerce has instructed me to report back the following resolution of inquiry, with the recommendation that it do pass:

Whereas it is alleged that certain vessels, called steamers, have sailed out of the port of New York under the English flag, and with an American certificate allowing them to run, among them the steamship Bahama, lately lost; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said last mentioned vessel was unseaworthy, of which the supervising inspector-general of steamboat inspectors was advised, and that other vessels similarly privileged are grossly unfit and unsafe, and the lives and property of our citizens put in peril thereby: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to this House all information in his office or that of his subordinates in relation to such vessels, with a view to so amend the law as to remedy such gross disregard of life and property.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the gentleman from California to state that this is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did so state, and the Chair will ask whether it is a resolution of inquiry referred to that committee?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, it is a resolution of inquiry introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and referred to the Committee on Commerce. I have been instructed by that committee to report the resolution back, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I have also been requested by the Committee on Commerce to ask by unanimous consent of the House that the argument now proceeding before that committee on the question of interstate commerce may be printed for the use of the committee and for use of members of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

INDIAN TREATY KEEPING AND PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to present to this House a memorial letter of the Indian Treaty Keeping and Protective Association, with their petition for 1882, and to ask that I may be permitted to read that memorial letter and the heading of the petition, and to have both papers printed in the RECORD. The letter will explain itself, and I have no remarks to make in addition to what are contained therein.

This petition represents, it is claimed, a hundred thousand persons, and is presented here by a committee of ladies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HASKELL. I will now read the memorial letter which I have referred to:

Memorial letter of the Indian Treaty Keeping and Protective Association with their petition for 1882.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Again the women of a national Indian association beg leave to present to your honorable body the petition they have circulated and received again from the people of the United States. Their roll represents, at a low estimate, considerably more than a hundred thousand citizens, instead of thirteen thousand, as did their first, three years ago, and is a most earnest plea for a righteous, speedy, and permanent settlement of the Indian question.

Among the petitioners are many hundreds of churches which have adopted the petition by a unanimous rising vote, this often having been taken at a regular Sabbath service. Various popular meetings have also here presented their plea similarly expressed, while the roll contains names of members of legislative bodies, of governors, judges, and lawyers; names of bishops and of many hundreds of the clergy, among the latter the entire ministry of three denominations in the city of Philadelphia, numbering nearly three hundred; names of the professors and students of theological seminaries like those at Hartford, Cambridge, Rochester, and Upland; colleges and universities like Yale, Harvard, Brown, Cornell, Rochester, Washington and Lee; names of editors of leading periodicals; the boards of hundreds of missionary and other benevolent societies, not a few of these being national ones, with names of art, literary, and social clubs. Besides all these, the roll contains the signatures of hundreds of business and manufacturing firms who control capital to the amount of many millions of dollars, and who employ many thousands of operatives, all showing that not only has there been a rapid growth of sentiment among the religious and intellectual leaders of the community demanding legislation which shall end oppression of Indians and secure to them full opportunity for industrial, mental, and religious development, but that the commercial interests of our land also are fast coming to demand a just and speedy settlement of the Indian question.

Permit an expression from the association presenting to-day to your honorable body their third annual petition—an association having sixteen State committees and one in each of the larger cities, with helpers in every State, all these committees being composed of patriotic Christian women—permit these to say that into their ears and hearts comes the cry of suffering, undefended, ever-endangered Indian women and children, and that this cry is our appeal to you to secure for them legal protection; that the plea of Indian women for the sacred shield of law is the plea of the sisters, wives, and mothers of this nation for them, the plea of all womanhood, indeed, on their behalf to you as legislators and as men. Permit us also to say that in laboring by every means in our power to fill our land with a knowledge of the present condition of Indians, and of our national obligations to them, we most deeply feel that while justice demands the recognition of Indian personality before the law, thus most surely and simply, it seems to us, securing to Indians protection and fostering care, we yet feel that legislation securing this recognition will be an honor to the present Congress and to our beloved country. For this legislation we most earnestly and respectfully pray.

MARY L. BONNEY, President Indian Association.
AMELIA S. QUINTON, General Secretary Indian Association.
Mrs. A. S. QUINTON, (Chairman.)
Mrs. SENATOR HAWLEY, Connecticut,
Mrs. SPEAKER KEIFER, Ohio,
Mrs. BISHOP SIMPSON, Pennsylvania,
Mrs. WILLIAM E. DODGE, SEN., New York,
Mrs. REV. DR. GEORGE D. BOARDMAN, Pennsylvania, Petition Committee.

Mr. CASSIDY. I would like to know whether the name of Sitting Bull is on that petition? [Laughter.]

Mr. HASKELL. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, that the petition for 1882 of the Indian Treaty Keeping and Protective Association be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Petition for 1882 of the Indian Treaty Keeping and Protective Association.

To the President of the United States, and to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We the undersigned, men and women of these United States, do most respectfully but most earnestly pray our President and your honorable body:

First. To maintain all treaties with Indians with scrupulous fidelity until these compacts are modified or abrogated by the free and well-considered consent of the Indian tribes who were also parties to these treaties.

Second. That since the number of Indian children within the limits of the United States does not probably exceed sixty thousand or one-third the number of children in the public schools of some of our larger cities, and since treaties with many tribes already bind our Government to provide a teacher for every thirty Indian children among these tribes, therefore we pray that a number of common schools sufficient for the education of every child of every tribe may be provided upon their reservations, and that industrial schools also may be established among them.

Third. We pray that a title in fee-simple to at least one hundred and sixty acres of land may be granted to any Indian within the reservation occupied by his tribe when he desires to hold land in severalty, and that said land shall be inalienable for twenty years.

Fourth. We also earnestly pray for the recognition of Indian personality and rights under the law, giving to Indians the protection of the laws of the United States for their persons and property, and holding them strictly amenable to these laws; also giving them increased encouragements to industry and opportunity to trade, and securing to them full religious liberty.

Mr. HASKELL. I move those papers be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DAMAGES TO PRIVATE PROPERTY AT HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States; which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, and accompanying papers, in which he recommends that authority be given for the payment of certain damages which unexpectedly occurred to the property of private persons on the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Arkansas, in consequence of work performed under the direction of the superintendent in the performance of his duty.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

Mr. CRAVENS. Should not that be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the usual practice has been to refer such matters to the Committee on the Public Lands. That committee considers the question first, and recommends such action as may be warranted by the facts.

DEFICIENCY IN PATENT-OFFICE APPROPRIATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 16th instant, relative to the necessity for a deficiency appropriation for the payment of salaries of clerks and laborers in the Patent Office during the present fiscal year.

The subject is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

EVIDENCE IN PENSION CASES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions, in which he recommends that more adequate provision be made for the payment of the expenses of obtaining evidence of the extent of the disability of those pensioners of the United States and applicants for pension who reside in foreign countries.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

ISAAC A. SYLVESTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter, with accompanying papers, from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with accompanying papers, asking, for reasons stated by him, that Congress may be requested to make a special appropriation for the payment of the claim of Isaac A. Sylvester against the Navy Department.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from William B. Rogers, president, transmitting a report of the proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences from November 16, 1880, to the close of the year 1881; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave to withdraw papers from the files of the House was granted to Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, in the case of Isaac N. Willhite.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. CASWELL. With the intention of proceeding with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 34.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WISE.]

COLONIAL HISTORY OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution from the Virginia Historical Society, and ask its reference to the Committee on the Library, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The memorial is as follows:

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, February 14, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to communicate to you the following action of this society in a meeting held on the 10th instant:

Resolved, 1, That the Virginia Historical Society respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to publish the manuscripts bearing upon the colonial history of Virginia now belonging to the Congressional Library, and to distribute the publications among the historical societies of the several States.

Resolved, 2, That the Senators and Representatives from this State be respectfully requested to present the foregoing resolution to Congress, and to urge appropriate legislation in reference thereto.

Resolved, 3, That the several State historical societies in the Union be requested to unite in this petition to Congress, and to instigate the co-operation of their Representatives in that body toward the accomplishment of the desirable measure asked for.

I beg to remain, my dear sir, yours, faithfully,

[SEAL.] R. A. BROCK,
Corresponding Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE D. WISE,
United States House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CALKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose the first question is upon the point of order made upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.]

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] as a substitute for the amendments submitted by the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Tennessee. The Clerk will report the pending substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes, $7,245,000: Provided, That it shall not be lawful for any contractor hereafter to sublet his contract, but he shall be required to fulfill the same according to law.

Mr. CASWELL. I think the substitute clearly changes existing law, and does not in any sense retrench expenditures. It simply provides that the contractor shall in no instance sublet his contract.

Mr. BLAND. The Chair will notice that the substitute does reduce expenditures by reducing the total amount covered by the bill. It reduces it $5,000. The bill appropriates $7,250,000; the substitute $7,245,000.

Paragraph 3 of Rule XXIII provides as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This substitute does reduce the amount of money covered by the bill, and consequently it is a provision that is in order. There can be no question but what it is germane to the proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that this substitute offered by him contains two substantive propositions. One does reduce expenditures. As regards the other, it does not appear on its face that it reduces expenditures.

Mr. BLAND. My answer to that is that the substantive proposition that changes existing law will effect the proposed reduction of expenditure. The reduction of $5,000 is logically made on account of the other proposition which prevents the subletting. In other words, the logical supposition is that the amount covered by the bill can be reduced the sum of $5,000 on account of the subsequent provision which prevents subletting. That is the logical construction of the whole substitute. It stands as one proposition, that the sum shall be reduced by $5,000, and hereafter no contract shall be sublet.

Why can this sum of $5,000 be taken off? Why can the appropriation be reduced that amount? Because of the subsequent part of the proposition that hereafter no contract shall be sublet. That is the logical construction of the whole proposition, and it does reduce the amount covered by the bill, and is therefore in order if germane; and that it is germane will not be disputed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I would like to reserve another point of order, to be submitted at the proper time. I do not desire to speak to that now pending. The point of order now pending is made against the whole substitute, and I do not desire to speak in support of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order pending is to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But I desire at the proper time to make the point of order to the proposition in the substitute of the gentleman from Missouri that it is new legislation, and I desire at the proper time to be heard upon that for two minutes. If the Chair desires it, I will make the point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire anything as to that, but he will say if any point of order is to be made against the proposed substitute now would be the proper time to make it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Very well; I make it now, though I was of opinion but one point of order could be pending at a time.

The point made is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not in order under the rule, because it is a change of existing law. Now, it seems to me the point is not well taken, because the gentleman has modified his amendment so that it reduces the amount covered by the bill by $5,000. He has taken $5,000 off the amount in the bill and attached a change of legislation to that, and therefore avoids in that way the point of order as now made.

Now I propose to make this point of order, which I think cannot be avoided. I make it against the "provision" in the gentleman's amendment, that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditure. I make the point of order in that way because that is the language of the rule, and I ask the careful consideration of the Chair to it:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

That is, no provision in a bill; no provision in an amendment. The rule does not say "no amendment," but "no provision in any such bill or amendment" shall be in order, &c. That is, the rule contemplates you may take out any part of the amendment and make your point against it. That is the reasonable construction of the rule.

Now look at the gentleman's proposition. He proposes to reduce the amount in the bill, which is $7,250,000, by $5,000. If he proposed to stop there, all right. But he goes further, and to carry the change of existing law he reduces the amount for another purpose. And it is right the point of order should be made and maintained here, because the whole policy of the rule is to prevent substantive legislation upon an appropriation bill unless that substantive legislation in itself retrenches expenditure.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. In a moment. If the gentleman from Missouri only wanted to cut off $5,000 from the amount he might offer an amendment for that purpose. But he does not stop there. He follows with the word "provided." That draws the line, and surely there is no better word to introduce a provision than the word "provided."

Mr. BLAND. Let me state to the gentleman——

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to bear with me for another moment. All the gentleman is after, as it seems to me—if he says to the contrary I will hear him with pleasure—all he is really after comes after the word "provided." He is not after a reduction of $5,000. If he is, there is a simple way of getting at that, but I know that is not what he is after.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts on that point. He says the word "provided" is in the substitute.

The word "and" might as well have been there. The substance of the substitute is that a reduction is made of $5,000 and hereafter no subletting shall be had. And why can the reduction be made? It is because of the provision of the subsequent part of the substitute that no subletting can be had. The reduction might be $100,000, and the reason for that might be the provision that no subletting should hereafter be had. The word "provided" might be stricken out. The reduction by the amount of $5,000 is made; and it makes no difference whether you follow that with the words "and hereafter" or the words "provided, hereafter." The word "and" may be substituted for the word "provided." The proposition stands as a whole, the reduction not being separated from the balance of the proposition. It all stands together as a proposition to reduce the amount, and the reduction follows as a consequence of preventing the subletting. That is the logical construction of the amendment. And I may reduce the amount in the bill one or two or five thousand dollars, if that is held admissible under the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The question is, does the gentleman's proposition, that which he is really after—that change of existing law which he proposes—does that proposition save one dollar?

Mr. BLAND. That is for the gentleman and myself to construe at our own convenience. I think it will save hundreds of thousands of dollars, and will prevent the corruption throughout this Department and the public service. My opinion is that if such had been the law heretofore we never would have heard about the corruptions of Brady and the carrying of political elections by funds stolen from the Post-Office Department. I say it will not only reduce expenditures, but will save millions of money that has been used at every election from parties connected with this service. We want to break up that ring. That is the object of the amendment. It is not only in the line of retrenchment, but of reform, and is in order.

Mr. CONVERSE. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] says that this amendment is in the interest of economy and for the purpose of breaking up rings. I want to call the attention of members of this committee for one minute to that subject. What is the purpose of advertising at all in the letting of these contracts? It is to get up a competition among the bidders, so that the Government may be able to secure the performance of this service for the least possible money. Now, does anybody suppose that you can diminish the amount for which this service can be performed by excluding bidders?

Mr. BLAND. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it does not exclude a bidder in the world.

Mr. CONVERSE. It does exclude bidders when you say that no man shall bid unless he can personally perform the service; that he shall not sublet the contract or allow anybody else to do the work under the contract. Whenever you say that you exclude more than half of the bidders——

Mr. BLAND. I let in bidders who are now excluded by corruption.

Mr. CONVERSE. There are none excluded by corruption. The law provides that each route shall be advertised, that each bid upon that route shall be separately made. And if the gentleman has any constituent who wants to bid on any single route he may put in his bid in pursuance of law, the bid will be sent to the office in Washington and be there considered, and if it be the lowest bid the law requires that the contract shall be let on that lowest bid, and there is no way of avoiding it. But the gentleman by his amendment proposes to say that nobody shall bid except those in the locality who can personally perform the service.

Mr. VANCE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. Which is the most important and desirable: to have the contract made at the lowest rate and have the mail service all over the country in confusion and the mails not delivered properly, or to have the mails properly carried and delivered in the interest of the people?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly the mails should be carried in the interest of the people. But it is not true that these sublet contracts are not performed, because the Government holds the original bidder responsible and retains the original security for the performance of the contract; besides heavy fines and penalties are imposed by the law as it now stands for failure to carry the mails in pursuance of the contract.

Now, if a man obtains a contract on his lowest bid and chooses to sublet it to another party, what business is it of the Government so long as the work is done? We want to invite all bidders, those who think they can make money out of it by subletting it and those who want to do it themselves; and whoever bids the lowest for a particular contract on a particular route, let him have it.

Whenever the Government reaches the point that it proposes to exclude all bidders except those who can personally perform the service, then it will exclude more than half the bidders not only in mail contracts but in all other contracts in which the Government is interested.

Mr. MANNING. Where is the authority of the gentleman for saying that this amendment prevents the subletting of contracts?

Mr. CONVERSE. I find it in its own provisions.

Mr. MANNING. It does not prevent the subletting; it proposes to prevent the speculation. It prevents the making of contracts with parties who have not a dollar invested, and who do not give one moment of time and labor upon it.

Mr. CONVERSE. It does no such thing.

Mr. VALENTINE. I can answer that question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will answer the inquiry of the gentleman. The proposition is that if a contractor sublets his contract, then the Government shall repudiate the original contract and make another contract with the person to whom the original has been sublet.

Mr. MANNING. Not so; only where the contract has been sublet for a smaller amount.

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly, where it has been sublet for a smaller amount. But who ever heard that a contract was repudiated because it was sublet for a smaller price? You may repudiate a contract for some fault or fraud on the part of the contractor. But now you propose to repudiate a contract because somebody may make a dollar out of it. It is neither just nor honest nor economic nor constitutional nor anything else.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly.

Mr. UPSON. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UPSON. Is this debate in order upon the merits of the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate should be confined to the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio if under the law the Postmaster-General is not now authorized to annul any contract at any time?

Mr. CONVERSE. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Then where is there any vested right about it?

Mr. CONVERSE. These gentlemen propose to repudiate a contract because somebody may make a dollar out of it. Such a thing has never before been heard of. I say that the Government ought to invite all bidders, black and white, rich and poor, male and female, and whoever bids the lowest let him receive the contract and be held responsible under that contract and his bond. That is the true theory of this whole matter, and the policy which has been adopted by the Government from the beginning of the mail service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the proposition now pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] points of order have been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.] The point as made by the gentleman from Wisconsin is that the proposition changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the further point that under the rule no provision is in order upon a general appropriation bill unless the provision itself retrenches expenditures, and that where an amendment is offered containing two or more substantive propositions a point of order will lie against either of them that changes existing law and does not upon its face retrench expenditures.

Mr. WASHBURN. Can we not have that substitute reported?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be reported again before the decision is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the Chair ready to decide?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question, but is willing to hear the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to discuss not the point of order, but the merits of the proposition, if the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. Before deciding the point of order, the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes $7,245,000: Provided, That it shall not be lawful for any contractor hereafter to sublet his contract, but he shall be required to fulfill the same according to law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this is the first time, so far as he has been able to learn, that the precise point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts has been made. Points of order going to the entire amendment have been made in the last Congress and in the present during the consideration of this bill, but the precise point now raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts has never before been made under the rule since it was amended. When the Chair decided a point of order raised upon an amendment reducing the amount covered by this bill an appeal was taken from the decision, as members will recollect, upon the point that where the amount was reduced for the purpose simply of attaching to the reduction a new substantive proposition not necessarily connected with it, it was not within the purview of the rule. The Chair, upon the point as then presented, maintained the same doctrine held by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] and others when occupying the chair in Committee of the Whole in the last Congress.

The Chair now holds that a point of order against a substantive provision which upon its face has no relation to the amount which is reduced in another substantive proposition is well taken. In this case the amendment embraces two propositions. One is to reduce the amount covered by the bill. To that substantive proposition a point of order will not lie because it is within the rule. But as the second proposition—that "it shall not be lawful for any contractor hereafter to sublet his contract, but he shall be required to fulfill the same according to law"—is not a necessary part of the reduction of the amount covered by the bill, a point of order will lie against it. The Chair holds that under the rule a point of order may be made against any substantive provision not directly connected with the amount covered by the bill; and that——

Mr. BLAND. I desire to ask whether the Chair assumes that the author of this proposition necessarily had in his mind two separate propositions——

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Mr. BLAND. How can the Chair assume that the provision in regard to the subletting of contracts will not produce an economy authorizing a reduction of the amount of the bill? How can the Chair say that I had not the reduction in my mind as a necessary consequence of the provision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not assume anything in the decision of this point of order, but simply plants himself upon the proposition which has been recognized, so far as he knows, by all his predecessors in the chair, that any substantive proposition which, upon its face, reduces appropriations in any one of the three ways named in the rule as in order; and the Chair holds now and has held that where there is a proposition requiring the Postmaster-General to cancel contracts where they are being sublet for a less price, that being upon its face a reduction of expenditures, would be in order.

Mr. BLAND. With all deference to the Chair, I wish to say that unless the reduction were contemplated as the effect of the provision under consideration there could be no meaning in the reduction of the sum appropriated; without this the reduction of the amount to the extent of $5,000 would be meaningless.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appreciates the point made by the gentleman; but as the gentleman will see the second proposition that "it shall not be lawful for any contractor to sublet his contract, but he shall be required to fulfill the same according to law," does not upon its face show that public expenditures would be reduced by the adoption of the provision; and being a substantive proposition it is clearly liable under the rule to the point of order. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts upon that provision of the amendment.

Mr. UPSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does this point of order lie against the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN?]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made against the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was overruled on the day before yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to speak to the remaining portion of the paragraph?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I wish to say that I have examined the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] to the amendment which I submitted on the day before yesterday; and inasmuch as the gentleman's proposition is in perfect harmony with my amendment, I accept it as a modification. I will state, however, that it seems to me impossible for any lawyer to examine the original proposition without giving it exactly the same interpretation that it will have with the words proposed to be added upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee. In other words, under the provision which I offered the contract with the original contractor cannot be canceled until a new contract has been made; and a new contract cannot be made with a sub-contractor until the proper bond has been executed. So the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee does not either increase or diminish, but perhaps it makes it clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana states he accepts the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] as a modification of his own. The Clerk will now report his amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That whenever any contractor shall sublet his contract for the transportation of mails on any route for a less sum than he contracted to perform the service for, the Postmaster-General may declare the original contract at an end, and enter into a contract with the sub-contractor without advertisement to perform the service on the terms on which he has agreed with such original contractor to perform the same.

The CHAIRMAN. To which the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee has been added as a modification, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the sub-contractor shall enter a good and sufficient bond, and that the original contractor shall not be released from his contract until a good and sufficient bond has been made by the sub-contractor.

The CHAIRMAN. For which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] offered a substitute, of which the first clause still remains before the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word to the committee against legislation of this sort on an appropriation bill. We had a little experience the other day, when an amendment was offered to the bill striking out the clause with reference to the Saint Louis bridge; and I warn members of this committee that if we put on this bill legislation of this character which has been carefully matured in committee we are very likely to cause confusion in the postal laws of the United States.

Having said this much on that point, I desire now to be heard for a moment on the merits of the amendment, and to state one or two objections which are obvious to me. Under existing contracts, all in force at the present time, there is a provision that whenever the Government cancels a contract it forfeits to the contractor a month's pay. Will any gentleman tell me, in the event Congress imposes it upon the Department to cancel contracts made with the original contractors, this month's pay will not be forfeited under the terms of those contracts which have been entered into for carrying the mails?

Another objection to this amendment, and that objection is rather in the nature of pointing out that it will be of no effect whatever, and on this point I ask the close attention of every member of this committee. The moment this amendment is adopted the contractor will make a sub-contract with a friend, a partner of his perhaps, for a larger price, or for the same price which the Government undertook to pay him. The Department does not recognize sub-contractors under contractors, and the moment this contract has been assigned, the moment it has been sublet for a higher or for the same price, the contractor will be outside of the provisions of this proposed law.

Gentlemen may tell me they can remedy this defect here in this committee. I say, in answer to that, here, in this Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, is no place to mature provisions of a kind which may be efficient and have the effect desired. They should be kept off of appropriation bills. Provisions of this kind should be sent to the appropriate committees, there matured and brought in so as to be consistent with existing law, and where the purpose is sought to be gained which should be accomplished that purpose may be attained.

One word further in opposition; and I commend to this House the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] on this question. Any legislation adopted by this House which has the effect to limit bidding, to circumscribe bidding, yes, Mr. Chairman, which has the effect to strike down the professional bidders, is against economy, and will in my judgment cost this Government at least a million and a half to two millions of dollars. And in this connection I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication which I have received from the Postmaster-General.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. CANNON. I will now take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] in order that he may conclude his remarks.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Clerk to read the document which I have sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1882.

SIR: In compliance with your request of yesterday for information touching the number of contracts awarded by this Department to those persons commonly designated as "local" and "professional" bidders for mail service, and the percentage of sub-contracts filed, I have the honor to inform you that about 85 per cent. of the awards of contracts at each mail-letting are made to "professional" bidders, whose proposals, permit me to add, are about 20 per cent. lower in price than those of "local" bidders. Sub-contracts are filed in this Department upon about 85 per cent. of the routes awarded to "professional" contractors.

Respecting the amendment of the honorable member from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the bill (H. R. No. 3548) relative to sub-contracts, to which you directed my attention, I suggest that it might be urged, among the other objections presented in the House, that it does not prevent a contractor from subletting his contract to a partner in interest at the full contract pay, or a larger amount, and filing such sub-contract in this Department. The effect of such action by a contractor would be to exclude the person who performs mail service from the benefits of the sub-contract law, compelling him, as a carrier or employé, to look to the sub-contractor for his compensation.

The subject of sub-contracts is receiving the special attention of this Department with the view of presenting suggestions toward further legislation, in response to a recent resolution of the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully,

T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

NOTE.—About 90 per cent. of the amount appropriated is paid to the professional bidders, because nearly all the large routes are controlled by them.

H. D. LYMAN,
Acting Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from New York to indulge me a moment, and before proceeding, I would like to have the next to the last clause read again.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not wish this to be taken out of my time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it appears by this communication which I have presented from the Department professional bidding has precisely this effect: it makes competition with the lowest bidders, and the records of the Post-Office Department exhibit the startling fact that they have at least 90 per cent. of all the star routes in the United States and their bids are 20 per cent. less than those of the local bidders.

I say, Mr. Chairman, to gentlemen on this floor, that while we are entirely willing, and it may be entirely proper, that local bidders shall be fostered, it is not in the interest of economy they shall be left without this formidable competition which has the effect to pull down these rates 20 per cent. And this letter which I have presented here brings to us the assurance from the Department that we will add to the cost of the star-route service of the United States at least one million and a half of dollars if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Department is now busily engaged in formulating provisions which are deemed essential and proper to be added to the present postal laws of the country. I ask this committee, then, to wait until those provisions come in here, and when they do, we can then make such amendment as in our judgment may seem suitable.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Has the gentleman from New York any idea from his knowledge of the rules controlling this House those suggestions can become the law unless they pass in this Post-Office appropriation bill?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from New York to concede that this proposition as it now stands before the committee is only subject to objection to the extent mentioned by him, and I think the main point made by him is that under the present law the contractor who sublets his contract and whose contract is afterwards rescinded or annulled by the Department is entitled to one month's additional pay. Now, it is conceded, as I understand it, that if the contract is rescinded or annulled the contractor is entitled to one month's pay, and this he is entitled to whenever the Government cancels the contract. The present law gives the Postmaster-General discretion in this matter, to be exercised, of course, I take to be the meaning of the law, wherever the public interests are to be promoted; and, under that discretion, he is authorized to annul the old and let and accept the new contract at a lower rate, or on the basis of the contract between the old contractor and the sub-contractor.

Now, the gentleman from New York must see that inasmuch as the power now exists to annul the contract, and the power now exists to pay the contractor whose contract is canceled one month's additional pay, that the tendency of this proposition now submitted is not in any manner to diminish fair competition for these mail-route contracts; so that I cannot see, under the law as it now exists, where any variance would come in as far as the competition is concerned. And of course no Postmaster-General, it is presumed, would cancel an original contract and enter into a new contract with the sub-contractor without taking the fact into account that on a four-years contract, for instance, there would manifestly be a saving to the Government; then, and not until then, when that fact is shown that there would be a saving to the Government, would he be presumed to make a contract with the sub-contractor at the lower rate.

So, Mr. Speaker, this provision, suggested by the gentleman from New York, is a little more satisfactory than I thought, if it only tends to break up in any manner, and I hope it will, the power of the ring to which the gentleman has referred. Judging from my own section of country the effect of this body or ring of bidders at the capital is to destroy all fair and healthy competition. It discourages men from bidding, because the men who perform the service, who do the labor, who are the real responsible men, are deterred from applying for contracts because they are not able to come in competition with them. The opinion prevails among them that this ring of monopolists forms a close corporation, who have by some means or other secured absolute control of the letting of contracts through the Department. Now it is to break that up; it is to secure the contracts to the bona fide bidders, to secure to the men who do the work an opportunity to enter into contracts, to engender a fair competition among responsible parties for the performance of the work, that I advocate this proposition. It has been stated, sir, that 85 per cent. of the contracts are let to professional bidders, to straw men, as my friend from New York calls them—straw men and ring men—who are not themselves responsible for the work, while the honest bidders for the contracts are excluded.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment upon this substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from North Carolina to submit an amendment.

Mr. VALENTINE. I was taken off the floor before for an amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Nebraska has already had the floor once upon this proposition.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yielded then for an amendment before I had concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will preserve the rights of the gentleman from Nebraska. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That when a contract is declared void on account of its having been sublet the contractors shall not be entitled to one month's extra pay, as provided by the statute.

Mr. VALENTINE. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, as I understand from the reading of it, simply provides that hereafter, should this provision become a law, the Postmaster-General would not be permitted to pay, as the law now allows, one month's extra compensation to the contractor whose contract has been annulled. On Tuesday last I was addressing the committee in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] believing it to be an amendment that would result in no practical good to the Government, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] offered his amendment to the amendment, which seemed to me at that time to obviate the objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. But upon a closer examination of the two in connection with each other I am still of the opinion that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is unwise, and ought not to be adopted by this committee.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that every gentleman who spoke in favor of that amendment honestly believed it to be for the benefit of the Government and for the protection of the service. If I could agree with them in that belief I should support the proposition; but I cannot. I think all who examine this matter closer will admit that this proposition if it becomes a law does away practically with the law now in force which allows a contractor to sublet his contract. If any contractor has entered into a contract by which he could make a single dollar he would be less likely to sublet it to a contractor for a less amount, if he knew that he was liable to a forfeiture of the contract.

Now, suppose we pass this law; what effect will it have? There will be no more sub-contracting on these star routes, but the contractor who has taken the contract, say at $2,000 per annum, to carry the mail, say from A to B in the State of Nebraska, goes to one of my constituents and says, "I hire you to carry this mail," say for $1,200 per year. That, the gentleman says, would be an evasion. It would not. You cannot prevent a man who takes a contract for carrying the mail on a particular route from hiring another to carry it in his name and for him. Under the present law a sub-contractor already has the right to file his sub-contract and draw his pay directly from the Post-Office Department. They pay him. The sub-contractor is protected under the law at present.

Mr. COBB. I wish to say to the gentleman the Department does not know the sub-contractor at all. It does not communicate with him.

Mr. CASWELL. Under the law of 1878 the sub-contractor files his contract and is protected.

Mr. VALENTINE. I cannot proceed with all this confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield for interruptions?

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not. I reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] that he is certainly mistaken in his statement. Under the present law the sub-contractor files his sub-contract with the Post Office Department, or with the Sixth Auditor, I am not certain which; and he is protected to the amount of his sub-contract and they pay him directly.

Now, then, adopt this amendment and what is the effect on your constituents and mine who actually perform this work for the professional contractor? Why, sir, the contractors would simply go out and hire them to perform it. They would hire them to carry these mails and there would be no protection under the law to these constituents of yours and mine who perform the service, but they would be wholly thrown at the mercy of these professional contractors.

I would like to call attention to the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] will again be read, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina in support of the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the state of affairs in the country in regard to this subletting of contracts. I do not deny that my object is to prevent the practice of subletting the carrying of the United States mails. The very thing the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] refers to, this bidding for carrying the mails, is a speculation which has grown up, and which I think has wrought a great deal of damage in the country. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the impression has gone all over this land that a ring has grown up in and around this capital and in other parts of the country, who take the contracts for carrying the mails of the United States and never themselves personally do carry the mails. What has been the effect, sir? I have now letters from different parts of my State and from different parts of other States, complaining that the people have not received their mails, in some instances for six weeks. I know in one case, sir, two daily mails in my section of the country were bid off by men in the State of Iowa who never have seen the country where these mails have to be carried and have no interest in it. The routes were bid for as a matter of speculation. The sub-contractors grew tired and threw up the contracts and the mails were stopped.

I think it is time that this state of affairs should be put a stop to. What do gentlemen most desire? To have the mails bid off at a low price by speculators, by a ring, then to have the contracts relet and many times sublet, sometimes four or five times over, till at last a man is selected to carry the mail who is not able to do it, who is not able to provide the stock, the pay not being sufficient. I think, sir, this great Government of ours is able to pay for carrying the United States mails, and to pay a fair price for having the mails sent all over the land; and I think, sir, it is in the interest of the people and it is in the main in the interest of economy to break up this source of corruption, this business of letting the mails throughout the country. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to encourage the citizens to carry the mails and to give them a fair opportunity. They are not here in person; they have no opportunity of knowing what is done in cases where clerks may be corrupt. I do not say that they are; still it may be that the clerks may be corrupt, and may give intimations to these sub-contractors, while people in the country have not that opportunity of getting information.

I say, Mr. Chairman, the main point is to have the mail carried with speed, with safety, and with efficiency, so that the people may have their mails and may receive their newspapers. One man wrote to me lately that he hardly knew whether Congress had assembled or not, because the mails had been so long in reaching his neighborhood.

Mr. BELFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pro forma amendment is exhausted.

Mr. VALENTINE. I withdraw it.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are not now in order except in the form of a substitute.

Mr. UPSON. I desire to offer a substitute.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are already pending.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to ask the Chair whether I have the right to withdraw the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the substitute of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has already been withdrawn.

Mr. UPSON. I desire to offer a substitute repeating the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana and the amendment thereto offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, and incorporating between them what I now send to the desk; and I desire to be heard on the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] is recognized for debate, but suspends to have the substitute reported which is offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. UPSON.] The right of the gentleman from Texas to be heard is reserved.

Mr. UPSON. Let the Clerk read what I propose to insert between the amendments already pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or, if the sum agreed upon to perform said service by the sub-contractor shall be deemed inadequate compensation for the service to be rendered, the Postmaster-General may in his discretion enter into a contract, without advertisement, with the sub-contractor, or any other person, to perform said service during the term of, and at any sum less than that fixed in, said original contract.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to reserve all points of order on the substitute.

Mr. BELFORD. I will, Mr. Chairman, favor any legislation that looks to preventing an original contractor from subletting his contract. For the last five years the people of my State have endured great abuses under the law as it exists at present.

There is in this city a ring of mail contractors who seem to have the preference in regard to the transportation of the mails of this country. They secure the original contracts and, so far as the routes pertaining to the State of Colorado are concerned, they sublet them to persons in that State. Those sub-contractors can carry the mails very readily and profitably in the summer time, but during the winter, when the snows are deep, in a great many instances, they would be forced to carry the mails across the main ridges on snow-shoes; and on account of the inadequacy of the compensation they receive they often refuse to carry the mails during the winter season. The original contractors are somewhere in the East, and for weeks and weeks every winter the miners of the San Juan country and in the southern portion of my State are absolutely deprived of all mail facilities.

Now, it does our people very little good to forfeit the contract which is in the hands of the original contractor. My idea is to prohibit the whole system of subletting the carrying of the mail, and give the people who reside in Colorado an opportunity to make contracts directly with the Government of the United States for the transportation of the mails in that State, instead of having those contracts made with persons of the ring that dominates the Post-Office Department in this city.

Mr. CANNON. Have not your people now the privilege of bidding?

Mr. BELFORD. They have in a certain way, but it is a sham and a humbug, for the ring here seems to have some means of acquiring information so that they can underbid, and they do underbid, every honest bid which is put in the Department by the people who live in these Western States and Territories.

I say we are here to legislate for the benefit of the people to whom we desire to send these mails. I shall vote for any provision which will deprive these contractors of the power of withholding from the people, at least of my State, the benefits of mail facilities for which we appropriate so much money at every session of Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I cannot say in five minutes all that I desire to say to the committee on this subject, but I will ask their indulgence to suggest to their common sense and intelligence the absolute necessity of some legislation which will look in the direction at least of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] That the least thoroughly, cheap, honest, and efficient system of mail service is that attained under the law as it stands to-day I deem it no gentleman will question or deny. I need not refer to the contest had in this House during the last session of Congress, when I, as the chairman of a committee of investigation charged with looking into the conduct of the star service of the country, and those associated with me sought to point out to Congress the abuses that needed correction.

I do not undertake to say that those abuses were altogether the fault of the law. On the contrary, I believed, and those who were with me in that service believed, and the Committee on Appropriations unanimously concluded and the Congress of the United States concluded that there was a gross abuse of power on the part of the late Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

But that was not all of it. The system itself is faulty. We had in that investigation developed the fact that there was then in existence, as there is to-day, a ring of bidders, in which you might find one man holding more than five hundred star-route contracts, carrying the mails probably on not one single one of all the routes he bid off, receiving an annual income reaching a princely sum from this process of subletting contracts, failing, if you please, on one route and drawing all the profits from all the other routes.

That investigation disclosed the fact that the Post-Office Department was in the habit of recognizing on its books the sub-contractor, and yet holding him responsible in nothing for a failure to perform his contract. They would practically displace the original contractor; they do it to-day, and claim the warrant of law for it.

They displace the original contractor without accepting the sub-contractor, as in the case of John A. Walsh of this city; and when he stood on the books of that Department a defaulter upon more than one of his contracts, by reason of a failure to perform the service, he was not made responsible in the matter of dockage of pay upon any other contract.

Now, sir, this ought to be done: if Mr. Boone, for instance, who can bid off more than five hundred contracts, as he did under the late administration of Mr. Brady, shall fail upon one or more, then he should be required to surrender them all. No man should be permitted to go into this ring of thieves, for such it is proper to denominate them, take five hundred or a thousand contracts, sift out those that are profitable, forfeit the others to the prejudice of the Government, and then reap the benefits from this illiberal, unfair, and thieving process of "culling."

I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is right. This Government is able to pay a fair and just compensation for the transpottion of its mails and the performance of that service. I do not believe that it promotes either honesty or fair dealing or efficiency of service to allow a coterie of men, whose advantages neither I nor any man on this floor can know, to secure by wholesale the contract mail service of the country in sections which they have never visited, to which they never intend to go, and in the performance of a service to which they do not propose to give attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] for his kindness. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is not a matter into which politics can enter at all. I address myself to the calmest judgment of gentlemen on both sides of this House. I ask whether they are not willing to admit that there is something faulty in the existing state of things, and that some remedy is needed? It will not be denied. I believe that some measure should be devised either by the Post-Office Department or by the wisdom of Congress to put a check to a system which, though warranted in law, enables a coterie of men, with their regularly salaried attorneys and advocates here at your national capital, to bid for contracts by the hundred, if not by the thousand, to sublet them in every direction, to forfeit whichever of them may prove to be unprofitable, and yet hold to those which pay them largely, leaving the Government to bear the burden and make up the deficiency. This is not only possible, but the investigation into the star service in the last Congress proves that it is a matter of daily occurrence; it happens all the time. It is "all gain and no loss" for the contractors; it is all "loss and no gain" for the Government.

Gentlemen may say, as the gentleman from New York has said, that it will increase the expenditures for the mail service if we refuse to allow the contractor to sublet the service he contracts for. I do not believe, in the first place, that such will be the effect; but, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] suggests to me, such an effect if it happen will be of temporary duration, and the Government will be the gainer in the end.

As a general proposition, sir, that law-maker is the nearest right who seeks to make the legislation of the country honest. The system of star-route contracts as carried on to-day is not an honest system; thieves profit by it and the honest Government pays the penalty. The evils of this system should be corrected, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana does not do this let us devise a measure that will. I do not believe that any man who takes a contract from the Government to render it specific service should ever be released from that contract until its execution has been fully met.

I do not believe that the Government will be the loser by the legislation now proposed. I would rather see the mails of Kansas carried, after competitive bidding, upon due advertisement, by local contractors than to see this service pass into the hands of a stock-jobber here in the city of Washington, who never crossed the limits of that State in all his life and never purposes to do so. That this system results in individual benefit I doubt not; that it results in general disadvantage I am sure. I believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, as modified by the gentleman from Tennessee, will, in a great measure, meet the difficulties that we encounter, though I doubt whether this proposition goes far enough. I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York, seems, to me at least, to have changed his opinion since last Tuesday, when, as the RECORD shows, he seemed to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee as drifting in the right direction.

I insist that there is an absolute necessity for some limitation upon this matter of star-service contracts. This House, if it refuses to put a limitation upon it, stands committed as the advocate and defender of all the abuses that have grown up under it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] is withdrawn. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. UPSON] as a substitute.

Mr. UPSON. Mr. Chairman, I fully concur with the eloquent and very able remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] and I may not be able to add anything to what he has so well said. In explanation of my reason for offering this amendment I will say that while I approve in general the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana as well as that of the gentleman from Tennessee, I do not approve the provision requiring that the contract when let to a sub-contractor shall be let at the same price at which the sub-contractor agreed to render the service in his contract with the original contractor. I venture to say that in nine cases out of ten the sub-contractor on mail routes agrees to render the service for a less sum than he can possibly in fairness perform it. Hence my amendment allows the Postmaster-General in his discretion to enter into a contract with the sub-contractor or with any other person at a sum less than the amount of the original contract, although it may be more than the sum agreed upon between the original contractor and the sub-contractor, provided the Postmaster-General in his judgment believes that the sub-contract has been let at a sum less than that at which the service can fairly be rendered.

I favored the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] as it would have accomplished directly, without circumlocution, what the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will effect indirectly, namely, the stoppage of the corrupt system of subletting star-mail contracts.

It will partially, if not effectually, close that Pandora's box of fruitful evils which have encircled, permeated, and infested the Post-Office Department, by which the public Treasury has been plundered and the people deprived of needed, reliable, and an efficient mail service, and which have brought that branch of the Government, the Post-Office Department, into world-wide disgrace. That dangerous box is still open, giving forth its many evils to wrong and curse the people. Let us nail down and rivet its lid, spike its sides and ends, and bolt its bottom securely and lastingly by an absolute prohibition of the subletting of mail contracts.

This amendment is in the line of the bill I had the honor of introducing in the House on the 12th of January, 1880, during the Forty-sixth Congress, and which I introduced on the 19th of December, 1881, but upon which, thus far, I have been unable after repeated efforts to obtain any report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which that bill was referred. My bill referred to provides also the mode of letting, &c., of mail contracts and requires the kind of service contracted for to be specified. I will read section 2 of that bill relating to subletting, which is as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter no subletting or transfer of any contract for inland mail transportation other than by railroads and steamboats shall be permitted, and the same is hereby expressly prohibited. Whenever it shall come to the knowledge of the Postmaster-General that any mail-contractor has sublet or transferred his contract, in whole or in part, the same shall be considered as violated, and the service shall be again advertised as herein provided for; and such contractor and his securities shall be liable on their bond to the United States for any damage resulting to the United States in the premises. Any person or persons, contractor or contractors, directly or indirectly interested in any mail contract, as an original party or as original parties thereto, who shall hereafter sublet or transfer the same, in whole or in part, excepting by way of pledge or mortgage as security for actual advances in money, property, work, labor, or materials to carry out such contract, shall forfeit all rights and claims under the same, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and by imprisonment for not more than twelve months.

I would much prefer the passage of my bill than to have the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] or the amendment I am now considering ingrafted on this general appropriation bill. I believe there should be a separate and distinct statute covering this subject as well as the mode of advertising and the letting of mail contracts; but rather than run the risk of a failure to have my bill acted on, and as there seems to be a disposition at this time to pass some measure whereby the evils heretofore arising from the subletting of mail contracts may be prevented, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] with the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] whether my amendment is adopted or not, as a decided step in the right direction to remedy the evils complained of.

The conclusion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] namely:

If one is not competent to contract for more service than he can in person perform—and that is what this amendment means substantially—then we, to a very large extent, cut off competition, and the cutting off of competition increases the cost of the service, and increased cost of service means increased burdens upon the people—as well as the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] when he says the adoption of these amendments will lessen competition and increase the cost of the mail service, is clearly a non sequitur. How enlarging the ring of contractors will "cut off competition" it is difficult to comprehend. It seems to me that in the ratio the number of bidders is increased, in the same ratio competition will be increased. I believe it to be a notorious fact that the operations of the close scheming ring of favored contractors hanging around the Post-Office Department, each bidding in and securing hundreds and sometimes thousands of contracts, have deterred hundreds, aggregating thousands, of honest bidders in almost every State of the Union from bidding on mail contracts, thereby lessening the number of bidders, destroying a legitimate, active, and fair competition in the interest of economy, fair dealing, and an efficient and honest service. This ring has been, and is to-day, the terror of honest bidders throughout the country. I cannot believe that its extinction and utter annihilation will be any injury to the Government, the country, or the mail service. That Department must be rotten indeed which obtains its economical administration and success through a corrupt ring that feasts and fattens upon its awards. Destroy this ring, which depends solely for its support on the subletting of contracts, by taking away the right to sublet, and you throw wide open the door to free and fair bidding and invite wholesome competition all over the country.

Because ring contractors may contract to perform service below its value and are enabled to farm it out at a profit to themselves, but at ruinous rates to poor sub-contractors, does not justify the base system. The Government, no more than a private individual, should seek to obtain honest labor for a less sum than it is fairly worth. Why is it that a ring contractor, who has not a horse, a mule, a saddle, a harness, coach, wagon, or buck-board, or even the crack of a whip at his command, can take one, a hundred, or a thousand contracts at a less rate than the honest, competent bidder who has the means, the pluck, and hard-working industry to carry out his contract? Simply because he is enabled to take advantage of the ignorance or necessities of others, and thereby, in disregard of the intentions of the Government, and in violation of the spirit and object of his contract, is enabled to force upon the people an inefficient, unreliable, and inadequate mail service. While the ring-contractor may reap a profit, the illy-paid sub-contractor may work and toil, in sunshine and rain, with little or no return, often to his utter ruin, and the people are deprived of proper mail facilities.

The friends of the star service earnestly desire that those who have committed frauds in the Post-Office Department or in the postal service of the country should be punished and that the avenues to fraud in that service should be closed. While they heartily unite in this, they ask that the star service may be protected, and, where necessary, extended and restored. Under the outcry against this service during the administration of the late Postmaster-General that service was cut off nearly 4,000 miles, much of it greatly needed service, which it is hoped the present administration will restore. The present Postmaster-General has, so far as I know, the confidence of the country for honesty, fairness, and intelligence, and the people dependent upon the star service for their mail facilities look to him for justice, in giving them needed and efficient mail service, as well as an honest and an economical administration of his Department.

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when five minutes had expired, Mr. CULBERSON obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. UPSON, who then concluded his speech.]

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the committee now rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion of Mr. CASWELL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments be limited to thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I move to amend——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the motion. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, and pending that motion moves that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I move to make it two hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; make it one hour.

Several MEMBERS. Make it one hour.

Mr. HATCH. I will make it one hour then.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 79.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. CASWELL'S motion to limit debate to thirty-five minutes was then adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. CALKINS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes its session, and by order of the House all debate on the pending clause and amendments thereto is to be closed in thirty-five minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I have learned to have a very great respect for this House, and for its adherence to the interests of the American people. Whatever conclusion it may reach I believe will be in just deference to those interests. I am not here, in what I shall have to say, to act in furtherance of any "ring" or "rings" located at the city of Washington for carrying on the mail service. Nor am I here for the purpose of aiding one or two or a dozen men among my constituents to push this embarrassment out of the way in order that they themselves may have the opportunity of carrying the mails at higher rates than they could secure by competing with any other person or persons or corporation or "ring," or whatever else you may choose to call it. I believe we ought not to legislate for either of these classes, but for the fifty millions of people who inhabit this country. I believe we ought to legislate with a view of having the most economical and just administration of the postal service which can possibly be had.

What is the present status of the law? It submits, Mr. Chairman, the service of the United States in the carrying of these mails to competitive bidding from every quarter throughout this land, and it is a course which has been accepted as right and fair from the beginning of the Government down to the present time. Why should we not let everybody come in for the purpose of competing and reducing the cost for carrying the mails of the United States? Why should not the great American people have the public service done at the lowest possible rate?

Why, sir, we are told that for several years past we have had under the operation of our laws a "ring," as it is called, and rightly so called—and I have no apology to make in its behalf—resort had to low bidding, and then under the law as it stood prior to the last Congress the lowest bidder getting the contract at a rate which did not compensate for the service, excluding in this way a class of innocent bidders, and then by a system of expediting and multiplying the service securing large compensation. For instance, the original contract for carrying the mail from Las Vegas to Venitas was $16,000, at which rate it was impossible to carry the mail with any profit, but by multiplication of trips and expediting the service was run up to $150,000. The whole mail service was full of just this sort of thing. But that is not the service which this House provided for during the last Congress. It was then provided there should be no increase beyond 50 per cent. upon the original cost, and there should be no multiplication of trips or expediting of service without readvertisement. The Government broke loose from the old system. It then said to these gentlemen in the "ring" who had been pursuing the policy I have indicated, "Here is an end to all such service," and the Government stands to-day free from the power of any such "ring." Therefore, the abuses of which the country complained prior to the last Congress, the abuses for which certain individuals are being prosecuted to-day by the Government, are of the past.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I believe as I get more experience here I drop whatever prejudices I may have had—not that I am doing that rapidly, but I find them disappearing gradually. Among the prejudices which I entertained when I entered Congress was against talking for the benefit of the county of Buncombe, but I am entirely satisfied that was a mistake; that there is nothing better in this world than presentation of grievances, no matter whether they be reasonable or unreasonable, for there is nothing which shows the right of things like a statement for and against.

But it is one thing, Mr. Chairman, to state grievances, and another thing to provide a remedy. We must not permit ourselves to be carried away by any one-sided aspect of a case. We must not allow ourselves, because complaints are made to us by our constituents against people who are absent and far away, to carry us into a direction which may be injurious to the Government of the United States.

Now, I heard a statement made here by a member of the Committee on Appropriations which certainly astonished me, a statement that a contractor having one hundred routes could select those which paid and drop those which did not pay, and the Government was utterly powerless. Anybody who knows anything about the administration of the Post-Office Department knows the instant a contractor fails in his work on one route his pay is stopped on the others until that is made good.

It is in answer to such complaints as that we are called on to legislate. The trouble about this matter is this: we have either to open this matter to free competition or else we have to adopt some other system. I am not one of those who believe it is the duty of the Government to screw down its employés to the very lowest level. I believe there is something in efficiency of service.

Nevertheless, in a large business, extending as the Post-Office Department does over this whole country, you have got to adopt some system that will be automatic, some system that will work itself; and the system of open and free competition does it.

If any man here in Washington is willing to take a post-route cheaper than anybody else, it goes without saying that it is for the interest of the Government to accept him; and if abuses arise, in the long run they will correct themselves. I believe that the next coming trials will show whether this system to which we are referring has been subject to the abuses alleged throughout this discussion; but, if I am correctly informed, it is altogether a misstatement to say that outsiders can have access to these bids in the office. As the system is described to me, it seems to be absolutely impossible that such could be the case; and consequently in the mail lettings the routes go to the lowest bidder.

I ask the committee, Mr. Chairman, to pause before they break down this system on account of the alleged difficulties which have arisen in its administration, and establish in its stead a system the effect of which we can see in part, and which may be liable to a great many imperfections and difficulties that we cannot see. I think that unless some square system is adopted, embodying sound principles of business, we had better leave the matter to the free competition of all bidders of every class.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield for a moment, I desire to yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to enable him to finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Georgia; after which the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I am indebted to the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for his courtesy in extending time enough to enable me to conclude what I desired to say in this connection.

Now, sir, it is clear to my mind that the great body of the abuses which it is alleged now exist, and out of which the last administration had to endure so large a share of scandal, that these abuses are in a great measure removed by the legislation thereon at the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress. We cannot expect in the affairs of government an administration so exact as that which pertains to the private affairs of ordinary life. There will be always abuses. They are inseparable from any system of government. They are subjects always for criticism and for legislation; but, Mr. Chairman, let us not, in the animosities excited by just criticism, go beyond what would be reasonable and proper, and substitute something in the heat of that discussion that does not promise anything better, but which strongly points to an increase of the danger.

There is not only the law as to competitive bidding, but we have another law, meeting the abuses to which reference has been made by my friend from North Carolina. His alleged abuse is, that the contractors do not always carry the mail; that they sometimes fail. But if they do fail, what is the remedy? Does not my friend know what the remedy is? Let them be prosecuted. Let the Government prosecute them. Their liability, under the law, is clear and cannot be evaded. They are liable to $5,000 fine and an imprisonment of twelve months if they fail to carry the mails.

Do you tell me the Government does not prosecute them for failure? Why, sir, are we in that helpless and hopeless condition that the laws are not enforced, that the Government is powerless, or that it is so corrupt that it defeats their purpose? If that be the condition of affairs, I must confess that I know of no remedy by any legislation which you can propose here. But, sir, they are liable to prosecution, as I have said, and they ought to be prosecuted. And what is the remedy?

Gentlemen will say: why we have left people at home who would be perfectly willing to take the contracts and carry them into effect. What would be the situation then? Why, sir, during the last Congress we found when we were investigating this great question of the star-route service, we found that it was done uniformly by petitions sent by people living along the route, and by members of the House and Senate who pressed their consideration on the Postmaster-General. We found that throughout the whole system abuses prevailed, and that Senators and Representatives were themselves active in urging these things upon the Department.

How will it be, sir, when this is multiplied by the three hundred and twenty-five members of the next House, and with the Senate, with friends at home urging the increase of the service, and with the petitions and other documents forwarded through the agency of the mail contractors? I submit that we will all be constantly annoyed by such petitions. There will be more petitions, there will be constant applications for service, and for increase of trips and expedition, and the pressure upon the Department will be enlarged by the addition of new members to constitute the next Congress.

There is not one route in fifty of these expedited routes that has not been justified by just such methods as that. And therefore I say, sir, that the country will not be benefited in any manner by multiplying the powers that shall clamor in the Department for increase of trips and increase of compensation. Our legislation upon this subject is just as skillfully drawn and as comprehensive as we can make it; and I trust this committee will see the propriety of letting it alone.

Mr. MANNING. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MANNING. I want to ask a single question before the gentleman takes his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman may proceed.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I regret that the gentleman from Georgia opposes this amendment. I was in hopes that my friend would be on the side of genuine economy, but his economy in this respect is that of straining at the gnat and swallowing the camel. He is objecting to the slight increase of expenditures and overlooks the great fact that we are cutting down one of the greatest sources of fraud in the administration of the Post-Office Department.

The gentleman from Ohio on my left, and also the gentleman from New York, have suggested that we will have greater competition by allowing the professional bidders to come in; and the Department has sent a letter here stating that the professional bidders are 20 per cent. below the local bidders. In reference to the allowing of the contracts for furnishing supplies for the printing at the Government Printing Office, section 3770 of the Revised Statutes provides that the Joint Committee on Public Printing—

> Shall not consider any proposal which is not accompanied by satisfactory evidence that the person making it is a manufacturer or dealer in the description of paper which he proposes to furnish.

That provision requires the bidder to be one capable of furnishing the material himself; in other words, capable of doing the work. This provision of the gentleman from Indiana is of the same character. It requires the person who puts in a bid to be able to perform the work, and not to put in a speculative bid with the expectation of getting a local bidder to do the work at his own bidding.

It has been further stated that we cannot secure the necessary competition—that was the argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and others—if we cut off this professional bidder. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to cut him off, let the consequences be what they may. I will tell the committee and the gentleman from Georgia what it costs us to have the professional bidder, and then I will take the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] as to what the professional bidder saves, and putting them together, see which is to be preferred.

According to the report of the Postmaster-General, this service was increased in one year by $1,699,000 by reason of these professional bidders. Now I cannot conceive of its being increased one-tenth part of that amount by cutting off these professional bidders. The rule with these professional bidders is in the first place to buy off if they can all the local bidders, and if they do not succeed in doing that the local bidder is so harassed or surrounded by difficulties that he cannot get his bid in. But the object of the professional bidder is to bid low with the object of underbidding local bidders, and then having his service expedited, increased, or extended; and it is the very point in this business that the professional contractor comes here to Washington and gets his contracts less than any honest man can take them for. He does not expect to do the work, and he does not do the work on the contract he enters into. This report of the Postmaster-General shows that the contracts were let at ridiculously low prices, and that in many cases after only one month of service had been performed upon them they were expedited to the amount of thousands and thousands of dollars.

Mr. CASSIDY. They have friends at court to help them.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; they have friends at court, as is suggested by my friend from Nevada who lives in a region where the people suffer from these swindling contracts; and under the law the local bidder is almost prohibited from making a bid.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I have been through a contest touching abuses in this service. I recollect we had one in the last Congress that the gentleman from Kentucky spoke of. I was in that contest. Then I believed and so stated, and so state now, that we had maladministration in the Post-Office Department. Now I believe and so state that there is not maladministration in the Post-Office Department. Then the law needed amending, and we amended it so that the cost of the service could not be increased over one-half of the original contract price. After that amendment and with proper administration in the Post-Office Department, when no man can point to an abuse that is now being carried on in connection with this star service, it is wonderful to see how men rush in to correct the frauds that did exist two years ago and have been corrected. Oh, sir, I wish we could have had but one-half the power two years ago when we were making this fight that we now have when it is not needed. I say we had the fight then and we hear the talk now.

Why, sir, you cannot put any legislation upon the statute-book but what the bad action of the executive, in the event you have bad action on its part, will base upon it abuses and frauds. But what is the use now in this appropriation bill, when everything is running smoothly, when the country commends the action of the Department in connection with star routes, when the law is as it should be, when the Postmaster-General tells you in his communication that these bidders are 20 per cent. lower than the local bidders, the difference amounting to a million and a half of dollars—why under such circumstances are we called upon to rush in and, so to speak, to break a cog out of the wheel? Why are we called upon to enact legislation that will embarrass the honest administration of this Department instead of aiding and assisting it?

Nor, sir, do I think it is wise in any event, even if legislation is needed, to enact that legislation in this piecemeal way. Here is the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. Let them consider the question. Already a resolution, as the Postmaster-General tells us, has been introduced and adopted by the House directing him to overhaul this whole system and report to Congress. Before that is done we rush in in haste without understanding the law, without understanding the precedents, without knowing what will be the result of our action, to embarrass the Department. I do not think it wise.

Again, if you pass this law I undertake to say that the effect of it will be to relieve every one of the bids in the Pacific section that have just been opened, because under the law as it stands to-day they can sublet, and the bids were made in view of that law. That service under those bids is to commence on the 1st of July next. If you pass this amendment, I undertake to say that when the 1st of July comes you will not have the bids, and cannot have, under the law, the re-letting to commence on the 1st of July next. If this matter ought to be revised, let the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads fully investigate it and report to this House, instead of coming in here and turning a handspring, and crying "fraud!" "fraud!" "fraud!" when by the very provision you propose to put on the law you will embarrass the Department and beget fraud instead of cutting it off.

Mr. DAWES. While I fully agree with the remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken, [Mr. CANNON,] and while I believe that there was maladministration and there was dishonesty in this service, I believe that there is now both the disposition in the administration and the power under the law to correct the abuses.

There is, however, one feature connected with the law in reference to the subletting of contracts which to my mind presents an anomaly in law. Under the law a contractor can sublet and transfer the entire benefit and interest of his contract. No consideration whatever necessarily obtains in the transfer; it is neither in equity nor in common sense a subletting; it is an assignment without consideration. In other branches of the Government service, if I am not mistaken, an assignment of a contract is forbidden by law.

Now, what is the special reason for this exception to the general law in connection with the postal service? And what are or have been or will be its excellencies in application in the administration of the Post-Office Department that should justify its continuance? And if evils have grown and may continue to grow out of it, why not correct it?

In my own district I have seen some practical application of this system of subletting. A professional bidder obtained a route for $467 and sublet it for $467; this was less than the service is worth. The Department to-day has relieved the sub-contractor from carrying the mail six times a week in accordance with the contract, and has allowed him under the provisions of the law to perform the service by carrying the mails but three times a week. The professional bidder sublet the contract for precisely the same amount he was to receive. He made no money in the transaction. Then why did he do it? How could he afford to do it? He could afford to do it, perhaps, for a reason which I find in this fact: within twenty miles of that route this same professional bidder was allowed $3,500 under a temporary contract, not advertised, with no other bidder, as it was prior to the act of April 7, 1881. I also find that the present administration has discontinued that contract, because the compensation was exorbitant and the service was not needed.

I have no disposition to assail the present system; but the abuses which have occurred under it must be considered and must be corrected, let who will control the administration, whether the Republican or the Democratic party.

Mr. MAGINNIS. My honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] complains that when a year ago he was making war on maladministration in the Post-Office Department he did not have the support of the members from the West and South who now favor this amendment, which is intended to exclude the professional bidders from monopolizing the mail contracts and to permit our local carriers to have a chance to carry the mails. There never was a time, then or now, when western and southern members did not favor such a change as this in the laws relating to the letting of contracts for carrying the mails.

We do not favor this amendment because we distrust the present administration of the Post-Office Department. I believe that it is just and honest. And allow me to tell you here that there are no people in this country who are more concerned in and who more heartily indorse an honest and faithful administration of the Post-Office Department than the representatives of those western constituencies where the vast expanse of territory traversed is greatly disproportioned to the number of inhabitants who now occupy it. At best we know that our mail routes show a deficit in receipts as compared to expenditures, and if dishonesty prevails the deficit will be greater; but we contend that mail service should be maintained because not only our local population but the great commercial marts of the country are interested in a liberal service upon them.

But we did hold then and we still hold that reform could be made in the methods of the Department and honesty secured in the letting of mail contracts without reducing or attacking the mail service certainly not excessive and in most instances insufficient, that the dealings between the Government and its contractors could be regulated without depriving the people of the mail service which they required. Therefore we could not join in a crusade which was not so much for reform in the contract office as it was a general accusation that there was already too liberal a service in the western Territories. In the Territory I represent the reform administration found very few places where they could reduce the service, and the few reductions that they did make have proved a great inconvenience to the people. We could not join in a cry for the reduction of the service, but the late Postmaster-General had no warmer sympathizers in every effort to break down the monopolists who have prevented our home contractors from obtaining service. We did regret that it was thought necessary during the progress of that reform to attack necessary routes and to publish, as some of the New York papers did, the names of nearly every Army officer and every Senator and member from the West as having indorsed the establishment or increase of unnecessary mail routes. In my country, at least, none such were found to exist, but it was found that many new routes were necessary.

Now, if I ever desired the verification of my former statement that the jackals that follow the Federal supply trains through the extent of the land burrowed beneath this capital and made their dens within the shadows of these Departments, the very letter which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has had read in defense of his position, to the effect that 90 per cent. of these bids were let to professional bidders, would afford me all the information needed to strengthen the position I have always held in that respect.

This is the very fact, and this state of things was the very source of abuse and of corruption which polluted the administration of the Post-Office Department and brought it into disrepute.

Now, what are the objections which are urged against this amendment? First, that it will diminish competition. Sir, I hold that it will not diminish, but will rather increase competition, for when local bidders throughout the country find that they can make bids which will stand some chance of acceptance you will see that they will bid freely, and they will make their bids lower than they are made now.

Another gentleman [Mr. CANNON] tells us that if we adopt this amendment it will be practically saying that there shall be one contractor for each one of the thousands of mail-routes in the country. That gentleman will remember that in the testimony given before his committee last year the largest contractor in the United States testified that he carried the mails over every route for which he contracted, and that he had never let a sub-contract. Consequently that does away with the objection that it will be necessary to have a separate contractor for every separate route in the United States.

Another objection was made by my friend from Nebraska, [Mr. VALENTINE,] that these men would not let sub-contracts, but would do this work by agents. Well, they do that now, and one of the difficulties about the sub-contract system is this: these ring contractors let a route to a sub-contractor, that sub-contractor goes out into his country and runs a lot of debts through the country, obtains animals and vehicles from our home people, and then fails, and the contractor is not responsible for any of the debts incurred among our people. He then gets another sub-contractor to try it. That man also fails, and so on to the end of his term, greatly to the detriment of the people of the country.

These contractors who get such a number of routes bid off the contracts in different names. They have a bad route, and they cause their factotum to fail on it. He is irresponsible; his bonds generally prove worthless; the Government is forced to relet the route, and the ring contractors perform the service only on such routes, as a general thing, as are profitable to them. The number of routes that these people carry at a loss to themselves is very small I assure you. You need not be afraid of voting for this amendment for fear of letting them out of many bad contracts. They will get out of them some way. If in no other way they will get some special agent to declare the route unnecessary, and through political influence here have it discontinued. This dodge generally works well, as it is apparently in the interest of economy. I know that this has been done in my own Territory against my protest, to the great injury of numbers of people who have been left without a mail until another route could be advertised and let in some way.

There is no danger of this amendment breaking down the recent letting. If it does, it would not do much harm to have a reletting, for I understand that most of the successful bidders are of the same party that have been so loudly censured. And many other routes have fallen into the hands of new combinations which, before the contract time is out, will prove as bad as the old ones. It is not a change of individuals, not an alternation of rings that the country wants, it is a change of the system. We want a method under which rings will be unprofitable, and consequently impossible. Let us encourage the local bidders. If the Government does have to pay a little more at first it will at least pay it to the honest local mail-carrier. He will spend it in the country where he lives and carries the mail. He will carry the mail better than the non-resident contractor, because he is more amenable to public sentiment at home and to the criticism and complaint of his own neighbors. His profits will go to the general good of the community in which he lives, and will not be used, as those of the professional bidder are used, to corrupt your clerks and officials and to create perennial scandals in the contract office. I think that if we adopt this proposition, and make a discrimination in favor of local bidders, we shall take a step further on the high road to real reform in the Post-Office Department; we will do more to secure a clean administration of the service than has ever been done before by Congress. It may cost a little more at first, but in the end it will be infinitely cheaper, besides adding to the honesty, the efficiency, and the good repute of the postal Department of this Government.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman yields to me one minute that I may reply to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] who could not find language bitter enough to denounce the Senators and Members of Congress who have recommended an increase of the mail service in their districts or States. I desire to send to the Clerk's desk, to be read or printed in the RECORD, a statement showing the increase of mail service in the sixth Congressional district of Georgia, made on the recommendation of the gentleman himself during the current contract term. There are nineteen routes, and the largest post-office in the district does not pay $400 per annum. I will not occupy the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin by having this statement read, but will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The statement is as follows:

The following is a statement of the increase of mail service in the sixth Congressional district of Georgia, made on the recommendation of Hon. J. H. BLOUNT, during the current contract term:

Number of route.	Termini.	Cost per annum.
15159	Madison to Monticello	$273 00
15161	Social Circle to Monticello	36 66
15162	Monticello to Macon	434 63
15163	Monticello to Indian Springs	160 00
15165	Macon to Clinton	694 83
15167	Covington to Forsyth	600 00
15225	Buzzard Roost to Jeffersonville	895 00
15290	Wrightsville to Tennille	384 00
15292	Toomsborough to Dublin	215 00
15296	Haddock Station to Hillsborough	208 58
15297	Eatonton to Monticello	396 00
15303	Cochran to Dublin	92 82
15310	Stephensville to Cool Spring	125 00
15380	Dublin to Tennille	495 00
15381	Griswoldville to Jeffersonville	249 60
15417	Jeffersonville to Macon	595 00
15418	Cool Spring to Jeffersonville	99 50
15419	Dublin to Fortner	100 00
15426	Gordon to Big Sandy	130 00

Mr. CASWELL. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to say something on this amendment, but I find myself this morning so very unwell as to be unable to do so. I will only say (for this seems to be the main point in this discussion) that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, as modified by the incorporation of my amendment, enlarges the area of competitive bidding; and so far as you do this you purify the service. As suggested by the gentleman from Montana, [Mr. MAGINNIS,] those persons in the States and Territories who would be glad to bid are now deterred from doing so by the extraordinary success of a certain ring living here in Washington and Georgetown, members of which bid for nearly all these contracts. If this amendment should be adopted it would break up that ring. Allow me to add that this ring could not be successful if it were not for the fact that they are bound to be in collusion with certain men in the Post-Office Department. In this remark I have no allusion either to the Postmaster-General, or the First, Second, or Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the statement made by me this afternoon that these star-service contractors avail themselves of profitable contracts and relieve themselves of unprofitable contracts—a statement which I understand was controverted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]—I simply say that if he will refer to the printed report made in the last Congress by the Committee on Appropriations, charged with the investigation of this matter, he will find that the then Second Assistant Postmaster-General admitted under oath as a witness that he had in five or six cases failed to hold Mr. Walsh responsible as a defaulting contractor, because the law did not authorize him to do so, although Mr. Walsh stood that day upon the books of the Department as the accredited and recognized sub-contractor upon another route that had been raised from $13,500 per annum to something more than $130,000.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Can there be a failure on any contract without its being bid off to another person?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer the gentleman that the sworn testimony of the then Second Assistant Postmaster-General, now in print on the files of this House, shows that that was, as it is to-day, the practice of the Post-Office Department; and under the existing law it cannot be avoided.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose that any gentleman on this floor desires in the least degree to foster or protect those men known as professional bidders. But we must concede to them the same rights that other citizens enjoy. While I am ready to join hands with gentlemen here at any time to adopt, if we can, a law to check and prevent these abuses, I do protest against any effort to tack upon this appropriation bill this loose provision, which will result in an entire failure to accomplish the objects in view.

Why are these professional bidders in possession of 85 per cent. of these contracts? Because their bids are the lowest. Can we prevent their bidding in this way? No one will for a single moment pretend that we can. Their bids are lower than those of the local bidders, and we must concede to them the right to take contracts for which they are the lowest bidders; we cannot prevent it.

I have not yet heard an answer to this point, that under this amendment every one of these contracts may be immediately let to a partner or a friend for the same or a greater price, and then they are beyond the reach of the amendment; the contractor may then proceed to hire his service and put it upon the routes. [Here the hammer fell.] I ask a moment more, as I have not heretofore occupied a single minute on this question. Under this provision we would take away from the men who are now doing the service of the country the right which we gave them, under the law of 1878, to file their sub-contracts in the Department and receive their pay directly from the Government. We leave the men who actually do the service to the mercy of the original or the sub-contractor in every instance; and thus they may be cheated out of a portion of their pay.

The very evil we tried to prevent would be re-established by the adoption of the amendment, and we will find the entire service controlled by professional bidders in the hands of nominal sub-contractors who are beyond the reach of this law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. One word of explanation. The gentleman from Wisconsin, adopting the views of the Postmaster-General, suggests the sub-contractor may enter into a contract with the Department or other person at the same price for which he himself contracted to carry the mails, and thus defeat the operation of this provision entirely. I ask, therefore, to submit the following for the proposition as it now stands before the committee:

Provided, however, That whenever any contractor or sub-contractor shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route for a less sum than that for which he contracted to perform the service, the Postmaster-General may declare the original contract at an end, and enter into a contract with the last sub-contractor without advertising to perform the service on the terms at which the last sub-contractor agreed with the original contractor or former sub-contractor to perform the same: Provided, That said last sub-contractors shall enter into a good and sufficient bond, and that the original contractor shall not be released from his contract until a good and sufficient bond has been made by such last sub-contractor and accepted by the Post-Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first recurs on the amendment moved by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That when a contract is declared void on account of its having been sublet the contractor shall not be entitled to one month's extra pay as provided for by the statute.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 76.

Mr. VANCE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VANCE and Mr. CASWELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute moved by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. UPSON,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or, if the sum agreed upon to perform said service by the sub-contractor shall be deemed inadequate compensation for the service to be rendered, the Postmaster-General may in his discretion enter into a contract, without advertisement, with the sub-contractor or any other person to perform said service during the term of, and at any sum less than that fixed in, said original contract.

Mr. UPSON. That was intended as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

The CHAIRMAN. In that case it could not have been received at the time, but it is now in order as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 72.

Mr. CASWELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CASWELL and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 82.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment in the House.

Mr. CANNON. This being an amendment to the committee's bill, we are entitled to a vote on it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. You are entitled to a yea-and-nay vote if one-fifth of those present vote in favor of it.

Mr. ATKINS. I move the following amendment:

Provided further, When a contract, hereafter made, is declared void on account of its being sublet, the contractor shall not be entitled to one month's extra pay, as prescribed by law.

Mr. ATKINS. I will simply say the amendment as offered now is not liable to the same objection as when offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed.

Mr. VANCE. I intended my amendment should have the effect to apply only to future contracts and not alone to those already in existence.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 33.

So Mr. ATKINS's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MULDROW. I offer the following amendment:

Provided further, That in addition to the advertising for bids for performing service on postal star routes by the Postmaster-General now required by law, he shall also advertise the general mail lettings in each State and Territory in one newspaper in each Congressional district of each State and Territory, and by posting such advertisement at each court-house in such State or Territory where the service is to be performed, for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on that amendment, that it changes existing law, and does not decrease expenses, but, on the contrary, increases them.

Mr. MULDROW. On the contrary, it seems to me it is apparent that it decreases expenditures. In the first place, it is germane to the subject-matter, and in the next place, it does decrease expenditure, or at least that will be the result if the amendment is adopted. Why, the very object of this is to create competition. In all transactions in life competition is the means to secure the service or the thing required at the lowest rate. Wherever you have this competition you will have low bidding, and wherever you give notice, and the most extended notice, there you will have the greatest number of bids. Therefore, by inserting the advertisements in a newspaper in each Congressional district, and by posting the advertisement on each court-house door in every county in the State or Territory where the service is to be performed, it necessarily gives a much greater competition than you would otherwise secure. The result would be, instead of an increase of expenditure, a reduction in expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The law now is, as the Chair understands it, that all advertisements for this service are by posting notices upon the doors of the post-offices throughout the country, furnished by the Post-Office Department. This proposed amendment necessarily increases that expenditure by publication in newspapers throughout the district or territory where the service is to be performed. The Chair, therefore, thinks that it is obnoxious to the rule for the reason that whatever be its effect ultimately, it does not on its face retrench expenditure.

Mr. MULDROW. But the effect of it is to retrench expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. Not upon its face.

Mr. MULDROW. It secures the service at a less rate by giving a more extended notice; and under the rule the objection is obviated by the fact that the result of it is to largely reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The universal line of decision in such cases is that the proposed amendment must upon its face retrench expenditures. This does not upon its face retrench expenditures.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I hope the Chair will hear me for a moment upon the point of order. The point of order made against this proposed amendment is, that it will change existing law, and that it will increase expenditures. It is so obnoxious to the first point that I will not attempt to contest at this time, but as to the second point I hold it is not obnoxious to the point of order, because it will save expenditures. If these routes were advertised in each State, or in each Congressional district, it would do more to bring them down to a reasonable compensation for the service than anything else, in my judgment, that could be done. It would give an opportunity for the people to be informed generally, so that a man might intelligently make a bid without sending here to the Department and get this book which contains the different routes on which service is to be placed, and which is the only accessible source of information that he can have, while under the present law only a notice is advertised in the post-office, so that the majority of people have no opportunity of knowing the routes.

Mr. MULDROW. The present law requires only the publication of the advertisements by posting them up in the post-office, where nobody sees them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in sympathy with the object the gentleman desires to accomplish, but must hold that this is obnoxious to the point of order for the reason already given.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I hope before the Chair decides the point that he will hear me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This amendment, in my judgment, will effect a considerable saving. If adopted, and wider publicity was thereby given to these advertisements, it would, under the law, do more toward securing economy in that branch of the service than anything else. There would be no more expense in reletting, as this would save all the expense which is made necessary by the fact that under the present law there is necessarily little or no competition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to hold that the amendment is obnoxious to the rule. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For railway post-office car service, $1,526,000.
For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $500,000.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to line 60.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "lines," in line 60, insert "including the Mississippi River," so that it will read "for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, including the Mississippi River, $500,000."

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. What is the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. My point of order is this: that under existing law the steamboat service is let by contract——

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to another point: the clause to which this amendment would be appropriate has already been passed.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. It is not germane in the first place. In the second place, the pay for steamboat service is regulated by contract, while this looks toward another method for securing the performance of that service.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. As I understand my colleague the point of order he makes is simply that under existing law the steamboat mail service is established by contract. Now, am I to understand my colleague to say that all other mail service is not a matter of contract?

I call the attention of the committee to a very notable feature in the provisions of the statutes upon the subject, that in all cases relating to mail service by railroads the Postmaster-General may contract, but in all matters relating to steamboat service the Postmaster-General is authorized to cause service to be performed, a much more potent word than a mere contract. He has power to cause the mail to be carried on steamboats; and, Mr. Chairman, it is very natural that that section of the law should contain the word "cause," because the navigable waters—the great Mississippi—are conceded to be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of the United States.

Hence the law provides that the Postmaster-General may cause steamboats and packets to carry the mail. He may compel them to carry the mail. But he can only contract with railroads. He has no such authority over railroads and other post-roads of the United States. The law simply authorizes the Postmaster-General to contract for carrying the mails over them.

This, Mr. Chairman, is an appropriation of $500,000 for special facilities on trunk lines. Has the law anywhere defined what a trunk line is? What is a trunk line in the meaning of the law? Are not the great navigable waters of the country trunk lines? Have they not their tributaries as much as the railroads, many of them?

Then, sir, this gives a very wide discretion to the Postmaster-General to say what road is a trunk line. It does not matter what road he may select and extend his favor to in the appropriation of this money; if in his opinion, or according to his judgment, or even if we infer only from his expenditure of the money, that he considers a particular line to be a trunk line, we have no appeal from that decision.

Now, sir, I insist that the great Mississippi River should be included in this appropriation of $500,000 to be placed at the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the pending clause relates to special facilities on trunk lines of railroad.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And I beg to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the clause does not necessarily relate to railroads exclusively. It may have been so intended, but from the text of the bill it does not appear to have any special relation to railroads.

Mr. CANNON. If that be true, and if the gentleman undertakes by his amendment to make this clause apply to steamboats, then his amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I know my colleague's astuteness and assiduity in such matters, but I must beg him to be not quite so fast.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] whether there is any law now existing by which the term "trunk lines" can be made to apply to steamboats?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I was coming to that. At the fifty-ninth line of the bill there is an appropriation—

For railway post-office car service, $1,526,000.

That is for car service. The next item is that now before the committee:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $500,000.

What are trunk lines? The clause does not say railroad lines any more than river lines, but it says trunk lines. I suppose my colleague [Mr. CANNON] will not think that it relates to a subsequent clause which authorizes the Department to spend nine or ten thousand dollars for trunks.

This bill does not define what a trunk line is. Nor has the statute defined what a trunk line is; whether it is a line of railroad or a navigable river. They are simply trunk lines available for the mail service of the United States, and the term is applicable to post-roads of the United States, whether they are turnpikes, whether they are plank-roads, whether they are canals, whether they are navigable waters, or whether they are railroads. Any of these may, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, be declared trunk lines and may have the benefit of this appropriation of $500,000.

Now, sir, we ask that the great Mississippi River shall have applied to it a portion of this appropriation. We are entitled to it. And I do not think the Chair can hold that the point of order is well taken by my colleague that this relates to railroads only. This is not a clause providing for the transportation of mails upon railroads. It is wholly and entirely outside of the preceding paragraph—

For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes $10,655,000.

That has already been agreed to by the committee and that sum appropriated for that kind of post-roads. Now here comes a sum to be appropriated indefinitely; not to railroads but to trunk lines. And I propose by my amendment to say what shall constitute a trunk line in the meaning of this act, by saying that the navigable waters of the great Mississippi River shall be regarded as one of the trunk lines of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that in the popular sense in which the language is used, the term trunk lines in the pending paragraph applies simply to trunk lines of railroads, and that the amendment would not be germane to this clause. The Chair exceedingly regrets to be compelled to rule as he does, that the amendment is not germane to a clause which applies simply to the trunk lines which in the popular sense of the term are trunk lines.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. With great deference to the opinion of the Chair, I would like to ask him whether he knows of any statute confining trunk lines to railroads, to navigable waters, or to any other means of transportation?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; the Chair was simply construing the term in its popular sense.

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the words "on trunk lines," so that it will read:

For necessary and special facilities $500,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point of order is that the amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York state whether there is a law now in existence giving a right to make appropriations for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines?

Mr. SPRINGER. In answer to that question, with the permission of the gentleman from New York, I would refer the Chair to the printed report of the Postmaster-General, page 100, where, under the head "special facilities," he says:

For the year ending June 30, 1882, the amount appropriated for this item was $425,000. The reasons for the expenditure of this fund have been fully set forth in previous reports upon which appropriations have been made for this object each year since 1878.

Therefore I assume that these appropriations have been made in accordance with the existing law on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. PAGE. I do not understand any gentleman on this floor is serious in maintaining that this amendment to strike out the words "on trunk lines" is obnoxious to the point of order. I suppose this committee can limit this appropriation to trunk lines, railroads, steamboat lines, or any others. And my amendment is simply to strike out the limitation. I do not know why it should be obnoxious to the point of order. I simply propose to strike out the limitation. The committee have reported a bill which provides $500,000 for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines. Those words "on trunk lines" impose a limitation upon the expenditure of the money in a certain direction. I move to take away the limitation and leave it in the discretion of the Postmaster-General to use this money upon any line, whether a trunk line or not. It cannot be obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Ever since 1877, I think——

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] allow me to make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is on the floor.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from New York cannot take me from the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. PAGE. I want to state before I yield the floor that I shall ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who raises the point of order against my amendment, to send to the Clerk's desk and have read the provision of law which makes my amendment subject to his point of order. Unless the gentleman can find some such law, I must hold that his point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PAGE. I will, certainly.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would suggest that the gentleman move to further amend the paragraph by inserting the word "mail" between the word "special" and the word "facilities."

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. So that it will read "for necessary and special mail facilities $500,000."

Mr. PAGE. I will accept the suggestion and modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly since 1878 we have been accustomed to make appropriations in precisely the language of the clause under consideration. I read now from the appropriation for the current fiscal year:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $425,000.

As I have said, an appropriation in that very phraseology has been made in at least three annual appropriation bills. I therefore take the ground that this appropriation in this bill is authorized, because it is continuing an appropriation which has been provided for by law. Certainly no point has been made by any one against the clause in the bill, that it is repugnant to a point of order because it changes existing law.

I think it has been held on repeated occasions that an annual appropriation may be made to succeed an appropriation for a particular purpose for the current year. It comes under this phraseology of the rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for public works and such objects as are already in progress.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would inquire of the gentleman if a point of order was not made upon a preceding paragraph in this bill in relation to the Saint Louis bridge, which point was sustained by the Chair, although there was an appropriation for the same purpose in the last appropriation bill, and the friends of the appropriation contended that this was but a continuing appropriation? The gentleman from New York, I think, opposed that view and the Chair sustained him.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only reply to that, that however it may have been decided, the item appropriating $25,000 for the Saint Louis bridge service is now in this appropriation bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That is simply begging the question.

Mr. HISCOCK. One word further. If the amendment of the gentleman from California shall be adopted, we will be putting it in the power of the Post-Office Department to apply this special appropriation to any of the railroads of the United States.

Mr. PAGE. Or to any other mail-route.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, as the gentleman says, his amendment as he has modified it at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] will put it in the power of the Post-Office Department to apply this fund to every mail-route in the United States.

Mr. PAGE. That is my intention.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman says that is his intention. Now, certainly, there is no law which authorizes that; it is not in pursuance of any previous enactment of Congress, and it is extending the discretion of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. PAGE. One word in reply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] It seems to me there can be no question that the amendment I have offered is clearly in order. The gentleman has not sent to the Clerk's desk to be read any law which my amendment violates. He simply says that last year Congress appropriated $425,000 for a similar purpose. What of that? If it does not appropriate $425,000 this year for that purpose that will be no violation of law.

Now while I admit that we may put in a paragraph a limitation on the expenditure of money in a certain direction, still I claim the right of this House, without violating any provision of law, to change that direction and make it apply to an entirely different purpose.

I do not care to discuss the merits of my amendment on a point of order. When the time comes, if the Chair shall hold the amendment to be in order, I will, I think, give good reasons why the amendment should be adopted. I wait the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the point of order as made is not well taken. The appropriation for special facilities originated in this way: in the Forty-fourth Congress the two Houses were engaged in a controversy as to the method of compensating railroads. There was a feeling on the part of the Senate in favor of compensating by weight, space, and speed, it being held that the mails on certain lines of railroad ought to be carried very rapidly.

The House disagreed entirely with that view, and for several months the question was in dispute. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who had charge of the bill, was the chairman of the House conferees. The Senate finally abandoned the legislation which they had contended for, and compromised upon an appropriation of $350,000 for special facilities for that fiscal year. There was no legislation upon the subject except that provision in that appropriation bill.

At the next session of Congress there was provided $425,000 which might be used by the Department for the purpose of obtaining special facilities, and we have for four years provided in the Post-Office appropriation bill a sum of money which the Postmaster-General might use for that purpose. Without such provision he could not have used a dollar of money in that way. There is, therefore, no legislation on the subject except the provision contained each year in the annual appropriation bill.

But my friend from New York says that the amendment is relieved from the operation of the rule because we have had during several years past specific appropriations of this character, and this is in pursuance of the same object. Now, Mr. Chairman, only the other day, upon a question with reference to schools for colored people in the Chickasaw Nation, the same argument was made by the gentleman in charge of the bill—that we had been giving for three or four years appropriations for this object, and therefore such appropriations were to be fastened as a system upon the Government; but the Chair very properly ruled otherwise. So as to these appropriations for special mail facilities, Congress may or may not at any session make such an appropriation. This is not a continuing object, and therefore the argument of the gentleman from New York has no force.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the original proposition is in order I do not see why the amendment is not. The truth is that neither is authorized by existing law. The proposition of the gentleman from California is not to amend existing law. The appropriation of a given sum in this bill for special facilities is not law; it stands outside of the law; and when the gentleman from California proposes to amend that provision by striking out a given word, his proposition is in order if the provision in the bill is in order.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to ask the object of this clause. For what is this money to be expended?

Mr. BLOUNT. As the language indicates, for special facilities.

Mr. WHITE. What are those "special facilities?"

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman in charge of the bill can state in detail where this money is to be expended. I believe a part of it is for special trains running out of New York City, and for similar facilities in various places throughout the country. It is to provide extra trains, or extra speed, in order to facilitate the carrying of the mails.

Mr. WHITE. I am obliged to the gentleman for his explanation. I thought that was the object, but I did not know.

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot see, Mr. Chairman, wherein the amendment of the gentleman from California is at all out of order. I should not have said anything on the point but for the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has invoked the Chair to hold that because three or four appropriations of this sort have been made during the last three or four years, therefore it is in order forever to continue this expenditure in appropriation bills.

I am in favor of the rigid enforcement of the rule. Its operation may sometimes be embarrassing, but it is to the interest of gentlemen in charge of the legislation of this House and in the interest of the country that the rule should be strictly adhered to. As no point of order has been made upon the original proposition (although it is not authorized by law) the gentleman's amendment is in order because it proposes to change, not any existing law, but simply a clause proposed for adoption in this bill. The true course for gentlemen who desire to restrain legislation to the limitations of the law would have been to have made a point of order on this clause making appropriations for special facilities.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will not base his argument upon the assumption that the original appropriation is out of order, because that can hardly be sustained as a good point.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is no doubt thinking of his own past record on these points. He has not always been right in the past; but I am glad he has at last got upon a sound basis. The present position of the gentleman is a good one, and I stand with him.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I only wanted the gentleman to stand in a good place; that is, with me.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has not always stood in a good place; he has only lately got there.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That is the gentleman's version. He saw the matter wrongly because he was looking the other way.

Mr. BLOUNT. The difference is that the gentleman's party is in authority here now, and was not before.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this point of order the Chair would not hold that an appropriation made in a previous appropriation bill for an object not authorized by law would be such a provision of law as would justify a subsequent House in making another appropriation for the same object if a point of order were made against it. But, no point of order having been made against the clause, the provision of which is in furtherance of a rule established by previous Congresses, restricting the authority of the Postmaster-General to expend money upon trunk lines, the Chair would at present incline to the opinion that to change the rule now would be in the nature of making a new law, and would therefore be obnoxious to the rule under which we are operating.

Mr. BLOUNT. In previous cases the provision simply related to the appropriations contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. But this amendment, if adopted, would enlarge the discretion of the Postmaster-General, would make it apply not only to trunk lines but to every other line as well.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Chair sustain or overrule the point of order on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet ruled. It is a very close question upon which he is very much in doubt; and he would prefer that the clause should be passed over for the present, to be recurred to hereafter, if that is the pleasure of the committee. The Chair would prefer to have this clause passed over informally until this point of order could be more closely looked into.

Mr. PAGE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CASWELL. With the understanding that no other amendment or proposition shall be considered.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not included in the unanimous consent which the Chair asked. Is there any objection to the clause being passed over informally for the present, and that when it is again taken up no other amendment shall be in order?

Mr. PAGE. I do not agree to that, for if the Chair holds my amendment to be out of order, I then propose to move to strike out the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. There is objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Chair will now ask for unanimous consent to pass over the clause informally for the present.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That is that it is to be passed over until the subsequent paragraph has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to look up authorities bearing on the question before he decides the point of order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am asking the Chair to fix some definite time when it is again to come up so we may be prepared. Some of us may wish to look up authorities also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest then that the clause be passed over informally until the committee reaches the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That will do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask by unanimous consent this clause be passed over informally until the bill has been gone through with, when the Committee will again recur to it for such action as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. ROBESON. With all our rights reserved in reference to the clause.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to railway post-office clerks, $1,650,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I move in lines 62 and 63 to strike out $650,000 and insert in lieuthere of $800,000; so it will read:

For compensation to railway post-office clerks, $1,800,000.

Mr. Chairman, the other day I said nearly all I desired to in regard to the compensation of these hard-worked employés.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to understand whether the amendment provides for other than an increase of the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The amendment, Mr. Chairman, proposes to add to this clause for compensation of railway post-office clerks the sum of $150,000. My purpose, then, is to offer an amendment to the succeeding clause for route agents increasing the amount $300,000, making an increase in the bill of $450,000.

On this question I have consulted the general superintendent of the railway mail service, and in order to carry these employés up to the maximum of $1,200 and $1,400, respectively, it would require the sum of $585,270. I have thought it better, inasmuch as we cannot change existing law on this bill, to leave the new appointees at $900 or $1,000, with the discretion to increase to $1,150 or $1,200 a year, to which the old employés would go at once.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, there will be no objection to this increase. I am informed by the superintendent that in 1876, when this proposition for economy was made—and I speak of it in no partisan sense, for I want to keep this question out of politics and do justice to these employés—that when the appropriation was reduced he called his division superintendents together and consulted them as to how many of the employés could be spared. The reply was that with the increase of the service they could spare none but needed more.

Finally they came to this proposition, shall we discharge these men or reassign their salaries? The conclusion was to keep them all, and the result was that these hard-worked, faithful employés expecting promotion from year to year were compelled to give up their $1,150 and go back to $900; but the Government economized. And there these men stand to-day levied upon to save money for fifty millions of people.

Now, the bill agreed upon by the Committee on Appropriations increases the amount over last year $250,000, but there is a call now from the division superintendents for three hundred new men, which will take the sum of $271,000 at present salaries. That is more than the Department will have. So, you see, there is not a dollar for the relief of the present well-drilled, efficient, and faithful force. They must drudge on.

I am receiving, as we all are, daily appeals from these men. One wrote me the other night as follows:

Monthly expenses of a route agent.

Twenty days' board while on duty	$20 00
Board for family	16 00
Board for self while at home	6 00
Room rent	5 00
Wood or coal	7 00
Washing	4 00
Insurance	2 00
Total	60 00
Salary	75 00
Necessary expense	60 00
Balance	15 00

Leaving the enormous sum of fifteen dollars to buy clothing, pay doctor's bill, and incidental expenses.

There you have it, Mr. Chairman. Fifteen dollars a month after they have simply had that which divides civilization from barbarism, food and shelter. Fifteen dollars to clothe their families, educate their children, nurse their sick, and bury their dead. For all the comforts, vicissitudes, and calamities of life the modest sum of $15 per month. If these amendments are adopted they will give them only $13 additional per month on the average. I hope this House will vote that for them without a grudge.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin and now before the committee, it simply contemplates to increase the amount provided for in the law. I do not understand that he has offered any amendment to change the compensation that may be paid to the mail-route messengers and local agents, and therefore to the argument he has made for this amendment I make no reply.

I have therefore only this to say in reference to the amendment pending before the committee, that we have given the full amount estimated for by the Department; and I hardly think that the committee is justified in increasing an appropriation when that increase is not asked for by the head of the Department that has charge of the disbursement of the money.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him, to say that this increase is not only approved by the Department, though they have a pride, I think a mistaken one in this instance, in keeping within the line of economy, and I think gentlemen at the head of the Department are in accord with this increase and believe it to be just.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is this difficulty about the matter, which I will call the attention of the committee to: I receive, as the gentleman from Wisconsin does, and as other gentlemen doubtless receive, numerous letters complaining of the amount of compensation of these employés of the Government; but where I receive one letter complaining of undue compensation for this service, I receive twenty asking an appointment to the service at the present compensation.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from New York allow me? They reply, That is so; but they can get Congressmen cheap, men without a dollar's salary, to serve in this House. The only question is, what is a fair compensation for the service?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not know that the question of the gentleman calls for any response.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I hope not.

Mr. HISCOCK. When Congressmen go to this Department and demand the appointment of these postal clerks and route agents they are met with the response, Give us more money and we will employ them; but when the head of the Department sends in an estimate here and gets every dollar he asks, I ask if it is proper or wise in us to go beyond that, and extend the appropriation and enlarge the amount given for this purpose, upon the loose talk of the men at the head of the bureau in reply to these applications for places? I say I think it is uncalled for, and it is not vouched for by the man at the head of the Department, who is responsible to the people for the expenditure of the money. There is not a single member of the Committee on Appropriations who would not have been willing to give every dollar the Postmaster-General estimated for this service, and what I protest against is providing more money than the responsible head of the Department asks for.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been trying to get the floor to make a point of order upon the amendment. Is it not subject to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late now to make a point of order against it, inasmuch as the discussion has proceeded for ten minutes without objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been trying to get the floor for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as making the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. As soon as I saw the nature of the amendment I endeavored to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Illinois as having pressed the point of order. It is now too late, unless the gentleman insists that he was unable to make it although pressing the point.

Mr. ATKINS. It is not liable to the point of order in my judgment anyhow.

Mr. BRIGGS. I hope the distinguished gentleman from Illinois will be permitted to take the floor. He does not very often have the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have not consumed any of the time of the committee since this bill has been before it for consideration, and although many days have elapsed, and although this bill is more immediately interesting to my constituents than any other, I have refrained from occupying any time of the committee upon it.

I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is right, wholly right, eminently right, and I hope the committee will adopt it. I am satisfied that there are no persons in the service of the Government who better and more faithfully earn their money than the men employed in this postal service and who run upon the cars, whether as postal clerks or as route agents.

There is in my own district and lapping over a little into Dakota a run of three hundred and forty miles. The agent starts at four o'clock in the morning, lands at Flandreau in Dakota Territory at ten minutes before twelve, stops twenty minutes, turns around and goes back to La Crosse, making a run of six hundred and eighty miles without rest. I wish to say that for the last five, six, eight, or ten years there has been an increase upon the demands of this class of service wholly out of character with the pay received, as well as ruinous to the health and lives of the men employed in the service. I have had sufficient experience in the House to know that there has been gradually brought about in the reductions that have been from time to time made here a vast increase in the severity of the service to which these men are subjected. I remember that eight or nine years ago I was informed in the Post-Office Department that ninety miles a day were considered all that a route agent ought to run, and that ninety miles were all that could be run without damage to the health of the man. Now there is hardly a route agent or postal clerk who does not run twice that number of miles each day. I have got so, Mr. Chairman, that I begin to hate the word economy. I really dislike the sound of that word. I have heard it talked about here so much, and thrown out so many times in almost every debate upon this floor, that I have come to dislike the word as commonly used in public legislation.

We need a just distribution of public money. What is required, let us give. What is wanted, let us vote. Let us not carry the idea of economy away beyond the verge of just and fair treatment of the men who serve the Government. We are not poverty-stricken as a people. We have not an empty Treasury. We are not in want, and I do hope and pray that the present Republican Committee on Appropriations will not try to cope with their predecessors in the line of "retrenchment and reform."

Mr. WHITE. I offer what I send to the desk as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment pending to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman from Minnesota withdraw that amendment?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending amendment the following:

"Provided, however, That in future the general superintendent of the United States railway mail service shall not appoint at his pleasure any such clerks from Ohio, Indiana, Alabama, Mississippi, or Tennessee, nor his friends from Washington City, to perform service in the State of Kentucky so long as there are of the 106,000 Republicans, 12,000 Greenbackers, and 17 Independents residing in that grand old Whig State suitable persons who are willing to perform the duties imposed by law."

Mr. CASWELL. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WHITE. I simply desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the State of Kentucky would feel more interest in these gentlemen receiving just compensation if some of them lived in that State.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word.

This is not a proposition to increase the salaries of these clerks in the postal service. If my friend from Wisconsin had had an amendment that fitted his speech, then we would have had something else to consider. This is simply a proposition to give $150,000 more than is estimated.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois ought to know that the statute fixes the salaries, and this is an appropriation of money to pay them.

Mr. CANNON. But the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin is one thing and his amendment is another.

Now, in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] who stated he was tired of this word "economy" as it had grown to be used, I must say that in my opinion it is a misused word, or has been so in the past. But, Mr. Chairman, when the Republican side of this House, with a Republican administration, through its Republican Committee on Appropriations recommends in an appropriation bill every dollar that was estimated for, which is $345,000 more than was appropriated for the current year for this class of service, then I am for that kind of economy; and I say very frankly that I am not for the economy that the gentleman speaks of, that would dump $150,000 more than is asked for or estimated, when we are far ahead of what the current year carries, and when in my opinion as the service is now running we are recommending sufficient for the service of the coming year.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to oppose the amendment, and wish to say I have very great confidence indeed in the statements of the gentleman who has just taken his seat; but if there is any principle of the Republican party that is greater than the principle of economy it is the principle of justice. I know perfectly well that in my State the men in this service are worked harder, worked longer, and paid poorer than any men that I know of in the United States service.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Kansas will understand I was not speaking of that matter at all.

Mr. ANDERSON. The committee say they have given what was estimated. But estimated by whom? By the late Postmaster-General.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. Is there any thing from the present Postmaster-General revising that estimate?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know whether there is or is not, and I do not care. I simply know this—that the gentleman who has charge of this service, the chief of that bureau, and who knows something about the details of the work, recommended far more than the committee bring in; and for one I am willing to vote the appropriation up to the point recommended, as a matter of justice, to enable the Department to meet the growing interests in the West, such as gentlemen in the East cannot realize. In my own district, where the railroad system is being rapidly extended, when we ask for postal facilities we cannot get them. And why? Simply because the Department has not the money.

Now, I will go as far as any Republican or any other man in what is fair and economical; but I want it distinctly understood as far as I am concerned, I wish to see justice done to these men, and I wish furthermore to see justice done to the people who are benefited by your railroad service.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman allow me before he takes his seat to ask him whether it is not a fact that the superintendent of the railway mail service now adjusts some of these clerks up and adjusts others down at his pleasure?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know that to be a fact, and I doubt it very much.

Mr. WHITE. And whether the same injustice would not be done if this additional amount were appropriated?

Mr. ANDERSON. I never heard that charge made before.

Mr. HISCOCK. A great deal has been said here about Mr. Thompson, the superintendent of the railway mail service. If that gentleman has ever made an estimate in excess of the appropriation which we are now considering, I have never seen it; and I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to that fact.

Mr. ANDERSON. What does the gentleman from New York say?

Mr. HISCOCK. I say if Mr. Thompson, the superintendent of the railway mail service, has ever made an estimate in excess of the amount which we have put in this bill, I have never seen it. We have here in the report of the Postmaster-General the estimates made by Mr. Thompson, which are the basis of our bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I hold in my hand estimates made by Mr. Thompson, which I propose to put in the RECORD.

Mr. HISCOCK. How shall this committee make appropriations upon estimates which have never been submitted to Congress, but which have been referred to individual members and carried around in their pockets? Are we invited to any such feast as that under the cry which may be set up against the word "economy?"

Now, I desire to say further in reference to this that in the urgent deficiency bill which we passed a few days ago, as the bill was reported to the House, was a provision that cut down the estimates of the superintendent of the railway mail service. He came to your committee and we revised the item so as to increase the appropriation according to his estimate, and that estimate also was in accordance with his recommendation for the next fiscal year. In no conversation that I have had with him has he urged that a larger sum of money should be appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Has he stated to the Committee on Appropriations that he proposed to raise the salary of any person employed to the amount of one dollar?

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand the practice, it is to adjust the salary of the clerks according to the service they perform and the value of that service. And as I remember it, the appropriation for the current fiscal year was too large for the lowest class of clerks, and we transferred a part of the appropriation for the lowest class of clerks or agents to those of a higher grade.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HASKELL. Probably the difficulty with the estimate and the difficulty that some members here are laboring under is owing to a misapprehension as to the manner in which the compensation of these men has been fixed.

The superintendent of the railway mail service, Mr. Thompson, has estimated for an increase over the amount appropriated by the bill last year for route agents; but that is an estimate for an increased number of agents on account of new railroads and new routes.

Now what are the facts in regard to this matter? Until the Democratic party came into power in this House the route agents were paid under a provision of law which provided that they should not receive in excess of $1,000 a year.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HASKELL. The law providing for route agents is that they should not be paid in excess of $1,000 a year each. The very first appropriation bill which that party brought before Congress was so small and so meager compared with the enormous rate of increase of business throughout the West that one of two things had to be done: either the new railroads without postal service had to be left without that service, or the pay of the employés had to be reduced below what was contemplated by law. In order to keep the service going the pay of the employés was reduced in some instances from $960 to $900 per annum, and in other instances from $1,000 to $900 per annum, and on that reduction it has stood ever since.

There has never been a time when the chief of the railway mail service has not asked an appropriation sufficient to pay these route agents the full amount allowed them by law. It is said they can be promoted if they show a good record for ability. These employés cannot be promoted on a route-agent route. Only on the railway post-office lines is there any promotion. But on the great bulk of the railway-service lines the work is performed by route agents, and there is no promotion for them. I have agents in my district running two hundred and sixty miles on a trip without rest, and yet you pay them $900 a year, while they do more work than nine out of ten of your railway post-office clerks. But you pay the railway post-office clerks from $1,200 to $1,400 a year, and you pay these route agents only $900 a year. You pay the railway post-office clerks all they are allowed by law to receive, and you refuse to pay these route agents the amount allowed them by law. This amendment will give the route agents what the law allows them to receive.

Mr. HISCOCK. This amendment does no such thing. The only effect of the amendment is to authorize the employment of more persons.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Certainly not.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does not have the effect of increasing their compensation.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The amendment which I propose will increase their compensation; but the $250,000 the committee gives is to employ three hundred new employés.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 88.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, and Mr. CASWELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 77, noes 101.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to amend line 62 by striking out the word "post-office" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mail service;" so that it will read "railway mail service clerks." And I desire to amend the three succeeding clauses by striking out "route agents," "mail-route messengers," and "local agents," and inserting "railway mail service clerks."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment suggested by the gentleman to the pending clause is now in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] if he will accept my amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. My impression is that the Committee on Appropriations will consent to the amendment, but I desire to further consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 62 strike out "post-office" and insert "mail service;" so that the clause will read:

"For compensation to railway mail-service clerks, $1,650,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not wish the one amendment adopted unless all are adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. This clause alone is under consideration.

Mr. HISCOCK. I trust the committee will consent to consider all together. As I understand it it is merely a change in the title of these employés which the Post-Office Department desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to having the amendments made to the several clauses as suggested?

Mr. WILLITS. Are not these names in the law now?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to agreeing to the amendments in the several clauses as suggested?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not ask that the amendments be now made, but I ask consent that they be considered in all the clauses together so that we can see how they would read if amended as proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The clauses will be read as proposed to be amended.

The clauses as proposed to be amended were then read.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that these amendments may be considered together. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask the chairman of the Post-Office Committee [Mr. BINGHAM] whether he does not desire to have these clerks classified in this bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, sir; we do not ask that at all. I will state, in connection with the amendment, that such a provision has been asked for by the Post-Office Department for the past four years. In the last report the general superintendent of railway service says:

I would therefore renew the recommendation made by my immediate predecessor in his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, and repeated by myself in the reports for 1879 and 1880, that the appropriation for the payment of the railway mail service clerks for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, be made in gross for the sum of $3,480,000.

That the Commmittee on Appropriations has reported.

And that it be enacted that hereafter the railway mail service clerks be divided into five classes.

To carry out the proposed classification the Post-Office Committee will report a bill. We now simply ask that in this bill the House include under the one designation these several classes: railway post-office clerks, route agents, local agents, and mail-route messengers. These amendments make no increase at all in the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the gentleman wishes to have the language of this bill conform to a law hereafter to be passed. I suggest to him that it will be time enough to change the language of our appropriations when the law has been changed. The gentleman proposes to strike out the words "route agents" "mail-route messengers," &c., and to put in the words "railway mail service clerks." Such an amendment, I undertake to say, would leave the service as it now stands without an appropriation.

Mr. ATKINS. Allow me to ask whether this amendment would not involve an increase of pay?

Mr. CANNON. It would certainly make an appropriation for a class of officers that have no existence under the law, and would fail to appropriate for the classes of officers that do exist.

Mr. WILLITS. Let me read the statute. Section 4024 provides that "the Postmaster-General may employ as many route agents as may be necessary." "Route agents" is the title under the law. Then section 4025 provides that "the Postmaster-General may appoint clerks for the purpose of assorting and distributing the mail in railway post-offices." I concur in the remark of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] that by adopting these amendments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania we would make an appropriation for a class of officers that does not exist.

Mr. BINGHAM. The designation "mail-route messengers" has no existence in the Revised Statutes at all. It is simply taken from an appropriation bill. The same remark applies to the expression "local agents," &c.

Mr. CASWELL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] will withdraw the amendments.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; upon the request of the gentleman in charge of the bill I withdraw these several amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

For route agents ,$1,375,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the clause by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "six;" so that it will read, "for route agents, $1,675,000."

Now, Mr. Chairman, whether the Committee of the Whole shall decide to vote this amount or not, I desire that members shall see just how the matter stands. The superintendent of the railway mail service had no idea of going past his superior. Nobody had any idea of carrying around surreptitiously statements in his pocket. This amendment raises the appropriation for compensation of route agents

$300,000, and both amendments would have amounted to $450,000. Recognizing this as a large amount of money, I desired to be prepared to state to the committee just what the increase consisted in, and sought the superintendent's statement, not in the form of an official recommendation, but to insure accuracy of statement and to avoid any possible extravagance in the amount voted. And as I have his permission to use it in this form I will read both tables, the one applying to the preceding clause as well as to this one; which are as follows:

Railway postal clerks.

Salary.	Men.	Increase per man.	Total increase.
$1,300	457	$100, to raise to $1,400	$45,700
1,150	487	50, to raise to 1,200	24,350
1,000	165	200, to raise to 1,200	33,000
900	227	300, to raise to 1,200	68,100
		Total	171,150
		ROUTE AGENTS.
1,000	136	200, to raise to 1,200	27,200
980	3	220, to raise to 1,200	660
960	8	240, to raise to 1,200	1,920
940	53	260, to raise to 1,200	13,780
920	27	280, to raise to 1,200	7,560
900	1,210	300, to raise to 1,200	363,000
		Total	414,120

Thus it will be seen that to raise the salaries of the postal clerks to $1,200 and $1,400 it would take $171,150. And to raise the route agents to the maximum of $1,200 would require $414,120, or $585,270 in all. To be on the safe side I put the former at $150,000 and the latter at $300, or $135,270 less than the superintendent's estimate.

One gentleman asks, why not change the law? I say why does not the Post-Office Committee report a change of the law? We cannot change the law on this bill; such a proposition would be ruled out of order. But here are men engaged day and night in dangerous, dirty and exhausting labor, who by no manner of economy can save over $15 a month, and to do that they and their families would soon go naked. They can supply their families with the necessaries of life but any of its comforts beyond the narrowest range are out of the question, and when we propose to give them a small increase of pay, which makes the difference between actual want and comfort, we are asked, is not this prodigality? My God! if this be prodigality what shall be the name of parsimony? Pay these men a fair price. Is not the Government able to do that? Are not the people willing it should be done? Is not everybody in favor of just and fair dealing, and are not all interested? Do not the people want their letters promptly? What is the effect to the business man if a valuable package is overlooked or mislaid? Yet there are hundreds and thousands of these passing daily through these men's hands.

My friend, the chairman of the committee, [Mr. HISCOCK,] cited twelve star routes, where the service had been discontinued at a saving of some $380,000.

Now let us stop the luxury of star-route business awhile and give these faithful, intelligent employés their just and honest dues. The amount saved will almost do it. There is no danger here. The money will not be stolen. It will not be squandered. It pays current every day expenses. It goes among the people. It is right. Mr. Chairman, it is just. No Washington "ring" will be formed by this money. No colossal fortune will rear its head here to corrupt or intimidate. No lobby will fatten or fester on this appropriation. The boys can neither dine nor wine you, but they can serve you faithfully and well and willingly. This money goes to men who breast the storm and work through the night if need be, though jostled at every turn and nearly choaked with coal-dust and cinders. They are not here lobbying. They are there laboring. Several of them have been burned to death. You propose to pension them or their wives and children. Very well! But do not mock them with propositions to pension them in death, while you withhold from them their honest dues in life. I beg the committee to consider. I do not wish to lecture the committee if I could; this is their matter rather than mine. It is said that the Committee on Appropriations have allowed $250,000, but the answer to that again is that the three hundred new men needed will absorb it all and more too, and not a dollar can go to the relief of the old employés. These men are never heard here. The letter-carriers are, and I am glad of it. But why not these as well as those. I ask that they be heard, for this is what they say, and I adopt it as a part of my remarks:

Petition to the Congress of the United States by the employés of the United States mail service for readjustment of salaries.

Whereas on the 1st day of August, 1876, by general order the salaries of all head clerks were reduced from $1,400 to 1,300 per annum, and the salaries of all second clerks were reduced from $1,200 to $1,150 per annum.

Whereas on the 1st day of May, 1881, by a general order there were four grades of railway post-office clerks created, known as head clerks, with salaries of $1,300; second clerks, with salaries of $1,150; third clerks, with salaries of $1,000; and fourth clerks, with salaries of $900 per annum.

That under this regulation clerks are called upon to stand side by side for the same number of hours and perform the same kind of duty, with a difference in their salaries varying from $150 to $250 per annum, causing unkindly feeling, and tending to destroy the efficiency of the service.

We call your attention to the fact that there has been no reduction under the late order of the salaries of clerks on any light line where the work can be performed by two clerks, but that this last reduction falls upon all heavy lines where the work is the most severe.

That on account of the rapid increase in the quantity of mail to be distributed on the cars, and the greater number of separations to be made in each State, it has become necessary to put night service on nearly all railway post-office routes. This causes many clerks to work all night. All heavy railway post-office lines either run on the Sabbath day, or work in yards. Each clerk on such lines performs twenty-six days' more service than formerly.

This reduction falls upon those least able to bear it, by reason of the fact that all employés so reduced are compelled to pay a goodly portion of their salaries for maintenance while away from home on the road. That during storms we are called upon for extra duty, which greatly increases said expense.

We are called upon for more rigid examinations than at any other time since the establishment of the service, postal clerks being called upon to commit to memory from four to six States. These examinations have of late taken a great portion of the time heretofore allowed us for rest and recreation to fit us for our severe mental and physical duty on the cars.

That all clerks so reduced have the extra-hazardous task of performing their labor on the cars, thus putting in peril life and limbs. The numerous railroad accidents demonstrate that this is no small risk.

That the hours of actual duty on the cars have been greatly increased on nearly all railway post-office lines. Considering our hours of duty, and the risk of life, the employés in the railway mail service are the poorest paid of any branch of the Government service.

We call your attention to the rapid advance in the price of nearly all articles of food, clothing, also of house rents and fuel. In view of the foregoing facts, we humbly, but most earnestly petition your honorable body to re-establish the former salaries of employés in this important branch of the Government service, namely, $1,400 per annum for head clerks, and a uniform salary of $1,200 per annum for all second clerks who shall have passed the necessary examinations. That in the case of new appointments to the regular Post-Office service, or transfers of route agents to the regular Post-Office service, said clerks shall receive not less than $1,000 for the first year. That if said clerks shall have passed the necessary examinations, they shall, after the first year, receive not less than $1,200 per annum.

We submit to your honorable body this our humble petition, trusting that it will meet with your approval, and that action will be taken at once.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in time to make a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not know before what it was.

Mr. WILLITS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not involve any change of law whatever, as I understand it. The law as it stands is as follows:

SEC. 4024. The Postmaster-General may employ as many route agents as may be necessary for the prompt and safe transportation of the mail, each of whom shall be paid, out of the appropriation for transportation of the mail, a salary at the rate of not less than $900 nor more than $1,200 a year each.

According to the table read by the gentleman from Wisconsin, nearly all these route agents are paid a sum not exceeding $900 or $1,000 a year. If you make an additional appropriation of money, the superintendent may appoint (we will say) five hundred at $900, five hundred at $1,000, and grade them up to $1,200 a year.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I ought to say a single word in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin. He certainly misunderstood me if he says or intimates I charged he carried around in his pockets any communication he had received from the Department surreptitiously. I did not intend to make any such charge, and am quite sure I did not.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. We can have no difficulty about that.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point I was trying to impress upon this committee, and especially upon those who are on this side, was this: that when we have given——

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announcing the passage of joint resolution (S. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue rations for the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River, in which concurrence was requested.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point I was trying, Mr. Chairman, to impress upon the committee, and especially this side, was that when we have given every dollar the superintendent of the railway mail service has recommended to Congress, when our party friends and a man for whom we are responsible, when we have given all the Postmaster-General is willing to recommend to Congress, a Republican and in sympathy with this side, we have gone far enough. And the words charging the Committee on Appropriations with parsimony, in my judgment, are ill-timed. If we stand back of the Department that we are responsible for, we have gone far enough. And I think I am justified in appealing to gentlemen on this side of the committee not to allow themselves by the impassioned eloquence of the gentleman from Wisconsin to be carried beyond the line of propriety and far ahead of where the Postmaster-General has asked us to go.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 63, noes 83.

So the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For local agents, $175,000.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to add the following:

Six hundred dollars of which shall be paid to an assistant transfer agent at Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that changes existing law. There is no law providing for such an office.

Mr. DIBRELL. It does not create a new office, but only directs how the money shall be expended; nor does it increase this appropriation. The transfer agent at Chattanooga works from six o'clock in the morning till twelve at night, and he should have this assistant.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a change of law and increases the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is obnoxious to the rule and is not in order.

Mr. GUNTER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HISCOCK. We can in a little while get through with what remains of the bill except the clause reserved, and I hope we will do it.

Mr. GUNTER. A joint resolution has passed the Senate giving relief to our citizens who are suffering from overflow of the Mississippi, and I wish to get into the House to take it up and pass it.

The committee refused to rise.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail locks and keys, $25,000.

Mr. VANCE. I move to add as follows:

For supplying the smaller post-offices of the United States not already furnished with letter-balances or scales for weighing mail matter, the sum of $20,000.

Mr. CASWELL. I make the point of order upon that amendment, but am willing to hear the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. CASWELL. Very well.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, there are 10,000 post-offices in the United States not supplied with balances and scales for weighing postal matter. I have a letter here from the Postmaster-General, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, in reference to this matter, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. CASWELL. I hope the gentleman will allow it to be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. VANCE. Very well. I have no objection to that. I wish to say, sir, that the law requires the postmasters to be absolutely accurate in reference to the charges for postage; but especially on registered letter packages, and if a less charge is made on such matter than the law requires, the postmaster is responsible for the deficiency; and postmasters are required in their settlements with the Department to forward the amounts of such undercharge. Major Rhodes reported, as will be seen in the report of the Postmaster-General, that there were over two hundred dollars a month collected from small offices in that way. I think it unjust, sir, that these men should be required to pay out for what they have no means of remedying, because they are not allowed these scales and have no means of ascertaining the proper weight. This is a simple act of justice. Those postmasters throughout the country who are able to pay for scales have them furnished to them, while those who are not able to purchase have been heretofore refused by the Post-Office Department.

The Postmaster-General says the scales ought to be furnished, Major Rhodes, in charge of that part of the Department which supplies blanks, says that they ought to be furnished, and I hope there will be no objection to this amendment. I will incorporate the letter to which I have referred with my remarks.

The letter is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the report of the superintendent of the blank agency upon the operations of his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, found upon pages 461–463 inclusive of the report of the Postmaster-General for 1881.

It will be seen from this report that at least 10,000 of the smaller offices of the United States are unsupplied with letter-balances or scales, and are therefore unable to accurately rate the postage upon matter mailed at their offices.

In consequence of this inability to properly rate up the postage, registered matter is sent from their offices without full prepayment as required by law and regulations; and when cases of this kind are reported to the Department, the postmaster is required to remit the deficiency of postage in uncanceled postage-stamps to the Department.

The amount thus collected is estimated at $200 a month, which, besides the cost of collecting, may be considered an unpleasant penalty against postmasters who execute their offices according to the supplies furnished by the Department, greatly more to the accommodation of the public than to their own private advantage.

It seems no more than just that where the postal business at any locality is sufficient to warrant the establishment of a post-office the Department should assume the expense of supplying the postmaster with the necessary supplies to properly conduct the business of his office.

I therefore recommend that an addition of $20,000 be made to the present appropriation of $15,000, making a total of $35,000, for the purchase of letter-balances and scales for the next fiscal year.

It is believed that with this additional appropriation the Department will be able to supply these postmasters, who have not received them, with letter-balances for the purpose of properly rating matter mailed at their offices.

Very respectfully,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CASWELL. I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail-bags and mail-catchers, $200,000; of which sum $9,000 may be used for the purchase of packing-trunks for the transportation of registered letters.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last clause which has been read; that portion of line 73 which relates to packing-trunks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 73, after the word "dollars" where it occurs the first time, the words "of which sum $9,000 may be used for the purchase of packing-trunks for the transportation of registered letters."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am not able to comprehend exactly the object of this appropriation. I do not understand it; perhaps the honorable chairman of the committee may explain it to me and show why this is necessary. For myself, I cannot understand why trunks for the transportation of registered letters should be provided, and not for the transportation of other letters. Why they are not as safe (these registered letters) in the ordinary bags that are provided for the transportation of the mail generally as other mail matter is something that I am unable to see.

Mr. CASWELL. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois I will say that this is for through registered packages, so that they may not be overhauled or rereceipted for while in transit. The Postmaster-General has asked for it, and I see no reason for not granting it. It is certainly a measure of safety in the transportation of registered packages.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out the clause just read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of adhesive postage-stamps, of official stamps, and of newspaper and periodical stamps, $109,400.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman will allow the committee to rise.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let us get through with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 79 by striking out the words "all official stamps," and line 80 by striking out the words "four hundred," and inserting at the end of line 80 the following:

"And hereafter no official stamps shall be manufactured or supplied to any of the Departments, or to any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transacted in penalty envelopes."

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to reserve the point of order on that amendment; and if the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me, I will move that the committee now rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association; and

An act (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

RELIEF FOR SUFFERERS BY RECENT OVERFLOWS OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution (S. No. 41) for the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue rations for the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HAZELTON. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, of which sum so much as is necessary shall be used by the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to aid in the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries; and he is authorized to co-operate with the authorities in the several States of which such district is a part in making distribution of the same.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. KING moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to introduce a bill for reference.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House now take a recess.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, if the motion for a recess shall now prevail, the House will again meet at half past seven o'clock.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the order of business for this evening?

The SPEAKER. The order for this evening would be the consideration of the District code, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is all right.

The question being taken on Mr. NEAL's motion, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] will take the chair at the evening session as Speaker pro tempore.

The result of the vote was then announced; and accordingly (at five o'clock and three minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. CAMP in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

DISTRICT MUNICIPAL CODE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By special order of the House the only business to be transacted this evening is the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1295) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, beginning with chapter 3, "the listing of personal property." The following section was read:

SEC. 150. When any person shall have been prevented from making or verifying the inventory of property for taxation above provided for, by sickness or absence, and the assessor shall have made a statement for him, he may, at any time before the assessment of taxes thereon, make, verify, and file with the treasurer the proper inventory, but in such case, before the treasurer shall receive the same, the person making it must add to the ordinary affidavit the further statement that his failure to give to the assessor the required inventory was occasioned by his absence or sickness; and on the filing of such inventory the treasurer shall correct the return made by the assessor.

Mr. PAYSON. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether the word "treasurer," in the eleventh line, should not be "auditor."

Mr. NEAL. The word "treasurer" occurs three times in that section. In all those places it should be "auditor."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitution of the word "auditor" for the word "treasurer."

Mr. NEAL. The office of treasurer, as I stated, has been abolished.

There being no objection, the word "auditor" was substituted for the word "treasurer" wherever it occurred in the section. The same substitution was subsequently made in sections 151, 153, and 155.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill to the close of section 171.

Mr. HOGE. With the consent of the House I should like to recur to section 168.

There was no objection.

Section 168 was read, as follows:

If any person who shall be seized of lands as tenant by courtesy or in dower, or who shall be seized of lands for life, or in right of his wife, shall neglect to pay the taxes thereon until such lands shall be sold for the payment of the taxes, and shall not within one year thereafter redeem the same according to law, such person shall forfeit to the person next entitled to said lands in remainder or reversion, all the estate which he, so neglecting as aforesaid, may have in said lands. And the remainder-man or reversioner may redeem the said lands in the same manner that other lands may be redeemed which have been sold for taxes.

Mr. HOGE. I move to strike out the last word.

It strikes me that that is a very extraordinary provision, not for the enforcement of the payment of taxes precisely, but for the redemption of lands which have been sold for taxes. This section provides:

If any person who shall be seized of lands as tenant by courtesy or in dower, or who shall be seized of lands for life, or in right of his wife, shall neglect to pay the taxes thereon until such lands shall be sold for the payment of the taxes, and shall not within one year thereafter redeem the same according to law, such person shall forfeit to the person next entitled to said lands in remainder or reversion, all the estate which he, so neglecting as aforesaid, may have in said lands.

I understand the effect of that provision to be that as a penalty for having failed to pay the taxes, and permitting the land to be sold because of default and then not redeeming within the time prescribed, the estate which the person neglecting to do this may have in said lands shall by the operation of this section determine, and the party in remainder by simply coming forward and redeeming, after the lands have been sold, after the proceeds of the sale have gone to discharge the tax, may obtain the estate. The failure to redeem within twelve months shall forfeit the estate of the tenant by courtesy or in dower, and thereupon by the mere operation of the section and the enforcement of the collection of taxes, the whole character of the title is changed, the tenure by which the estate is held terminates, and the remainder-man comes into possession.

Now, the question I desire to ask my friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] is whether it is not rather extraordinary that an entire change in the whole doctrine of the law of real property should be effected by a single provision in the chapter on the means of collecting taxes on real property; whether it was intended this should be the effect, and whether it may not be that very serious results may follow from permitting by accident property which is held by a tenant by courtesy or in dower being sold for taxes and not being redeemed within the proper time? I think, sir, it demands a little more consideration than we have been giving to the rest of this chapter, and I doubt very much indeed whether the whole section should not be expunged, so that the provision made here for the payment of taxes should not go to the extent of affecting the titles and producing very serious results which have not been thought of.

Mr. NEAL. I may state that this is the law as it is now and has been for a great many years in the State of Ohio. It has never been known, so far as I am aware, to work any particular hardship there. The object is to compel persons having estates by courtesy or in dower, &c., in real property, to pay their taxes promptly. The remainder man or the reversioner has a right to demand a statement as to this. He is the one interested. If you do not make provisions which are stringent in their character the person holding the particular estate will be careless about it, the taxes will grow from year to year, the penalties will be piled up, and finally the particular estate will determine, and then the remainder-man or the reversioner will be compelled to pay all the accumulated taxes in order to redeem his property, taxes which have not been paid by the person holding the particular estate.

It is not worth while to talk about mercy or charity or anything of that sort in the drafting a tax law. The law of necessity must be stringent in its provisions, otherwise taxes will not be paid and the Government cannot go on. You may denounce it as Draconic in its character, if you please; I care not. I hold that no provision can be too stringent which compels the payment of taxes, for the reason that good citizens always pay taxes that are honestly and fairly levied and assessed, while it is only the bad citizen or the careless or indifferent citizen who refuses to pay such taxes.

As I said at the outset, this clause is copied verbatim from the Ohio law in regard to taxation. That law was revised by commissioners appointed by the governor of that State, who spent several years at the work. They had before them all the laws upon taxation of other States, so that they could determine what was the best method to be adopted for the assessment and collection of taxes.

I think my friend from West Virginia, [Mr. HOGE,] if he will consider this matter thoughtfully, will come to the conclusion that you cannot make a provision much too stringent in cases of this character.

What is this provision? It permits one year to roll around before the property becomes delinquent. Then the tax of the second year is added to it, and then the property becomes delinquent, and is sold for the taxes. Then if after a period of one year from the sale of the property for taxes the remainder-man or reversioner or tenant by dower or by courtesy allows the taxes still to be piled up, we then say that he shall forfeit his right and the person next in succession shall have the right to redeem the property.

Suppose a woman dies leaving her husband tenant by courtesy, and perhaps with some step-children. That husband can go on year after year, if you do not have a provision of this character, allowing tax after tax to be assessed and piled up on that property; and finally, when they have accumulated to such an extent that he thinks it is not worth while to redeem it, he allows the property to be sold and to pass into the hands of other persons, and after his death then these heirs can come in and redeem it.

I think if the gentleman from West Virginia will consider this matter a little more thoroughly he will come to the conclusion that these provisions are not too stringent to accomplish the object which is sought to be accomplished.

Mr. HOGE. If the gentleman will give me his attention for a moment.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.

Mr. HOGE. I ask him what is the meaning of this language in the section, "shall neglect to pay the taxes thereon until such lands shall be sold for the payment of the taxes." Sold to whom?

Mr. NEAL. I would suggest to the gentleman that if he desires to propose any amendment, we pass over this section informally until we come to consider chapter 5, which shows how property is to be sold for delinquent taxes.

Mr. HOGE. Very well.

Mr. NEAL. Then if he desires it, we can recur to this section again, if there is no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection section 168 will be reserved for future consideration.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

CHAPTER V.

DELINQUENT SALES.

SEC. 172. It shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes on real property upon which the same are levied, in arrears on the 1st day of July annually, including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington City, Georgetown, levy court, and the District of Columbia; and he shall, within fifteen days thereafter, publish the same, with a notice of sale, in a pamphlet of which not less than 5,000 copies shall be printed for circulation; and it shall be the duty of said collector of taxes to give notice, by advertising in the regular issue of two daily newspapers published in said District twice a week for three successive weeks, that said pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any tax-payer applying therefor at the office of said tax-collector; and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold by the said collector at public auction at the office of said collector in the city of Washington, on the first Tuesday of October following, and each secular day thereafter until all is sold, at a fixed hour, between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of said days, to the highest bidder or bidders?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I desire to have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio for a moment.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the language of the second and third lines of this section 172: "A complete list of all taxes on real property" "in arrears on the 1st day of July annually." Where is the provision that determines whether the taxes are in arrears or not? That is, how far must they be in arrears to go into that list? An answer to that question will also assist in answering the question asked by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGE] a moment ago; it will give us some light on that subject. Is it taxes for the current year or for prior years?

Mr. TAYLOR. Section 163 will answer that question.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I am told that section 163 will define what are delinquent taxes; I suppose that portion which reads as follows:

If one-half of the tax annually levied upon the real and personal property taxed shall not be paid before the 1st day of December, in each year, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent, &c.

If my friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] can spare a moment to follow me——

Mr. TAYLOR. Look farther on in section 163, lines 15 and 16.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Well, what I would like to draw out is this: How long after the assessment of the tax does that tax stand in a position to be held in arrears? How long a time is there between the assessment of the tax and the time when there is authority to sell the property for delinquency?

Mr. NEAL. The taxes are assessed in May, and the first installment is payable on the 1st of November.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Of the same year?

Mr. NEAL. Of the same year; and the second installment is payable the May following. If those installments are not paid by the 1st of July, then they are in arrears and you can add to them the penalties, the interest, and the other taxes that have become due at that time. In other words, there is a year and a half of taxes that may be called delinquent taxes.

Mr. CASSIDY. And they become delinquent the June following?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, the June following the time the second installment is due.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Then there would be about a year and a half after the tax is assessed before it becomes delinquent.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That is what I wanted to draw out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 182. On or before the first Monday of November, 1882, the collector shall prepare a list of all lands which may have been bid off at any tax sale, under any law authorizing such sales, at a period more than two years prior to said first Monday of November, and shall proceed to advertise and dispose of the same as is provided in the preceding section for the sale of forfeited lands; and all the provisions of the preceding section as to the sale, execution of deed, character of the title acquired, and redemption upon the removal of disabilities shall be applicable to sales made hereunder.

Mr. NEAL. I think that in the third line of this section there is an omission. After the words "lands which may have been bid off" the words "by the District of Columbia" should be inserted. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the thirtieth line of section 181 of page 69. I see that this language differs from that of a prior section in regard to redemptions in the fact that this clause does not except married women. Now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this, so that it may be amended hereafter, if it be thought desirable.

Mr. NEAL. The language in section 181 is "minors and other persons under legal disability."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But a prior section says, "minors and other persons under legal disability, except married women." Did the gentleman design to have the language different in this place?

Mr. NEAL. Well, I will look at that, and will ask leave to go back if it should be found that there is any omission.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It seems to me that this language in section 179 is not very well chosen. It reads, "minors and other persons under legal disability, except married women." Now, married women may be under the disability of coverture, and also under other legal disability. Of course, under such language as this, they would not have the benefit of the removal of their other legal disability.

Mr. NEAL. Well, I suggest to the gentleman that we will examine that and if we find there is an incongruity we will return to it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not press the point now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that this part of the bill be passed over informally to be returned to hereafter. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 189. Commercial agents shall pay $200 annually. Every person whose business it is to sell or offer for sale, or solicit orders for sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, by sample, catalogue, or description, whether owner or agent, shall be regarded as a commercial agent.

Mr. SKINNER. I would like to inquire whether, if a section be allowed to pass now it is implied that there is no objection to it, so that it cannot be amended hereafter?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, unless the section is specially reserved.

Mr. SKINNER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman in charge of this bill explain the principle upon which commercial travelers are taxed in the District of Columbia, while so far as my knowledge goes they are taxed nowhere else.

A MEMBER. They are in Baltimore.

Mr. SKINNER. Now, by this bill a commercial agent who sells merchandise in the District of Columbia by sample, catalogue, or otherwise is compelled to pay a license of $200. I find by looking over the subsequent sections that wholesale dealers in distilled and fermented liquors have to pay a license of only $200; that wholesale dealers in malt liquors have to pay only $100 license; that proprietors of bar-rooms, sample-rooms, and tippling-houses are required to pay only $250 annually. I find also that proprietors of bowling-alleys pay $10 an alley; proprietors of theaters a license of $150. There may be a sufficient reason why commercial travelers should be taxed here while they are not generally taxed elsewhere, but I know there is great complaint in this regard. The matter can perhaps be satisfactorily explained. If so, I shall be very happy to hear the explanation and to support the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to strike out the pending section. I do not know whether it is the habit in any other cities to charge commercial travelers a license fee for the privilege of soliciting orders. If so, it is a barbarous practice wherever it may exist; it is against all commercial law and commercial equity. But if such a tax were ever legitimate anywhere, it certainly is not so in the District of Columbia, where the people of the United States pay one-half the expenses of the city government. If the business men of the United States who are taxed to support the government of this city do not pay enough in that way, I insist that some other means ought to be employed to make up the deficiency, rather than tax their representatives who may come here to solicit business. Of all the cities in the United States it seems to me there is in this city the least excuse for such a rule. I move that the section be struck out.

Mr. SKINNER. One word further. I am told—I do not know how true it may be—that there is a certain combination among the merchants of this city, at least the wholesale merchants, to insist upon this tax in order that representatives of large business houses in other cities may not be able to come here and sell goods. As the gentleman from Kansas says, if there is propriety anywhere in the imposition of such a tax, Washington City is the last one where it should be imposed. It certainly should not be classed along with the licenses required of the wholesale liquor dealers, or tippling-houses, or bar-rooms. Commercial agents are known as a respectable class of our community, and as a very extensive one, representing large business interests in every great city in the Union. They certainly increase the business of the nation. They do it in cities with which I am acquainted, and I believe it is not right for the Congress to say that what may be done in any other city in the United States in perfect freedom and honestly and intelligently may not be done here where the laws are made. I hope the motion to strike out the section will prevail.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will put in my word, so the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] will have it in bulk.

There is another phase of this question which my friends have not touched on. We are legislating here not for the country outside but for the District of Columbia, and now in the interest of the people here we ought to strike this clause out. There ought to be no barrier between the people for the purchase of goods in this way; and it is to the interest of retail dealers in this city, and therefore of the purchasers——

Mr. CASSIDY. We ought to have free trade here.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; free trade here in this District, because protection will not benefit anybody in this District; there is nothing to protect. Washington is simply a city of consumers, and that consumption should be supplied by the country at large. It is ready to be supplied, and there should be no tax on it. My point is you are to let the people here have it because there is no object or benefit in establishing a barrier.

It might be said perhaps, on the other hand, if there were any manufacturing enterprises conducted and there were means of supply, then there would be some occasion to put a wall around and keep the rest out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I will be happy to have the gentleman ask me a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether a similar law does not exist in nearly all the cities of the Union?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand that it does.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, then, if it exists in all other cities, why not in Washington?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I remember it is found on the statute books of many States, but I am glad to know it is a fact that many of the States are repealing those laws, and many are disregarding them as a relic of past ages. There is nothing better for this country than there should be a complete interchange. There should be no boundaries here in passing. There should be absolute free trade in this country, so the gentleman from Georgia may go into Massachusetts and sell his goods as freely as he may sell them in the State of Georgia.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not think the restriction extends to State lines. It is the local law of different cities.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is allowed by the State Legislatures.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is established in cities by special charters.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But allowed by the Legislatures.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Of course authorized by the Legislatures.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is quite proper there should be a law restricting pedlars or hawkers. That is a very different affair; a man who goes about from door to door with a pack on his back, because he pays no tax, and it may be the community should have the benefit of taxation applied to him. That is another class of persons.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, so far from this tax being a relic of barbarism, it is one of the most Christian taxes that is imposed by this bill. It is an evidence of the enlightenment and civilization of this present day. [Laughter.] I can understand very well how gentlemen having a manufacturing constituency like that of my friend from the great State of New York, [Mr. SKINNER,] or of my friend from the State of Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] would be glad to have their commercial travelers come in and skim off the cream of the trade of this District.

Why, is this just? We have merchants here who are paying a tax of $1.50 on their entire property for the government of this District; they are compelled to pay special assessments for the streets, avenues, and sidewalks. They cannot compete with these men who pay no tax unless we find some way to compel those outsiders to bear a portion of the burdens here.

What do these men do? They come to Washington and rent a room for a dollar a day, and there they display their samples. They walk the streets, they have the protection of the police, and if this clause is stricken out they will pay no tax whatever for the privileges they enjoy.

Now, says the gentleman from Kansas, it will be eminently improper in the city of Washington this tax should be levied, for the reason this Government pays one-half the tax here. Why does the Government pay one-half the tax? Because the assessed valuation of the property owned by the Government is equal to all the property, real and personal, of the citizens of this District. That is the reason the people of the city of Washington have been taxed as no people in the country were ever taxed.

Mr. HASKELL. How many wholesale dealers are there in the city of Washington?

Mr. NEAL. I do not know how many wholesale dealers there are in the city, nor how many retail dealers there are.

Mr. HASKELL. Are there more than two?

Mr. NEAL. I do not know whether there is one or two. I do not know whether there are any; but that is not a matter to be considered now. It is a matter of no importance in the consideration of this provision, and in the determination of what is right and just under the circumstance presented here. Why, Mr. Speaker, this provision does not impose any tax or burden upon the commercial traveler coming into the District of Columbia from New York, Boston, or elsewhere, that it does not impose upon agents residing here. No man, whether a resident of the city or not, can be allowed to conduct business of this character under this regulation without paying the tax; and any man, no matter where he comes from, who sells, or offers to sell, or who solicits orders for goods of any kind, by sample, catalogue, or description, whether the owner or agent, shall be required to pay the tax, and shall be regarded as a commercial agent. The exact wording of the sentence here is, that—

> Every person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, or solicit orders for sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, by sample, catalogue, or description, whether the owner or agent, shall be regarded as a commercial agent.

Now strike that provision out; allow your commercial travelers to establish their agencies here to the detriment of legitimate dealers who are compelled to pay the taxes that you impose upon them by law, and what condition of things do you bring about? You allow these men to come in here from all parts of the country, get a room at one of the hotels, display their samples, not paying a dollar of tax; or if they want to escape even that expense, let them go to one of the private houses, rent a room for a dollar a day or less, and transact business there of the same character that you impose a heavy tax upon one of the local merchants for transacting.

Mr. SKINNER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SKINNER. In what way is this tax to be collected—what is the process? I understand there is an agent, or an employé of the Government, who has charge of this business. Now I have heard some things about the process by which this tax is collected, and a certain process by which it is evaded, by connivance with some of the officials. I would like to know how it is done?

Mr. NEAL. I am unable to give the gentleman any positive information as to the actual method of collection. There was an officer appointed by the commissioners, and I have always supposed him to be an honest, faithful, and competent man in the discharge of his duties. If, however, the gentleman from New York can give me such information, or if he possesses any that tends to establish the facts that there is any wrong in this matter, I will have it investigated at once by the commissioners, and if he is dishonest or unfaithful, the matter will be attended to promptly.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the cities in his own State levy this tax?

Mr. NEAL. No, they do not levy it, and for the particular reason that the constitution expressly prohibits the levying of such taxes.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Then is the State of Ohio a Christian or barbarous community? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. I will answer the gentleman from Massachusetts that so far as this tax is concerned it is not up to the standard I would like.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Then Ohio is only Christian because she gets all the offices—is that it? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. All I have to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts in reply to that is, that notwithstanding the immense amount of talk that has been had for the last four or five years in regard to the offices, I will venture to assert that his State has a larger representation in the Departments than the State of Ohio. And Maine, which is still further north, has at least twice the number that Ohio has. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And that used to be a part of Massachusetts.

Mr. NEAL. Yes; and that used to be once a part of Massachusetts.

Now, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Kansas in regard to this tax in Ohio, I will say that in 1855 the constitutional convention provided that there should be a uniform rate of taxation levied upon all property. But since that time, while it was thought at the time to be the very acme of taxation, so far as the principle is concerned, it has been found since that time to be one of the very worst principles, in some respects, that ever was devised; and Legislatures and courts have been working for years past to evade that provision in levying taxes. For instance, if the gentleman from Kansas should come to my city he would have to pay a license tax to the city.

Mr. HASKELL. What for? [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. He would have to pay a tax to the city, if he wanted to peddle goods. There is a municipal provision of the city that requires the tax to be paid if you want to peddle goods or sell by sample, or exhibit anything—if you want to run a circus or a public exhibition of any kind, you would have to pay a tax for it.

Mr. HASKELL. I will not take my circus to Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. This is one of the police regulations of the city, and in all cities, I understand, a similar tax is levied.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the tax-payers of this city I hope that this House will not undertake to strike out a paragraph of this kind which is so manifestly for their protection. These people are heavily taxed on their property, goods, and merchandise, and this I regard as one of the wisest provisions that is incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. What is the present rate per cent. that is levied on property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. NEAL. One dollar and a half on the hundred.

Mr. HASKELL. And you call that a heavily tax-burdened people?

Mr. NEAL. I tell the gentleman from Kansas that the people of Washington have been the most grievously oppressed of any people in this Union for the last ten years in that respect.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to put his finger on a map and point out another city of 50,000 people in America that has but 1½ per cent. of taxation. I ask him to name one such city.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. With the permission of my friend from Ohio, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that I doubt whether he can put his finger on a single city in this Union where the valuation of the property for taxation is so high as it is here in the city of Washington. And that has a great deal to do with the rate of taxation. In this city property is taxed at its full amount, at its intrinsic value, while in other places, as I know is the case in my own State, it is taxed only at one-third of its value. And, of course, where property is taxed at its full amount the taxation would be just three times as great as it would be if the property were assessed at one-third only of its value, the rate being the same.

Mr. HASKELL. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if property is assessed here at its full value, even then, as compared with a city where property is only taxed at half its value, the city of Washington is not unduly taxed. A rate of 3 per cent. is not considered high taxation.

Mr. ERRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] has the floor.

Mr. NEAL. In answer to the gentleman from Kansas, I have already stated that in the last ten years the people of Washington have been the most grievously oppressed in the way of taxation of any people in the United States. I do not hesitate to reaffirm that assertion. The special taxes that have been levied all over this city, and the work for which they have been levied, the cutting down streets, the paving avenues, some of them two hundred and three hundred feet wide, and the consequent flooding of grounds, and everything of that sort, have been of such a character that the result in many instances has been the virtual confiscation of property. I know instances now where those special taxes have not been paid because the property was not worth the money, and parties have not been able to borrow money for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wanted to ask my friend from Ohio a question. If you tax these commercial runners $200 for the privilege of selling goods to the merchants of this city, does it not follow as a consequence that they must charge that much additional in the selling of their goods in order to pay this license? Now, it seems to me that the very men whom the gentleman from Ohio seeks to protect must ultimately have to pay this tax which you require the commercial agent or the commercial runner to pay, or else if he does not pay it, when he purchases the goods he collects the amount from his customers; so that the people here have to pay it in the end anyhow, in one form or another. That is the way it strikes me.

As a rule, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in taxing the right of a man to work. As a rule I do not believe in taxing a man in the exercise of his right to follow any employment that gives him support. I believe that all taxes ought to be levied upon the property of the community for the benefit of the community. It seems to me that that is legitimate and proper. We do tax saloon-keepers; we do tax circuses; but we do not tax the right of men generally to work or to follow an employment which enables them to support themselves. That is what we do here; and if you compel a commercial agent who may be, for aught I know, in a respectable business, to pay a tax of $200, he must get that much out of his customers here in this city in some way. These very merchants who purchase goods from him have to pay that much more to enable him to come here and prosecute his business. If they do not pay it themselves, but purchase their goods from him, then the people here in the city have it to pay.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question first and then make a very few remarks. I wish to ask the gentleman how much in fact that tax has brought to the city? What does it now bring?

Mr. NEAL. Tens of thousands of dollars.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman state how much within a limited range?

Mr. NEAL. I do not think I can state exactly.

Mr. MOORE. When I am at home I am myself engaged in commercial business. While I do not pretend to know anything of the legal aspects of the question, I know the practical results of the law because the same sort of law exists in my State and in my city and has done so for many years. The effect of this law in Tennessee is substantially to embarrass business very considerably while it produces comparatively no income.

This city is a city of retail merchants, of shop-keepers, and as a gentleman near me suggests, of boarding-houses and politicians. There is no wholesale business in Washington, substantially none. If there is I never have heard of the man who does such business, and I have been engaged in commercial business all my life.

This class of agents are a great benefit to the retail merchants of this city. It is a great convenience to a retail merchant in Washington to have a commercial drummer come from New York, from Boston, and from Baltimore—from Baltimore particularly—because he can come here in an hour with his samples and lay them down on the man's counter and furnish him with all the appliances he needs without his spending a dollar to visit the market. As I have said, the only class of trades-people in Washington are the retail men, and I contend this law is an absolute and a very great benefit to those people and to this community.

Mr. SKINNER. Do you mean this law imposing a tax?

Mr. MOORE. No, not the law, but the class of people whom this law taxes. The absence of a law taxing these commercial agents would be a benefit to the business men of this community.

Mr. NEAL. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that a very large proportion of the dealers in Washington have remonstrated against the repeal of this provision. They do not agree with the gentleman in what he states.

Mr. MOORE. I know the effect of this law, being a wholesale merchant myself in Tennessee. There are drummers coming there almost every day from the eastern cities and from Saint Louis, Chicago, &c.; and a similar law to this exists upon the statute-book there. A similar law to this is on the statute book there, and there is not one man in twenty who pays the license; it is evaded in some way. And we who are in business—it may be to my discredit that I say it—connive at the evasion, because, as has been said, we regard it as a relic of a past era.

Mr. ALDRICH. May I inquire of the Chair what is the pending amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending proposition is the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] to strike out section 189 relating to commercial travelers.

Mr. ALDRICH. The gentleman from Ohio in charge of this bill, [Mr. NEAL,] I am glad to say, is generally right; but in this case I think he has made a mistake. If he could modify this section so as to have it apply in those cases where people come here with their goods to sell, and remain perhaps during a session of Congress or a part of a session, and sell their goods in competition with the merchants here, then I would have no objection to it.

Mr. NEAL. There is an express provision in this code which requires every man who comes here with goods for sale and remains twenty-four hours to have his goods assessed for taxation.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all right.

Mr. NEAL. He has to pay taxes at the rate of one dollar and a half on a hundred.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I do not think we need this section at all. I want to say, that in my judgment the commercial traveler who comes here to sell goods to the merchants by sample is doing them a great favor.

Mr. NEAL. They do not think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are seasons of the year when the merchants are very busy and cannot take the time to go to the large cities to make purchases of goods. All that time and expense is saved them by the commercial travelers who come here.

I want to correct the gentleman when he says that there is not a city in the United States which does not impose a tax on the commercial travelers who go there. That is a mistake. It is not done in my city, and these commercial travelers are there all the time. I think any enterprising city is absolutely benefited by the commercial travelers who go there and exhibit in that city the wares which they have for sale. They would sell many goods to these men, and the result would be more enterprise in business here.

So far as I understand this is generally a municipal law. The cities who pass such laws to keep out commercial travelers are of the old fogy kind, and are without that enterprise which makes cities great and prosperous. I think this is a mistake.

Mr. NEAL. Have you not such a law as this in Chicago?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir, we have not.

Mr. NEAL. Everything is free trade there.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; these men come in there and sell their goods by sample, and we never think of taxing them. We are glad to have them come. That is one thing which helps to build up Western cities.

Some of the smaller cities have passed laws to tax these commercial travelers and keep them out; and in every instance that I have heard of, such a law has not been long in force beforeit is wiped out, because they find it to work injuriously.

Mr. NEAL. Now let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] to strike out section 189.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 22, noes 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the result of the vote, and declared the motion agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that, inasmuch as there is no quorum on this vote, this section be passed over until there is a full House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course it is impossible to proceed with business without a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a suggestion to make which I think will obviate the trouble concerning this section. If we could dispose of the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] in another way it might be well. I suggest that we simply provide here a definition of what is a commercial traveler, so as to show that it is one who sells goods to others than dealers. I think that would meet the views of all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This discussion is hardly in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I make the suggestion so that the gentleman from Kansas may modify his motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] raise the question that there is no quorum?

Mr. HOLMAN. I made the suggestion that as there was no quorum the section be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit to the House the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, that this section be passed over for the present to be returned to hereafter.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course there will be no objection to that if the gentleman raises the point that there is no quorum. But it seems to me that as there was a very decided majority in favor of it, the amendment might be regarded as adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests that by unanimous consent the vote just taken may be set aside.

Mr. SKINNER. Does the gentleman from Indiana make the point that there is no quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman suggested that he would make it.

Mr. HOLMAN, I did not say so in so many words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman said so inferentially.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the section be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to passing over section 189 for the present, to be returned to hereafter. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 191. Telegraph companies shall pay annually $250, and $1 on each telegraph-pole in use in the District, and shall paint and number all such poles in the manner prescribed by the commissioners of the District. Telephone companies shall pay annually $100, and hereafter no more or additional telegraph or telephone poles shall be erected within the limits of the cities of Washington or Georgetown.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] what is the idea in regard to the latter part of this section. It reads:

Telephone companies shall pay annually $100, and hereafter no more or additional telegraph or telephone poles shall be erected within the limits of the cities of Washington or Georgetown.

Mr. NEAL. The idea is to have them put underground. They are becoming a terrible nuisance in cities.

Mr. HASKELL. Why not have them all put underground?

Mr. NEAL. We allow those to stand which are already erected; do not compel them to be taken down.

Mr. JOYCE. I observe that the next section to be read is section 193. I desire to say that I shall move to strike out sections 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, and 198; but I have no objection to their being all read before submitting my motion, if my right to make it be not lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the right to move to strike out these sections will be reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 193. Wholesale dealers in distilled or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials shall pay $200 annually: Provided, This license shall not authorize any person to sell fermented or distilled liquors, wines, or cordials in less quantity than one pint nor to be drunk upon the premises where sold.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There seems to be a little ambignity in the language of this proviso.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] has reserved the right to move to strike out this and several succeeding sections.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But I suppose it is in order to perfect them as we go on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly, if there is anything wrong.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The proviso reads:

Provided, This license shall not authorize any person to sell fermented or distilled liquors, wines, or cordials in less quantity than one pint, nor to be drunk on the premises where sold.

[Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. It ought to be "drank," instead of "drunk."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It does not read very well. I am afraid somebody may get into trouble unless an amendment be made.

Mr. NEAL. Well, let the gentleman move to strike out "drunk" and insert "drank."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Perhaps my friend from Ohio would like to pass this over and take it up in the calmness of the morning, so as to get it right. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. I am not responsible for typographical errors.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out the word "nor" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "or to sell such liquors, wines, or cordials."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 194. Wholesale dealers in malt liquors alone shall pay $100 annually. All persons not licensed as brewers, engaged in bottling ale, beer, porter, or other malt liquors, or who sell the same in kegs or barrels, or supply it to dealers in bottles, shall be deemed wholesale dealers in malt liquors.

SEC. 195. Every person engaged in the business of manufacturing brewed or malt liquors for sale, shall pay $100; if a larger quantity than 5,000 barrels be manufactured, the sum of $200 annually.

SEC. 196. Every person engaged in the business of distilling or manufacturing for sale spirituous or intoxicating liquors shall pay $200 annually.

SEC. 197. Rectifiers shall pay $50 annually, in addition to the license as wholesale dealer.

SEC. 198. The proprietors of bar-rooms, sample-rooms, and tippling-houses shall pay $250 annually; and of beer-saloons $100 annually. Every place where malt liquors only are sold to be drunk on the premises shall be regarded as a beer-saloon. Every place where distilled or fermented liquors, wines, or cordials are sold to be drunk on the premises shall be regarded as a bar-room, sample-room, or tippling-house; and it shall be the duty of the proprietor of every such place to deposit with the collector the amount of his license fee, with his application for license, and also present the written permission of a majority of the persons owning real estate, and for this purpose department officers having charge of public buildings shall be considered as owners thereof, and a majority of the residents keeping house on the side of the square where it is desired to locate such business, and of the side of the square fronting opposite the same, which permission, with the signatures attached, shall be certified to by the collector of taxes; and such license shall not be issued until approved by the commissioners: Provided, however, That where, during the year, no complaint has been made against the proprietor of any such place on the part of the property-holders and residents, such proprietor shall not be required to file every year with his application for license such a written permission of persons owning real estate and residents; but if such complaint has been made, the proprietor shall obtain anew the written consent of such owners of real estate and residents as is herein required of him. And no spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors shall be sold except in compliance with the provisions of this title, nor to minors nor intoxicated persons.

Mr. JOYCE. I move to amend by striking out sections 193 to 198, inclusive, and inserting what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act no person shall be allowed to manufacture, import, sell, exchange, or give, barter, or dispose of any intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage in the District of Columbia.

That it shall be lawful for druggists who are regularly licensed dealers in poisons, drugs, and alcohol to sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal and scientific purposes and the mechanic arts only: Provided, That they are labeled and marked distinctly, so that the buyer may be aware of what is purchased, and cautioned against their improper use: Provided further, That the said druggists shall keep a book of registry, in which shall be entered all sales so made by them as aforesaid, showing the name of the person to whom delivered, the quantity, date of sale, and on whose order or prescription the sale was made; and such record shall be submitted to the inspection of the board of police in the District of Columbia, or before any court in a trial at law, whenever required by said board or court.

That any licensed druggist or other person who may manufacture, import, sell, exchange, or give, barter, or dispose of any intoxicating liquors as a beverage in violation of the provisions of this act shall be subject, for each offense, to a fine of $300, and to imprisonment not exceeding three months, and in default of payment of the fine to three months' additional imprisonment; also, the person thus offending shall be liable for all damages accruing from the sale or other disposition of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in violation of the provisions of this act. All courts having original jurisdiction, and officers charged with the execution of civil and criminal law, as well as the board of police of the District of Columbia, are hereby authorized and required to give a faithful, prompt, and efficient execution to this act.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman seriously intends to insist upon this amendment, I suggest that we pass the sections informally and recur to them hereafter.

Mr. JOYCE. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont asks permission that these sections be passed over, to be returned to hereafter.

Mr. JOYCE. I desire it distinctly understood that I do not ask to have them passed over—not by any means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair should have said the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] asks it.

Mr. NEAL. I am very willing to have the matter disposed of now, provided the question of a quorum is not to be raised.

Mr. JOYCE. That, of course, I cannot tell anything about.

Mr. NEAL. You can tell whether you will raise it. It is very evident that this code, if it ever becomes a law, must be considered by a thin House. Members do not care enough for legislation affecting the District of Columbia to attend any night session or to give in the day-time one moment to the consideration of District business. In view of the indifference in this House upon measures of this kind it is a thankless job for members of the District Committee to work upon them.

Mr. JOYCE. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio I said, as I say now, that I have no objection to passing over these sections for the present, though I do not ask it. But when this matter is to be considered I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to passing over sections 193 to 198, inclusive, to be returned to hereafter, the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont to be considered pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to make this inquiry: If the substitute of the gentleman from Vermont should be rejected when the House comes to consider these sections, will amendments to the sections be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order to perfect the sections before the question is taken on striking out and inserting. Without objection the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 212. Peddlers shall pay $50 annually. Any person who may offer for sale, from house to house, dry fancy goods, hardware, notions, toys, and similar articles and goods, delivered at the time of sale, shall be regarded as a peddler: Provided, That persons engaged in such business whose capital invested or the value of whose stock of merchandise shall not exceed $10 shall not be required to obtain a license, provided such person obtains the written permission of the commissioners.

Mr. MOORE. Private carriages certainly should be taxed at some rate. We tax every other vehicle of every imaginable character, and why not carriages kept for private use?

Mr. NEAL. I will answer the gentleman from Tennessee. Private carriages are taxed at their real value in money. If the gentleman will examine this license system he will find there is nothing taxed by special license, except commercial travelers, which does not require the surveillance of the police. That is the principle we adopted in preparing this license system. All property used in a legitimate and honorable way is subject to the ordinary rules of taxation. But when it comes to hacks which stand upon the streets, and upon which the police must keep an eye to see no exorbitant charges are imposed, special license tax is imposed. And so it is with carts and horses and drays. It was for that reason, and that alone, any tax was imposed here. The gentleman will notice the tax on carts and drays is light, as they ordinarily are run by poor people. We did not propose to impose any burdensome tax on them, and yet it was necessary to impose some to keep in view of the police these vehicles kept for hire.

Mr. MOORE. I did not notice the section as it was passed, and if in order I should like to ask whether it is thought best the tax on theaters shall remain as it is? I would like to move an amendment to make it $250.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been passed and can only be amended by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORE. I did not see it until it was passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Regular order!

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 214. Any willful and corrupt false swearing or affirming by any person before any officer of this District empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, to any material fact in any matter relating to the assessment or collection of taxes or licenses imposed by the provisions of this act, shall be deemed perjury, and shall be punished in the manner prescribed by law for such offenses.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether there is any provision in the bill by which the complainant gets one-half, or any portion of the penalty imposed for violation of license laws?

Mr. NEAL. I cannot answer that question now.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That feature of any law I dislike exceedingly.

Mr. NEAL. I cannot answer positively. If there is it comes hereafter, and the gentleman from Massachusetts can move to strike it out.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER VIII.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCES, DISTRIBUTIVE SHARES, AND LEGACIES.

SEC. 215. All estates, real and personal, passing from any person who may die seized and possessed thereof, being in this District, or any part of such estate or interest therein transferred by deed, grant, bargain, gift, or sale, made or intended to take effect in possession after the death of the grantor, bargainor, devisor, or donor to any person, in trust or otherwise, other than for the use of the father or mother, wife or children, and other lineal descendants of the grantor, bargainor, devisor, donor, or intestate, shall be subject to a tax of 2½ per cent. on every hundred dollars of the value of such estates; and all executors and administrators shall only be discharged from liability for the amount of such tax, the payment of which they may be charged with, by paying the same as herein directed: Provided, That no estate which may be valued at a less sum than $500 shall be subject to the tax imposed by this section: And provided further, That the said tax shall not be applied to grants, deeds, or devises for purely charitable purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio having charge of this bill to whether the words "on every hundred dollars" ought not to be omitted. The tax is fixed at 2½ per cent. on the value of said estates. It seems to me the words "on every hundred dollars" is a repetition and I move to strike them out. It is 2½ per cent., and it is only repeating the idea a second time.

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman is right.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Strike out "every hundred dollars of," so as to leave the word "on" in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 227. The register of wills shall give to the person paying the said tax duplicate receipts for the same, one of which shall be forwarded by said person to the treasurer, to be by him preserved, and certified copies thereof shall be evidence in suits upon the bonds of said register.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Is the word "treasurer" right there?

Mr. NEAL. No; it ought to be "auditor," and I move to make that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 228. The register of wills shall pay over monthly to the treasurer all taxes collected by him under the provisions of this chapter and take his receipt therefor.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out the word "treasurer," in the second line, and in lieu thereof insert the word "collector."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEAL. Now the next title is title 4, concerning public schools, and I am authorized by the unanimous vote of the Committee on the District of Columbia to strike out all of that title. Regulation of public schools does not belong to a book of municipal ordinances. I should never have put it in there, but I left it, finding it in last year's work.

Mr. COBB. Why should it not remain?

Mr. NEAL. Because this is a book of ordinances, and the present law on the statute furnishes a good school system, one under which the schools have flourished, and there is no necessity for a change.

Mr. HASKELL. I suggest the title be passed over informally.

Mr. NEAL. If there is any good reason why it should be passed over I do not object, but otherwise I do object.

Mr. HASKELL. There are some questions which I wish to raise when the House is full.

Mr. MANNING. If the gentleman has some suggestion to offer in reference to the matter I do not object to its being passed over. I repeat the inquiry of the gentleman having charge of the bill, why should it be passed over?

Mr. HASKELL. I am entirely willing to state my reason for asking it be passed over. Here is a section evidently passed by the committee concerning the public schools of the District of Columbia. I suppose there are some modifications, indeed I know there are some, of existing school laws of the District, and I do not know but with some modifications the present title would be preferable to a large number of members. It might be the new law with these modifications might be much better than the old law, and I should like to have an opportunity, since the idea of striking it out has come up, to examine the difference between the law as it now stands and the law as it would be if this section were adopted. I have not had time to examine the changes proposed by this new code in reference to the school laws.

Mr. MANNING. I do not understand the gentleman from Kansas yet. He says that is all; but it seems to me that he quit before he answered.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I will try to make myself plain, if the gentleman will give his attention. The Committee on the District of Columbia at some time set itself deliberately to work to revise the school system of the District, as evinced by this school title in the bill now under consideration. If they did revise it they made changes, that is clear. Now, I say that possibly with slight modifications the old plan might suit me better than this, or this, for instance, might more nearly conform to my views than the old law, and I have not had time to examine the difference between the old and the new sufficiently to make up my mind positively upon it yet. If, however, it is determined here to go through with it to-night, it would prevent the House from the consideration of the school system, which perhaps needs much change, amendment, and modification that ought to be incorporated to make it perfect in this code. For that reason I think it would be wise to pass it over for the time being.

Mr. MANNING. I take it for granted, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Kansas has already crystallized his views about the matter. I take it for granted that the modifications which he thinks ought to be made he has already determined upon. It may be that with the modifications suggested now we could perfect and conclude this matter at once. But I am not in favor of pressing the matter, and if the gentleman desires it, I have no objection to defer to his views.

Mr. COBB rose.

Mr. HASKELL. I am perfectly willing and ready to present such suggestions and modifications as I think should be required, if it is the wish of the House to proceed with the matter to-night, and if the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had already recognized the gentleman from Kansas before the gentleman from Indiana rose, and will recognize the gentleman from Indiana afterward. It is in order, the Chair will state, to perfect the section before the motion to strike out is submitted to the House.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, it is proper that I should say that the principal point aimed at by this code is to make such laws as will more effectually secure a proper collection of the taxes in the District of Columbia. The principal object in view is to enable the people here to understand exactly what laws they are living under; but there is nothing in the code but what might be properly designated the municipal ordinances of the city. The school system is never included in the ordinances of any city, and the gentleman from Kansas will not find in any book of ordinances of any city in the Union, I will venture to assert, a school system.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed a bill in the first instance that they incorporated in the bill which had been presented in the Forty-fifth Congress by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] I did not know myself at that time when I undertook to revise it, nor was I sufficiently acquainted with the laws of the District to know what was required and what was not. However we revised the law as we found it, and that revision is now as it appears in this code. But upon examination of the law as it is now on the statute-books I find no material improvement in this particular part of it, and I am also informed that the schools here are flourishing to such an extent that Washington is noted all over the country for one of the best and most efficient school systems in the United States. For these two reasons, I do not think that it is best to interfere with the system or undertake to modify it.

In the second place, if we should conclude to do it, this portion of the bill had better be set down as a special measure to be considered separate and apart and independently of the bill before the House.

It is for these reasons that the Committee on the District of Columbia without opposition instructed me to move to strike out this title.

Mr. HASKELL. If I may now be permitted I will state frankly my objections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this debate is proceeding of course by unanimous consent.

Mr. HASKELL. I understand that, and will now state frankly to as many members of the House as are present exactly what I am thinking of. It has been a matter of some pride and interest to a large majority of the people of my State to eliminate from its constitution and from its laws the words white and black, and German and Irish, and American born and foreign born, and all that, regarding it as objectionable language, phraseology, or terms. I would like to see eliminated from the laws of the District of Columbia every allusion to white and black people, whether it relates to schools, or whether it relates to courts, or whether it relates to taxation.

I do not stand here as an advocate of a mixed school or a separate school system, or of any kind of a system—for or against any of these propositions; but I insist that in this day and age it is time for us in our laws to stop legislating about people, black, white, or colored, or any other sort of people by name, or to use in our legislation any longer that class phraseology. There is only mischief, wrong, and error in it, and I believe that the laws ought to be clear of all such phraseology.

Mr. NEAL. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEAL. Are you in favor of taking away from the authorities of the District of Columbia the discretion in regard to the schools, so that if the best interests of the District require the establishment of separate schools for colored children, you would prevent them from doing it?

Mr. HASKELL. No, sir.

Mr. NEAL. That I understand to be the position of the gentleman.

Mr. HASKELL. I will tell the gentleman from Ohio that I would simply copy the school system in my own State. Kansas has a better school system than there is in the whole world elsewhere.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not agree with him.

Mr. COBB. We have as good a system in my own State.

Mr. HASKELL. That question was settled at the time of the Paris exposition in 1878.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is no better system than that of Illinois.

Mr. HASKELL. I know whereof I speak. There was an inspection of school systems at the time of the Paris exhibition, and the school system of Kansas was exhibited before the world, and in competition with all other school systems, and the State of Kansas took the prize.

In that school code the word "white" or the word "colored" does not appear anywhere; and yet there are colored schools all over the State of Kansas, and there are mixed schools all over the State of Kansas, arranged and adapted to the needs and tastes of the various localities and situations. I would like to have in the District of Columbia, in its school system, no white or black. I would leave it to the board of school trustees to grade their schools, to manage their schools, and adjust and adapt their schools to the needs of this District in its various localities. If the colored people want a separate school by themselves, and it is as economical and convenient to give it to them as to give a mixed school, why then give them a separate school.

Mr. NEAL. And suppose the white people want a separate school?

Mr. HASKELL. If the white people want a separate school, and it can be given to them decently and in order, I would give them a white school. But if you take out of the law the words "white" and "black" and leave the system quite clear, you leave the school trustees at liberty to adapt the school system to the needs of the District.

This matter of providing for separate schools may seem to be very harmless and simple and just and righteous; and yet it can be made the meanest enginery of oppression in the world. I do not know it has been so made in the District of Columbia; but I say it can be made so. You can by this means bar out of all decent schools every colored child in the District. You can put your colored children in barns and barracks and rat-holes under these very harmless-looking phrases that appear in the law providing for separate schools.

I do not stand here as an advocate for a mixed school, nor as an advocate for a separate school. But I do stand here as an advocate for absolute equality before the law. It is time in this nineteenth century, and in this year of 1882, to wipe out of your statute-books these unfair and prejudicial distinctions.

Mr. MANNING. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. What is now pending before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated, when the gentleman from Kansas took the floor, that this discussion was proceeding by unanimous consent. If any gentleman objects——

Mr. MANNING. I only wanted to look forward and see what this was coming to.

Mr. HASKELL. I was speaking to the motion to strike out this title.

Mr. MANNING. I imagine while the gentleman may be in order to speak against the motion to strike out, he is not in order to speak indefinitely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no motion to strike out pending.

Mr. MANNING. I understood the gentleman in charge of the bill to submit that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr NEAL] asked unanimous consent, as the Chair recollects, to pass over title 4.

Mr. ALDRICH. The gentleman from Ohio made the motion to strike out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And then the gentleman from Kansas asked unanimous consent to pass over that title. That request was submitted to the House; and on that request to pass over the title, with a view of returning to it hereafter, this discussion arose. The Chair understands the discussion relates to that request to pass over, and the Chair stated the gentleman from Kansas was proceeding by unanimous consent. Of course if he is arguing the question upon striking out, the five minutes to which he would be entitled are exhausted, and the gentleman from Kansas is not entitled to speak further.

Mr. COBB. I do not know in just what shape the question is pending now before the House. But I think that this portion of the bill ought to be retained, when properly modified and changed. I am not satisfied from the knowledge I have of the management of the public schools but what there can be some changes made which may perfect the system. I will suggest one now. The board of trustees is composed of too many persons. There are nineteen members on the board.

Mr. NEAL. Does the gentleman from Indiana know that the commissioners can reduce the number down to five if they choose to do it?

Mr. COBB. I know the commissioners may do that, as they are authorized under the general act to reduce the number of officers; but they cannot increase the number, I believe. I think it would be well for Congress to look into this matter and to make such changes as are right and proper under the practice adopted by the commissioners.

So far as mixed schools are concerned I am opposed to them. I do not believe that the children of this District or of any State in this Union can be benefited by mixed schools. There are certain conditions in life that we have got to recognize practically in legislation as well as anywhere else; and the man who cannot see it, it occurs to me, must necessarily fail to be a good legislator. In this District every man knows who looks out upon the population that there are classes of people here who cannot mix in public schools, and it is better that each of them should have a separate school where they can best be benefited.

There are other suggestions I might make. But the special point I desire to make is this: that we ought to consider this school question and make such provisions in this bill as will guide and control in a general way the board of trustees.

Now I see an amendment here right at the start in this school matter that I would object to most seriously. I think it is not practical. It divides up the District of Columbia into school districts, putting in one of them I believe about twenty-five schools, and in another I believe two hundred and fourteen. Now that is not right.

Mr. NEAL. Oh, not schools.

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir, schools; I mean exactly what I say. It is a division which has been gotten up certainly without regard to the interests of the District. Therefore I would amend that portion of the bill. For instance, it says "the fourth district shall include all that portion of the District which is east of said Eastern Branch." That portion includes twenty schools; I said twenty-five.

Then another provision is, "the third district shall include all that portion of the District of Columbia which is between Seventh street and the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River." That includes two hundred and fourteen schools; twenty in one district and two hundred and fourteen in another.

Now, in lieu of such a provision as that, I would say that the District of Columbia should be divided into seven school districts, and so divided that as near as can well be done an equal number of schools should be in each district. That might be done by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

There are other matters which I might suggest, but I will not take up the time of the House to do so now. I think these provisions in relation to the schools in the District should be considered and determined by the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we can afford to trust this Committee on the District of Columbia. It seems to be the unanimous request of the members of that committee that this whole title should be stricken out. I think the reasons given by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] are good reasons why we should accede to that request. The code is the important thing, as the gentleman has stated, for it relates to taxes, &c. He has given the whole story. His request is that this whole title relating to public schools should be stricken out.

Mr. CASSIDY. We do not want to jeopardize the whole code by the consideration of this school law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at all; the code is too important. I have come up here night after night, and have been willing to do so, to help along this important matter. The Committee on the District of Columbia are unanimous in making this request, and it seems to me that it is a very reasonable one. I hope this title will be stricken out, and that we will go on with the rest of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to say a very few words on this motion to strike out. I come from a section of the country where the colored people form a very large element of the population. I come from Tennessee, where a very few years ago the slavery question was a great question, but where the people to-day recognize all as American freemen.

I am not in favor of mixed schools, of miscegenation, of mixed white and colored animals or men, or anything. Birds of one kind flock together, and animals of one kind herd together, and so on. There is no trouble about that; we have lived past that era.

We are living now in an age of prejudice, it is true, but we are not living amid such deep and bitter prejudices as pervaded the country twenty years ago. We have made immense progress in twenty years—immense progress.

A few years ago the use of the word "colored" in connection with the ballot would have created strife and discord and discontent. That matter is now discussed all over my section of the country, and nobody thinks any harm of it. Those gentlemen on the other side of the House who used to make the most noise, make no noise in my section now when that question is discussed.

If you strike the words "white" and "black" from the laws of the land there will be no danger of black people and white people mingling and mixing and marrying and troubling each other. There should be no such words on the statute-book.

Now, when I say that I wish it to be distinctly understood that I have never been charged with any disposition or fancy for mixing and miscegenation and all such stuff as frightens timid men. There is no danger of it.

> Order is Heaven's first law, and, this confessed,
> Some are and must be greater than the rest.

Sir, I believe the Anglo-Saxon race is the greatest that was ever created. And because I think it is a greater race than the colored race is one of the best reasons in the world why I am willing to give the colored race a chance. In Heaven's name, if we are superior, as we claim to be, what harm can there be in helping to raise up the weak and the lowly and the fallen? There is no harm in that.

Why should we as Christians and patriots be so much alarmed at this matter? We are living in daily intercourse and mingling with the colors and blending together in all sorts of life. Yet I see no harm; I am not afraid of that.

We are told by England's greatest bard that "the strawbery grows beneath the nettle," and—[after a pause]—I will give it to you in a moment. I am not quite so apt in the line of public addresses as some of my distinguished friends on the other side; but I will give it to you if you will give me time:

> The strawberry grows beneath the nettle,
> And wholesome berries rise and ripen best
> Neighbored by fruits of baser quality.

Now, gentlemen, you may make the application; you may apply it to other races and it will be equally relevant. I therefore am opposed to having the words "white" and "colored" in the laws applied to the District of Columbia, and when the time comes I shall vote for expunging them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now submit to the House the request of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] that this title be passed over for the present, to be returned to hereafter.

Mr. CASSIDY. Let it be stricken out.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, we had better strike it out now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is objection to passing the matter over. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to strike out all of title 4, embracing sections 229 to 254 inclusive.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 21, noes 6.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana raise the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. HASKELL rose.

Mr. COBB. I will hear what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It may then be too late.

Mr. HASKELL. I shall have to ask for a consideration of this question in a full House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that no quorum has voted.

Mr. NEAL. I move, then, that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed by the Mississippi River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the Lancaster National Bank, of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to resolution of the 19th ultimo, the official report of C. C. Lancaster, jr., in relation to the conduct of judicial officers and their accounts in Alabama; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. INGALLS. What is that motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. INGALLS. I believe that motion is not debatable, but we have had one holiday this week in memory of George Washington who when he was living was very much in favor of attending to business, and I have heard it suggested by many Senators that it would be very advisable to sit to-morrow for the purpose of considering the Calendar under the Anthony rule. I should like to submit that proposition to the Senate if the Senator from Rhode Island would permit me. Of course I know his motion is one that is privileged and can be insisted upon, but I believe the business of the Senate would be greatly promoted by considering the Calendar under the Anthony rule to-morrow.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will withdraw the motion if there can be unanimous consent that to-morrow we shall go on with the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. There is one other consideration. I will suggest, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, that on Monday there will be no business session on account of the memorial services to the memory of the late President Garfield; and in view of the number of interruptions that have occurred in the public business, it seems to me it would be wise to set apart to-morrow for the purpose indicated.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator think we shall get a quorum?

Mr. INGALLS. We can try.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island and also to the Senator from Kansas to defer understandings about these matters until a quorum is present. There is evidently not a quorum now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us wait a little while then.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well, sir, I will wait.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Warren and Jo Daviess Counties, Illinois, praying for legislation regulating freight charges on railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of L. A. Mason, and 47 others, citizens of Ohio and Pennsylvania, and the petition of C. D. Hays and 352 others, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of a bill to compel railroad corporations and all common carriers upon them to perform certain duties; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of citizens of Polk County, Missouri, praying for the erection of a public building at Jefferson City, in that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Colonel J. A. Graham, praying to be compensated for services alleged to have been rendered by him as disbursing agent of the Joint Committee on the Library; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a memorial of citizens of California, remonstrating against the adoption of the French metric system of weights and measures, and praying that it shall not be made legal in any Government transactions; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of California, praying for the passage of a bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company, of Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of the National Relief Association, in favor of the passage of the bill to increase the efficiency of the life-saving service; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes, to report it back with amendments, and I give notice that on Tuesday next I shall ask for its passage.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1318) authorizing the Secretary of War to use the unexpended balance of the appropriations for the improvement of the Susquehanna River above and below Havre de Grace in the construction of the channel and breakwaters of the Fishing Battery below Havre de Grace; which was read twice by its title.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1310) for the relief of C. Bohn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of California, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1311) to provide for the construction of a vessel for the revenue marine for service in North Pacific waters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1312) to provide for the distribution of moneys collected at the port of San Francisco, California, under section 4268 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1313) granting a pension to Samuel Horner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL. I introduce by request a bill about which I have no personal knowledge.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1314) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1315) for the relief of Dr. Lewallen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1316) for the relief of H. H. Dalrymple; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1317) for the relief of Dr. Lewallen and Anthony G. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1319) granting a pension to the widow and children of Constant Loup; which was read twice by its title an referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MAXEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1320) for the relief of C. M. Wilcox; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE MILITIA.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of giving more aid than is now provided for to the various States and Territories in order that the organization of the militia force of the country may be encouraged and promoted and its thoroughness and efficiency strengthened.

Mr. President, in 1808, I think it was, a permanent annual appropriation was made for the encouragement of the militia of the country of $200,000. We then were eight or ten million people. We are now five or eight times as great, and still the appropriation of $200,000 only is divided among the States and Territories for the purpose of organizing, arming, and keeping intact the militia force of the country. I think they need more encouragement, and I ask the Military Committee to give the resolution early attention, as I hope they will.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PERUVIAN, CHILIAN, AND BOLIVIAN COMPLICATIONS.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas publication has been widely made by the public press of the United States of certain alleged commercial contracts between certain companies and copartnerships of individuals relative to the exports of guano and nitrates from Peru, in which the mediation by the Government of the United States between the governments of Peru, Bolivia, and Chili is declared to be a condition for the effectuation and continuance of the said contracts: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire whether any promise or stipulation, by which the intervention by the United States, in the controversies existing between Chili and Peru, or Chili and Bolivia, has been expressly or impliedly given by any person or persons officially connected with the Government of the United States; or whether the influence of the Government of the United States has been in any way exerted, promised, or intimated in connection with, or in relation to the said alleged contracts, by any one officially connected with the Government of the United States; and whether any one officially connected with the Government of the United States is interested, directly or indirectly, with any such alleged contracts in which the mediation, as aforesaid, of the United States is recited to be a condition. And that the said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and make report of their proceedings in the premises, to the Senate at the earliest possible day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have a resolution on that same subject, covering a much broader scope of inquiry but including the inquiry that the Senator from Delaware proposes, and therefore I suggest either that this go over or that the Senator—which I was going to move as to my own resolution—would consent to this being referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations in order that it may report a resolution which shall be exact and complete, covering all the branches of that most unfortunate affair.

Mr. BAYARD. Anything that tends to perfect the inquiry and to bring the matter more fully before the country, is satisfactory to me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution that I had intended to offer——

Mr. BAYARD. Let my resolution lie over for the present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution that I had intended to offer, not desiring to commit the Senate to an inquiry about delicate foreign affairs without inquiry by a committee, I proposed to move should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations in order that it might consider the subject, and therefore if it is agreeable to the Senator to have this referred in order that we may, as I certainly shall be in favor of doing, enlarge it so as to cover the scope of the whole investigation that I desire, I shall not ask it to lie over.

Mr. BAYARD. It was my intention to ask its adoption by the Senate at once, being a resolution of inquiry, and then move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, although it is directed to that committee and therefore it would naturally go to them as part of their duty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better be referred in order to enlarge the scope of the resolution. That was what I intended to move about my resolution, it relating to foreign affairs that the resolution itself be referred to the committee, because I did not wish as an individual Senator to ask the Senate in the hurry regarding inquiries about foreign affairs to make an investigation without the report of a committee upon it. So I intended to move that my resolution be referred to the committee. My resolution embraces this and sundry other topics connected with those affairs.

Mr. BAYARD. I think the object would be equally well attained by that course. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that it be printed also.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Calendar under the Anthony rule will be proceeded with.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think we ought to proceed with the Calendar in order. I hope Senators will not call up special bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the Calendar. Does the Senator from Colorado move to take up something else?

Mr. TELLER. I was about to make a motion, if I could be allowed to do so. I suppose it is a question whether I shall be allowed or not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope we shall go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 876, and I hardly think anybody will object. It is number 163 in the order of business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I have the floor, and I suppose I cannot be taken off it——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I cannot be taken off it even by a call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule be postponed temporarily in order to take up the bill (S. No. 876) granting a pension to Lucretia R. Garfield.

Mr. COCKRELL. And I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I would say upon that motion, which I suppose must be submitted to the Senate if there is objection to it, that the Committee on Pensions considered this bill sent to the committee for the relief of Mrs. Garfield, and directed a bill to be reported for the relief of Mrs. Garfield, the widow of John Tyler, formerly President of the United States, and also the widow of James K. Polk. The bill has been on the Calendar for some time, and it is very apparent that it will be some time before it can be reached in the regular order of business.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. What is the order of the bill on the Calendar?

Mr. TELLER. No. 163.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It will be reached in a few days.

Mr. TELLER. I have not called up any pension case. I have been very much pressed by various people to call up this case, and I think the Senate can afford to take it up out of its order and pass it. I do not believe there will be any opposition to it when it is presented. I ask the Senate to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to take up the bill indicated by him granting a pension to Mrs. Garfield. That has been objected to inasmuch as it is out of the regular order of business. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to postpone proceedings under the Anthony rule for the time being in order to take up the bill indicated by him. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to appeal to my friend from Colorado as we are under the Anthony rule to let this matter stand. We all know that Mrs. Garfield is not in a state of destitution, and I think that good lady herself would be quite unwilling to have her pension case taken up out of its order as against the humblest and smallest claim on the justice of the United States or its generosity that there is on the Calendar. Now, if we can go on in the regular way we shall reach this bill in a very short time. I hope we shall not waste our time in taking the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. TELLER. This bill as reported from the committee is for the relief of Mrs. Garfield, Mrs. Tyler, and Mrs. Polk. I feel extremely delicate about speaking of the financial condition of these ladies, and will say as little as possible on that subject; but whatever may be said as to Mrs. Garfield's wants and needs, there can be no question, as very many Senators on this floor know, of the necessitous circumstances of the two other ladies named.

I believe this is the first time in my experience in the Senate that I have ever asked to have the Calendar under the Anthony rule set aside. I only ask it now because I am very much pressed by people who know the necessities of these ladies. I think it would be the handsome thing to do to pass this bill, and pass it promptly. Yesterday we passed a bill to retire General Grant, not from the fact that he needed it—nobody pretends that he needs it, nobody pretended that he would suffer if we let it go till on the Calendar that bill was reached in its regular order. We took a day for that bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Not in the morning hour.

Mr. TELLER. It is true we did not take it up in the morning hour; but it belonged to the Calendar. I do not propose to spend any time over this matter. I want the vote of the Senate. If the Senate say they do not want to take up the bill, it shall remain until we reach it; but I think we ought to take it up now.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill sought to be called up involves a very important principle, and I have not yet made up my mind to vote for it. I should like to have more time to consider as to the power of Congress to vote money away for pensions of this character. I think it is due to Senators that an opportunity should be afforded for examining into the matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think we ought to continue regularly with the Calendar. If bills are to be selected out from the Calendar, we shall never get along regularly. While I shall vote for the bill my friend from Colorado speaks of, yet I believe we ought to proceed regularly with the Calendar, and I shall so vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the question in regard to the merits of this bill has nothing to do with the motion now before the Senate. We have solemnly adopted a mode of procedure. The question is, shall we adhere to that, or shall we go into floundering as we had been before, every Senator trying to get the floor and press the particular measure that some person around the Capitol or in Washington might be urging upon his attention. I do not propose to antagonize this bill or delay action upon it when it is presented. I call for the regular order because I believe this bill can be passed more readily and hundreds of others by confining the attention of the Senate to the Calendar in its regular order than by skipping from case to case.

I believe that the Senator from Colorado is chairman of the Committee on Pensions. It has been usual in former Congresses for the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, particularly when the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] was chairman of that committee, to ask the Senate to take up and consider the pension cases upon the Calendar, and in that way all the pension cases were readily disposed of. That would be done every week or ten days.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Not in the morning hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was usual for the Senator from Kansas, while he was chairman of the Committee on Pensions, to ask the attention of the Senate to the cases reported by the Committee on Pensions then on the Calendar. I have never known that to be objected to. It was always acceded, and thus, in a very short time, all the pension cases reported and upon the Calendar would be disposed of. I simply make this as a suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. I inquire if the complaint is that I do not take them all up, or only because I take up this one. If so, the Senator can have them all taken up if he desires.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was simply stating what had been the rule heretofore.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think those bills usually were taken up, not in the morning hour, but after the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. Sometimes they were taken up in the morning hour and sometimes afterward. Unless an appropriation bill or something very important was pending the request to consider pension cases was always granted. I think now if this and a few other pension cases are very important that the Senate will at an opportune time consider them, and then let all the other pension cases on the Calendar be called and disposed of. But if we set aside the Calendar in this case we destroy the order of business for the rest of the session and we shall get nothing done. We shall not dispose of two cases in a morning hour hereafter when you abandon the Calendar, because I know that obstructions will then be thrown in the way of the progress of business which would not otherwise be thrown. I appeal to the Senate in this case to adhere to the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I would ask the Senator from Colorado to modify his request, or rather to withdraw his motion and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the Calendar of pension cases favorably reported, immediately after the expiration of the morning hour to-day, and dispose of that part of the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. If that consent can be given I shall be quite willing to do so, but yesterday——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will antagonize that with an appropriation bill. It was suggested before the Senator came in that to-morrow be devoted to considering cases under the Anthony rule by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite satisfied that the Senator from Iowa will not object to the taking up and disposition of the pension cases on the Calendar after the morning hour to-day, and my opinion is that it will not require three-quarters of an hour to dispose of every case that now stands upon the Calendar of that character which has been favorably reported.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee, I will say that if the urgent deficiency bill is taken up at half-past one, I will consent that it may be laid aside informally for fifteen or twenty minutes, or half an hour, to dispose of the pension cases; but of course I cannot consent to that if the pension cases are to occupy much time, because this appropriation bill ought to be passed to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have observed that when special classes of cases are taken up in this body from any particular committees the Senate is always immediately deserted by a majority of the Senators; and, therefore, I object at this stage of the session—I do not say that I shall do it towards the end—to taking up pension cases or any other particular class of cases for continuous consideration, for the reason that for some cause or other I cannot persuade myself to stay and look after matters that the committees I have to do with have not reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to set aside the Anthony rule, with a view of proceeding to the consideration of order of business No. 163, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Conger,	Jackson,	Teller,
Bayard,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Blair,	Fair,	Platt,	Windom.

So the motion was not agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under the Anthony rule is the bill (S. No. 850) to appropriate and expend the entire income derived from the internal-revenue taxes on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits for the education of all the children living in the United States, which was introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] and read the first time. The bill will be passed over, as it is understood that the Senator from Illinois intends to ask the Senate to hear him upon it.

JAMES BURKE.

The bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke was announced as next in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, January 17, 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to have the bill laid aside informally for a few minutes and go on with the next case. The bill recalls to my mind a belief that this question was once before the Committee on the Judiciary, and was reported upon by that committee one way or the other. I should like to look it up, it not losing its place. Let it be laid aside informally for a moment.

Mr. MAXEY. I made the report in this case. I do not think the case was ever before the Judiciary Committee. It was before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and reported favorably, and passed unanimously at a former session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say that is so, but I should like to look at the report.

Mr. MAXEY. I only state that fact for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely ask that it be laid aside informally.

Mr. MAXEY. I have simply discharged my duty about it, and now it is for the Senate to decide what it will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over informally and the next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

MARK WALKER.

The bill (S. No. 297) for the relief of Mark Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It suspends the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army for the purpose of the act, and only so far as they affect Mark Walker, late a first lieutenant in the Nineteenth United States Infantry, and authorizes the President, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Walker, late a first lieutenant in the Nineteenth United States Infantry, to the same grade and rank of first lieutenant held by him on May 13, 1878; and Walker shall thereupon be placed upon the retired list of the Army, provided the same shall be recommended by the retiring board.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That the acceptance of the provisions of this act shall be a waiver to all right, present and prospective, under the pension laws of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRISON January 17, 1882:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 297) for the relief of Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth Infantry, having considered the same, submit the following report:

That the committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate Report No. 137, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which said report is hereto annexed and made part of this report, and is as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 137, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2) for the relief of Mark Walker, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

"That the records of the War Department show that Walker entered the military service as a corporal of Company G, Fifteenth Indiana Volunteers, June 14, 1861, was subsequently appointed sergeant, promoted to second lieutenant January 1, 1863, and to first lieutenant March 1, 1863. He was so severely wounded at the battle of Stone River, December 31, 1862, as to compel his absence from his regiment until March 1, 1863. He rendered faithful service until June 25, 1864, when he was honorably mustered out. He re-entered the service as a captain in the Two hundred and fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, March 30, 1865, and served in the Shenandoah Valley and in this city until January 22, 1866, when mustered out. He was brevetted major of volunteers March 13, 1865, 'for gallant and meritorious services during the war.' He was subsequently appointed second and first lieutenant of the Nineteenth Infantry, regular Army, his appointment to both grades dating February 23, 1866, and was brevetted captain March 2, 1867. He continued in the service until April 29, 1878, when he was dismissed, pursuant to the findings of a general court-martial, 'for drunkenness on duty, in violation of the thirty-eighth article of war,' to take effect May 13, 1878.

"The specification of the charge on which Lieutenant Walker was tried is—

"'In that First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, being on duty in command of his company at undress parade at retreat, at Fort Lyon, Colorado, on or about December 24, 1877, was found drunk.'

"To the charge and specification Lieutenant Walker pleaded guilty.

"The occurrence on which the charge was based happened on Christmas eve, an occasion on which the tendency to conviviality in social intercourse, and notably in Army intercourse on the frontier, though not excusable, is certainly far too general. The 'duty' upon which the accused was found in an intoxicated condition, while falling within the prohibition of the article of war, was evidently not of that character which involves the highest degree of responsibility on the part of the officer. The record shows that Lieutenant Walker, during his service of sixteen years, had never before been accused of any misconduct.

"It is abundantly shown, as well as by the records of the War Department, setting forth frequent absences on sick leave, as by the concurrent testimony of brother officers and the certificates of Army surgeons, that at the time of the commission of the offense Lieutenant Walker was, and for several years had been, suffering from a complication of diseases, which for long periods had rendered him wholly unfit for active service.

"While the charge upon which he was dismissed was pending, he applied to be ordered before a retiring board with a view to retirement for disability, but the application was suspended to await the result of the trial. In support of this application the post surgeon at Fort Lyon certified that he had served at the same post with Walker from December, 1874, to May, 1875, and again, at Fort Lyon, from July, 1877, to the date of the certificate, December 26, 1877; that Walker had frequently been under medical treatment; that he was suffering from valvular disease of the heart, and subject to frequent attacks of acute rheumatism, and that he was wholly unfit for active service. The surgeon further certified that, in his opinion, Walker would never be fit for such service, and that the diseases mentioned were contracted in the service. Prior to the commission of said offense, namely, on November 8, 1877, the colonel of his regiment had recommended that he 'be ordered before a retiring board for examination, with a view to his being retired from the service.'

"In submitting the case to the Secretary of War for the action of the President, the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army commented upon the record as follows:

"'In view of the conviviality so frequent at the season when the accused committed the offense for which he has been brought to trial and of the informal character of the duty upon which he was engaged, his misconduct, it is submitted, was much more venial than under ordinary circumstances it would be right or expedient to hold it. The case appears to be one in which considerable clemency may well be exercised; the more clearly so when the accused's ill health, apparently the result of wounds and severe service, and his honorable record, are taken into consideration.'

"General Pennypacker, the president of the court-martial, writes to the Adjutant-General of the Army, under date of March 9, 1879, recommending that Walker be restored and placed on the retired list. He says:

"'I considered at the time of his trial that his was a very hard case; that he was undoubtedly afflicted very much from exposure incident to the service. Yet, as he plead guilty, there was nothing for the court to do but the action taken by them. The circumstances surrounding the case, the time which the admitted offense was committed, the physical condition of the accused, all tend to induce me to make this recommendation as an act of justice to Mr. Walker.'"

The committee find that the amendment recommended at the last session is not incorporated in the bill, as it was introduced at this session. They therefore recommend that the bill be amended by inserting at the close thereof the following proviso:

"Provided, That the acceptance of the provisions of this act shall be a waiver of all rights, present and prospective, under the pension laws of the United States."

And they recommend that the bill with this amendment be passed.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the occasion of the amendment? If this is a meritorious soldier and he has been disabled in the line of duty, why should he not be entitled to a pension, or his survivor in case he dies?

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment was adopted by the committee at the last Congress, and the committee inserted the provision in the pending bill. I am entirely willing that the amendment shall be stricken out. It was thought by the committee, however, that placing him on the retired list was the equivalent for any relief that he might be entitled to receive under the pension laws.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand it has been the rule of the Committee on Military Affairs not to place any person upon the retired list as an officer of the Army who was at the same time drawing a pension. The retired pay is necessarily in lieu of all pension; and therefore the committee recommended this amendment. I do not remember whether I was present at the time the bill was passed upon by the committee, but I suppose it also contained another usual provision inserted in such bills by the Committee on Military Affairs to the following effect:

And provided further, That the said Walker shall not be entitled to any allowance, compensation, or anything of that kind under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think that provision is necessary at all. He has been out of the service since 1878.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all very true; but we have passed one or two bills where parties under the color of those bills got a very large amount of back pay, and the committee has ever since that time guarded that very carefully.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill simply authorizes the President to nominate him, and does not affect the proceedings of the court-martial. I cannot conceive that there is any possibility of his getting any pay for the time he was out of the service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe it has been an almost universal rule to insert such a provision, and it can do the bill no harm. Therefore I suggest the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the said Walker shall not be entitled to any compensation or allowance prior to his appointment under this act.

Mr. HARRISON. That will do. As the Senator first suggested the amendment, I could not accept it. I have no objection whatever to that amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the bill I believe proposes to put the beneficiary on the retired list. It is another instance of the process of demoralization in the Army and Navy of the United States that has been progressing with constantly accelerating ratio for the last six or eight years.

It appears from the report in this case that Mark Walker, in command of his company, was found drunk, in a state of absolute mental irresponsibility, without any extenuating circumstances. The only pretense of anything in his favor is that it was about Christmas time when everybody got drunk; and that the tendency to hilarity at that time was so extraordinary that it ought to be considered a valid excuse for the commanding officer of a company to so far forget his obligation to his country and to the oath he had taken as to become drunk himself. The proof was so clear that he plead guilty and was dismissed by a court-martial without any recommendation whatever to mercy.

I have seen it stated somewhere in the public prints that out of seventy dismissals from the service for drunkenness during the past administration, more than forty were restored by the absolute intervention of the executive power of pardon to the places from which they had been dismissed; and that was a temperance administration.

Now, Mr. President, I venture to say in the first place that no officer who has been dismissed from the service for drunkenness ought ever to be restored. It is an offense so totally inconsistent with every obligation of a soldier that when it has once been fully proved it never ought to be forgiven; and I will add further that the course that was taken by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army during the last administration did more to demoralize the morale and discipline and more to degrade the public service than a hundred defeats in open battle would have done.

I suppose, sir, that it will be superfluous to attempt to resist this additional step in the process of demoralization and degradation. I do not propose to call for the yeas and nays upon the passage of this bill, but I felt it to be incumbent upon me not to permit this bill to pass without calling attention to the fact of the extraordinary nature of the circumstances presented in the report, and protesting so far as my voice can do it against the further continuation of this demoralizing and degrading process.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am not prepared to pronounce any offense unpardonable, or to say that the offense of drunkenness, to use the very harshest term that may be applied to the offense charged against this officer, may not have such extenuating circumstances as to justify the military authorities and this body in overlooking it. The circumstances of this case, I think, furnish in an unusual degree those circumstances of extenuation and mitigation. I am not one of those who believe that an offense like this should be visited by a punishment disgraceful in itself and irremediable by any act of any public authority.

We have here the case of a soldier who at the very beginning of the war enlisted in a volunteer regiment from the State of Indiana, entered the service as a private soldier, and for his faithful services acquired the rank of captain and brevet major before the close of the war, a man who came out of the war disabled by a wound received in the bloody battle of Stone River, and who for gallant service in the volunteer army was afterwards appointed to a lieutenancy in the regular Army.

Now, sir, what were the circumstances attending this offense? The record shows that the duty in which the officer was engaged at the time he is charged with having been under the influence of liquor was the retreat of undress roll-call of his company. It further appears that it was his only offense. There is no suggestion of any habit of this kind on the part of the officer from any quarter; but being at a frontier post he yielded so far to the conviviality of a Christmas-eve occasion that at the retreat roll-call of his company he was found under the influence of liquor.

Mr. President, it is a very hard rule to say that that officer shall have no relief, that we will here to-day forget all his gallant services, forget the bloody field of Stone River and his prostrate and bleeding form upon that battle field, and the fact that he is now a helpless invalid by reason of that wound received for his country, and that this offense, committed under such circumstances, shall wipe out all such services.

Mr. President, I shall count this as a very small influence in the direction of the demoralization of the Army. I undertake to say that when such services are recognized by the Congress of the United States, and a disposition to pass over an offense as trivial as this in consideration of those services is shown, so far from demoralizing the Army we shall stimulate men to make a record such as Captain Walker made.

I do not desire to detain the Senate. Here is the recommendation of the president of the court-martial; here is the recommendation of the Secretary of War and of the Judge-Advocate-General suggesting that clemency shall be shown toward this officer in this shape. It seems to me we may permit them to judge, or if not we may judge ourselves from these facts, whether this is not one of the most meritorious cases that could possibly be brought before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I think, Mr. President, I would go as far as almost any one in the adoption of measures which should have the effect of a thorough, permanent temperance reform in this country; but it is hardly worth while for the American people to spend their time in killing flies. The evil of intemperance, to which we all object and which we would all gladly see removed, is one that can only be overcome by broader measures, by the widest and most pertinent form of statesmanship. Here is a man who had no drinking habits, who never has been intoxicated but once in his life, who has rendered extraordinary service to his country, who has evidently indulged himself in the improper use of liquor far less than multitudes of men who, deserving well of their country, have received its highest rewards; and now we are asked to condemn this man, to inflict upon him a stigma such as is affixed to hardly any other eminent, prominent, and influential public servants in the Army and in the Navy and out of the Army and out of the Navy who deserved well of their country and who have received its highest commendations.

Now, sir, to pick out this man and for this comparatively trivial offense to stamp upon him, to obliterate him from the Army, to refuse to show him any thing like mercy when there is no man who does not need mercy for some fault or other, I think would be belittling the great motives which lie at the foundation of the successful prosecution of the temperance reform in this country. I believe myself that that reform, and those who advocate it, will be stronger if in individual cases like this they hold out hope to the man who may have the objectionable habit. What chance is there, what encouragement is there for a man who has that habit to break it off, to become a respected and a useful citizen in the society where he may live and to the country which he may desire to serve, if for a comparatively trivial offense of this kind he is to be selected and made a conspicuous example of the wrath and the condemnation of the country? For one, I vote very cheerfully, and I vote as I think a consistent and an earnest temperance man, for the restoration of this gentleman to the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the effect of this bill, if I read it correctly, is to restore this person, whose name I do not remember, to precisely the same grade and precisely the same rank that he held in the Army at the time he was dismissed pursuant to the sentence of a general court-martial. That, I think, was in 1878. So then, after four years of civil life, he goes back into the Army exactly where he would have stood if like his brother officers he had been fighting the Indians and enduring the hardships of frontier service all this length of time. The thing that troubles me is not so much the question of forgiving this gentleman for whatever fault he committed, but whether it is just to the officers who were his brethren at the time he was justly dismissed, legally dismissed, to put him back over the heads of men who for more than four years have been fighting the battles of their country against the Indians—I believe there has been no other actual conflict of arms—and enduring the severities of frontier service. Is that right?

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to say to the Senator from Vermont that this bill does not put him back on the active list of the Army at all. It provides for his reappointment to the Army and to his being placed on the retired list. I do not see how that affects the rank of any one in the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see, Mr. President, whether my friend from Indiana is correct. The bill reads:

That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army are hereby suspended for the purpose of this act, and only so far as they affect Mark Walker, late a first lieutenant in the Nineteenth United States Infantry; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Mark Walker, late a first lieutenant in the United States Infantry, to the same grade and rank of first lieutenant held by him on May 13, 1878.

So much. Then comes a semicolon.

And that the said Walker shall thereupon be placed upon the retired list of the Army, provided the same shall be recommended by the retiring board.

That is to say, he goes on the retired list exactly as other officers of the Army go on the retired list, when they have been tried, inspected, and it is found that the public service requires that they should. Until that is done, exactly as every one of his brother lieutenants may go on the retired list, he is to stay in the active service. Now, it does seem to me that it is carrying forgiveness for intoxication of an Army officer while on duty a good ways, to leave him the comforts of peace and civil life for four years while his brethren are exposed to all the peril of the service on the frontier and then decorate him for that offense by putting him back exactly where he was before over their heads. That is the trouble with me.

Mr. HARRISON. If the effect of these words, "provided the same shall be recommended by the retiring board"——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Senator from Indiana proceed? ["Yes; go on!"]

Mr. HARRISON. If the effect of those words be what the Senator from Vermont supposes, I am entirely willing that they shall be stricken out of the bill, and let this bill itself provide for his retirement without reference to the action of the retiring board. Practically, however, there is nothing in the objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, what the Senator from Indiana proposes is just what I object to in this bill. I would far rather restore an Army officer to his rank in the Army on the active list where he will have a chance to show by active service that he has changed his habits and redeemed his character; but to put a man on the retired list is to exclude from that list a soldier who may have passed untarnished twenty or twenty-five years of honorable service.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? There are abundant certificates of Army surgeons showing that Mr. Walker is incapable of active service, greatly broken down by reason of wounds.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what I wished to call attention to. I know now and I see in my mind's eye a captain who served through the war, a graduate of West Point, who is a captain in the Army, disabled after long service, with medical certificates to show that if he is retained at his present post he will undoubtedly die of his wounds, and all he prays for is to be put on the retired list. He is now far off, and has been there in some of the most difficult service of the Army among the Indians. All that he prays for from this Government is to be put on the retired list. He has passed through all his life without blemish, without any court-martial, or any accusation. It seemed to me when that case was presented to me that it was a very proper one, and that it might be easy for me to get him put on the retired list; but I was told at once that it could not be done; there are only so many vacancies on the list, and it is probable that certain retirements by retiring officers of the highest grade will fill up the list to three hundred, and this poor captain must remain where he is.

The injustice of this kind of legislation is very great indeed; and one of the objections I had to the bill that passed yesterday was that General Grant, under the language of the bill as it stood during the day, would have crowded off some worthy soldier who had served with honor and fidelity in the regular line during many years and looked to the retired list as the home and refuge for his disability. But that was amended upon my motion so as to make his case an exception, and to add it to the number of three hundred; and on account of the high and eminent services of General Grant I was very glad indeed to vote for him after his bill was so amended that his retirement did not count against the officer of the regular Army who is now earning his retired pension.

Without knowing anything about the merits of this case, and with a willingness to pardon this offense committed four years ago under peculiar circumstances, the objection I have to the bill is that it places this officer who had been cashiered in a position where an officer who had served faithfully without fault cannot get. You must either enlarge without limit the list of retired officers, or you must cease to put, by acts of legislation, these hard cases on the retired list to crowd off officers who have served honorably, without fault, during twenty or twenty-five years of service.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the bill be recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES BURKE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now ask the Senate to take up the bill that was informally laid aside at my suggestion. I do not wish it to be prejudiced by my desire to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be called up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke. It proposes to appropriate $180.40 to enable the Secretary of War to reimburse to James Burke, superintendent of the national cemetery at Salisbury, North Carolina, the amount of a judgment, costs, and disbursements, which judgment was obtained against Burke in the circuit court of Pulaski County, Kentucky, at a suit of William H. Logan, for an alleged trespass by Burke, committed while in discharge of his duty as superintendent, which Burke defended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Secretary had not finished reading the report when I asked that the bill be laid aside. Let the Secretary proceed with and finish the reading of the report.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of this report will occupy the residue of the morning hour. Does anybody desire that the reading be finished? The Senator from Vermont has investigated the case. The reading will be dispensed with, if it is not desired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better be read through. I have not investigated it; I have only satisfied myself that I was mistaken in one point.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to my friend from Iowa who has charge of the bill which is to come up at the close of the morning hour that he give the Calendar half an hour longer, as was done yesterday. It will not delay the passage of his bill at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like very much to accommodate my friend from Rhode Island, but I have already committed myself partly to the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK,] who wishes to make a few observations upon a topic of great interest to his people, occupying but a few minutes, and I am afraid if I agree to extend the Calendar half an hour something may interfere whereby we may not be able to finish the appropriation bill to-day, which it is very important we should dispose of.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will allow the half hour. The next bill on the Calendar is one from his own committee which is very important. It is in relation to permanent annual appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the report will be continued.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow this matter to be concluded—it is about half through—as I want it disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the report will be continued.

The Acting Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was submitted the bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke, respectfully submit the following report:

This case was before this committee (see Senate bill No. 1771) during the Forty-fifth Congress, third session, and report thereon (724) was submitted by Mr. BUTLER on behalf of the committee, from which the following is adopted:

"The case is stated by the letter from the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, as follows:

"A.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, December 18, 1878.

"The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the United States Senate a communication from the Quartermaster-General, dated December 11, 1878, transmitting a request from Superintendent James Burke for reimbursement of costs of suit entered against him by W. H. Logan for alleged trespass, together with copies of papers relating to the subject.

"The letter of the Quartermaster-General states the facts of the case, and concludes as follows:

"'I think that a wrong has been done Burke under the color of law, and that his claim is just; but I know of no appropriation under control of the War Department which could be properly drawn upon to indemnify him. I suggest, therefore, that the papers in the case be referred to Congress, with a recommendation for favorable consideration.'

"Concurring in the views of the Quartermaster-General, the case is respectfully submitted to Congress, with recommendation that an act be passed to reimburse Superintendent Burke for the costs of the suit and attorney's fees, amounting, as appears from accompanying sworn statement, to $180.40.

"Respectfully submitted,

"GEO. W. MCCRARY,
"Secretary of War.

"The PRESIDENT of the United States Senate.

"B.

"LOGAN'S CROSS ROADS, KENTUCKY,
"October 12, 1875.

"SIR: Respectfully referring to letter of September 20, (O. N. C. 2363, '75,) in regard to the difficulty between Mr. Logan and Mr. Burke, I have the honor to submit the following report:

"The colored laborer was sent by Mr. Burke to whitewash the picket fence on the north side of the cemetery, along by the outside of which was a growth of blackberry and other bushes. In order to do this the laborer cut down alongside of the fence a path about four feet wide, most of which was on Mr. Logan's land. The act was, I believe, done for no other purpose except to make it possible to whitewash the fence on the outside. The value of the blackberry briers is nothing; in fact, it is really an advantage to Mr. Logan's land to have them cleared off, and is so considered by every one in the neighborhood.

"The suit was brought on account of a personal enmity of Mr. Logan against the superintendent. In incidental conversation with the former, he the same as admitted to me such to be the fact. The quarrel has been of long standing, and the law has had to settle two cases already, both of which were decided in the favor of the superintendent, showing that the latter was considered to be the injured party in both cases.

"In this matter advantage was taken at once of the trespass to bring suit.

"Mr. Logan has the general reputation of being continually in litigation and quarrel with neighbors. I have endeavored to find out about the whole trouble before this time, by conversation with both parties concerned, and with others knowing to the facts, and I am satisfied that the fault rests almost entirely on Mr. Logan in the matters and troubles. His effort is to embarrass the superintendent and make his stay in the vicinity unpleasant. The superintendent has a good reputation and good credit both here and at Somerset, and I believe is attentive to his official duties. At his request I made an offer to Mr. Logan to leave the amount of damage done to the arbitration of two disinterested persons, but the offer was refused, the reason being given by Mr. Logan that the question of boundary on the cemetery front is also involved. He claims that he owns a strip of land along the front of the cemetery and between the cemetery boundary and the Columbia and Somerset road, on which there has been continual trespass by the superintendent. The deed to the United States, however, states as explicitly as is possible that each of the front corner-stones and the front boundary-line between them is on the line of the road referred to, so that there then can be no space between the road and the cemetery property.

"The suit was not called up this session, but was set for the next circuit court in April of next year.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"C. M. CLARK,
"C. E. Q. M. Department.

"SIR: I have the honor to transmit certain papers relative to a suit for trespass brought against the superintendent of the national cemetery at Logan's Cross Roads, Pulaski County, Kentucky, and to request that you will direct suitable counsel be employed to defend the superintendent in the same, as well as the interests of the United States.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"WM. W. BELKNAP,
"Secretary of War.

"To the honorable the ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
"Washington, October 29, 1875.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, together with a copy of a report from Captain A. F. Rockwell, assistant quartermaster United States Army, in charge of national cemeteries, and a letter of Major-General Rufus Ingalls, Acting Quartermaster-General, referring that report to you, and requesting that the subject of the report be submitted to me, and asking that the necessary measures be taken to defend the suit brought against the superintendent of the national cemetery at Logan's Cross-Roads, Pulaski County, Kentucky, which request is referred to me by you. The suit is one of trespass against the defendant for entering upon lands of the plaintiff, and the damages are laid at $60.

"From the statement of the case, I do not see how the title of the United States to the cemetery grounds can be brought in question, and the cost to the United States of defending the action would be much greater than the damage claimed. I do not think, therefore, that it is expedient to instruct the United States attorney to appear for the defense.

"The inclosures are herewith returned.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
"Attorney-General.

"Hon. W. W. BELKNAP, Secretary of War.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, D. C., December 2, 1875.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 29, 1875, transmitting certain papers relative to a request of this Department for counsel to defend the superintendent of the national cemetery in the suit for trespass instituted against him in the discharge of his official duties.

"The amount of damages claimed, it seems to me, is immaterial. This Department assumes the action of the superintendent and desires to protect him in the impending suit, and I have therefore again to request that you direct suitable counsel to be employed to defend him in the case.

"The title to the cemetery grounds is not involved in the suit, although it seems from the report of the civil engineer (herewith) that the question of boundary may arise.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"WM. W. BELKNAP,
"Secretary of War.

"The Hon. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., April 26, 1877.

"SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a communication of Superintendent James Burke, of Logan's Cross-Roads National Cemetery, requesting information as to the action taken in the matter of a certain suit against him for trespass now pending.

"This case was first submitted to the Department of Justice October 26, 1875.

"The Attorney-General, in a letter dated October 29, 1875, expressed the opinion that it would not be expedient for the United States to defend the suit, as the cost of defense would exceed the damages claimed.

"The War Department objected to this view of the case, and renewed its request for the Department of Justice to defend the suit. (See letter of Secretary Belknap of December 2, 1875.) On August 10, 1876, the attention of the Department of Justice was invited to the matter, and information was requested as to what action had been taken in the premises.

"In reply the Attorney-General stated that no action had been taken, and requested a copy of the plaintiff's declaration.

"This was furnished September 22, 1876, and nothing further has been heard from the Department of Justice on the subject.

"It would seem to be due to the superintendent, no less than to the War Department, that some action should be taken in the premises, and that forthwith.

"I inclose an extract from a report of Colonel N. H. Davis, inspector-general, on the Logan's Cross Roads National Cemetery. I concur with Colonel Davis in regard to the propriety of the United States defending the suit.

"The alleged trespass occurred while the superintendent was attending to his official duties. The cost of defense may, perhaps, be more than the damages claimed; but the superintendent, out of his small compensation, can afford to pay neither, nor does it seem right that he should be compelled to.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"M. C. MEIGS,
"Quartermaster-General, Brevet Major-General, United States Army.

"The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

"NEW YORK CITY, October 23, 1876.

"SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith my report of an inspection of the Logan's Cross-Roads National Cemetery, Kentucky, second-class, inspected October 7, 1876.

* * * * * * *

"An unfriendly feeling exists between Mr. W. H. Logan and Burke, the superintendent. The former owns the land adjoining the cemetery, and seems disposed to dictate and annoy from an overbearing spirit, and in mean and petty ways. Burke seems very independent and ill-disposed to conciliate.

"For having the briers and brush cut away so as to allow the Government fence to be painted and whitewashed, Logan has sued him for $60 trespass and $60 damages. The act produced no damage, but rather a benefit to Logan's land. The trespass is such only in law, or technically, but not really. The case was postponed at the term of the circuit court of Pulaski County last spring to the fall term, at which term, recently, it was not reached. Burke asks that counsel by the United States to defend him in the suit, and has made application through or to Captain A. F. Rockwell, assistant quartermaster, at Washington, on duty connected with the national cemeteries, for counsel. No reply received.

"I think he justly deserves protection in this matter, and the aid of counsel to be furnished by the United States.

"The INSPECTOR-GENERAL,

"Washington, District of Columbia.

"(Through headquarters Division of the Atlantic.)

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
"Washington, May 5, 1877.

"SIR: I have received your letter of the 3d instant, referring to former letters from the War Department to the Department of Justice, relative to a suit brought by W. H. Logan against James Burke, superintendent of Logan's Cross Roads National Cemetery, for trespass and damages, and transmitting a letter of the 26th ultimo, from the Quartermaster-General, with two inclosures, touching the matter. You request that the Department of Justice will take measures for the defense of Superintendent Burke. Upon examining the report of the inspector-general, N. H. Davis, I am of opinion that the United States should not assume the responsibility of the act of Superintendent Burke, and should not defend the case for him. According to that report Burke was on bad terms with Logan, and was 'very independent and ill-disposed to conciliate.' Under the influence of this feeling, he entered upon Logan's ground and cut the briers and brush away so that the Government fence might be painted. For this act he is now sued in trespass by Logan. Whether the act did or did not produce any damage to Logan's land, it was a clear violation of his right of property, for which Logan is entitled to recover at least nominal damages. There was no justification for this trespass on the part of Burke. No question is involved having any reference to the title of the United States to its lands. While it is stated that 'the alleged trespass occurred while the superintendent was attending to his official duties,' in the letter of the Quartermaster-General, the facts show that he had no official duty which entitled him to enter upon the land of a private citizen and to disturb the shrubbery there growing, whether wild or otherwise. It is not for a person thus intruding to say that he has benefited the land of the owner. The owner is entitled to the possession and enjoyment of his property without such disturbance.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"CHAS. DEVENS,
"Attorney-General.

"Hon. GEORGE W. MCCRARY, Secretary of War."

The case was tried in the circuit court of Pulaski County, Kentucky, at its September term, 1877, and the transcript shows the following to have been the verdict of the jury: "We of the jury find for the plaintiff one cent in damages," which verdict, it appears, according to the laws of Kentucky, carried the costs.

The transcript shows plaintiff's costs	$114 85
And the defendant's cost	40 55
Total costs	155 40

Much the larger portion of this cost bill is made up of witness fees, the witness fees of plaintiff amounting to $85, and of defendant to $33. The said Burke makes affidavit that he paid $25 as attorney's fees. This the committee consider reasonable.

As the case was tried in plaintiff's own county, and as the verdict is for purely nominal damages, the committee have no doubt that the trespass was purely technical. The removal of briers, a bush of which Pulaski County has doubtless enough and to spare, is estimated by a jury of the vicinage acquainted with briers at one cent, and the one-cent estimate was clearly because, upon proof of trespass, the law demanded some damages.

The suit was manifestly a "spite suit."

The officer was doing his duty faithfully, protecting the home of the dead, and hence should be relieved from the payment of costs for doing his duty.

The case was again before the Senate, see bill S. No. 952, Report 138, and was passed by the Senate.

Whereupon the committee report back Senate bill No. 138 without amendment and recommend its passage. In making this recommendation, the committee have considered the character of the business in which Mr. Burke was engaged, the necessity for the removal of the briers in the protection of the fence, the absurdity of the claim for damages, the verdict of the jury, and all the surrounding circumstances, and do not design this as a precedent, unless a special and exceptional case like it were presented.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has been reached and proceedings under the Anthony rule are ended.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I rose to press upon the Senate the consideration of the bill to form a commission to consider the tariff. I understand the Senator from Iowa has moved the consideration of a deficiency appropriation bill. I do not think it proper to antagonize an appropriation bill as according to the practice of the body such bills have precedence over other measures; but after the conclusion of that bill, I shall ask that the tariff commission bill be taken up.

Mr. VOORHEES. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa,

I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next after the morning hour I shall ask the consideration of Senate bill No. 842, being a bill authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, on which I shall desire to submit a few remarks at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair informs the Senator from Iowa that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] gave notice that he would submit some remarks to-day after the morning hour, and according to the usual courtesy, after this bill is submitted to the Senate, it will be laid aside temporarily for the Senator from Nebraska to make his remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to state to the Chair that the Senator from Nebraska had informed me that he desired to submit some observations this morning, and that I proposed to give way to him, consenting that the deficiency bill be laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill just taken up on the motion of the Senator from Iowa will be laid aside informally.

DEPOSITS FOR LAND SURVEYS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. Van Wyck on the 26th of January:

Whereas the records in the General Land Office show great abuses and frauds in the surveys allowed by deposits under sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed through the Commissioner of the General Land Office to instruct the surveyors-general to approve no more applications for surveys under the deposit system, and that all proceedings be suspended under applications already approved until further action by Congress, so that contracts unlawfully procured may not be recognized as valid.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands make investigation as to the nature and extent of such alleged abuses and frauds; what redress may be had for any loss sustained by the Government and what legislation is necessary to prevent a recurrence in the future.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, by the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa, and with the permission of the Senate, I propose to submit a few remarks relative to the resolution which I proposed in this body a few weeks since in regard to improprieties, abuses, and frauds, in the surveys of the public lands.

The act of 1871 allowing settlers on the public domain to have the townships surveyed in which they lived so that their boundaries could be definitely fixed, by depositing with a United States depositary the estimated cost of such survey, usually $600 for a township, receiving therefor certificates of deposit which could be used to pay for land pre-empted in the township so surveyed, was intended as a beneficent measure, but grew into great abuse and greater frauds when, in 1879, the law was amended so that such certificates could be assigned by indorsement and used in payment for the pre-emption and homestead of any Government lands.

Before 1879 the enterprising raiders were restricted by the clause making certificates good only in the township surveyed, so they contrived a scheme to widen the field of operations. Under the guise of regard for the settlers, they appeared in Congress and imposed upon its credulity, and by the miracle which generally secures the passage of any measure under which is concealed plunder, the bill was scarcely challenged. One feature in the record of its passage from the present standpoint appears significant.

The original bill 801 was introduced in the Senate March 25, 1878; reported from Committee on Public Lands April 24; passed May 1; sent to House and referred to Committee on the Public Lands May 1. That committee reported the bill May 11, amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the timber-culture bill, believing that would be more for the benefit of settlers. Thus amended it passed the House the same day. A proper inquiry then and now—why was not the bill as amended returned to the Senate for its action?

This defeat made the schemers more shrewd, and waiting until the next, which was the third and last, session of that Congress and near its close, not until the 27th of February, as the session closed on the 4th of March, they reappeared in the House and the Speaker announced that Senate bill 801 had been lost and an order was entered that a copy should be requested from the Senate. So much engrossed with other matters was every member that not one of the Public Land Committee corrected the Speaker with the information that, although effectually buried by the House, the bill certainly was not lost. A copy of the Senate bill was obtained and on February 28 promptly passed. Already organized, the plotters at once extended their plan of operations with dummies, straw men, and collusion with some of the surveyors-general.

These surveys are confined to lands "not mineral or reserved," intending to benefit settlers, and would be most used in agricultural States and Territories.

Before this amendment the deposits were small, especially in agricultural States.

With money at command these ardent friends of the settlers increased the deposits, particularly where accommodating surveyors-general were found, and the records show some, like Barkis, were willing. They sold the certificates at 90 and 95, had the surveying contracts made to themselves or in their interest, got the work done for 40 or 50 per cent. of contract price. Adding 10 per cent. discount on certificates, the profit is 50 per cent., while the loss to the Government is nearly the whole amount, for many of the surveys are of no value where the lands are inaccessible and worthless, and sometimes no surveys in fact made.

These deposits, in previous years of small amount, swelled during the last year to about two million dollars, and every day increasing.

Is every department of this Government honey-combed with kindred corruption?

The Post-Office was raided, and one equally outrageous appears in the Land Department.

Like the Post-Office, the Land Department produced this monstrosity of villainy under a remarkably pure administration. If more time had been spent in detecting thefts and robbers and less in decimal fractions, the differential calculus, and the orbits of the heavenly bodies, the Treasury would not have suffered so much detriment.

These frauds in the Interior Department are particularly painful, for at that time it was enjoying the distinction of possessing all there was æsthetic in the paradise of civil service. There the lily and sunflower of American politics were scattering their brightest hues and most fragrant perfumes.

Daily and monthly reports were regularly made, the annual expenditure of a few thousands was swelling into two millions, still the æsthetic chief and his pinks of civil-service reform must not be disturbed in their consideration of abstractions and theories.

The present Commissioner, Judge McFarland, having some knowledge of the value of money and the enormity of crime, soon after his introduction into office began to have glimpses of the "ways that are dark," and September 5, 1881, issued to the surveyors-general a circular warning them of the great frauds being perpetrated, and directing the manner of detecting, so as to "annul fraudulent contracts."

The Commissioner in his report says:

It is believed the practical results of said act of March 3, 1879, have been to cause the survey of vast areas of land of no present and perhaps of no prospective value, and the surrender of valuable lands in payment for such surveys.

The records also conclusively show where the surveyors-general must have been criminally negligent or ignorant, or in collusion with this band of plunderers. They had operated with much success in States and Territories where townships of good land could be surveyed, but the great object was to survey worthless lands, and then have the opportunity to use the certificates where lands are good.

There would be no profit to survey largely in New Mexico, Colorado, Nevada, and Wyoming unless the certificates could be used in other States and Territories. Notwithstanding the circular of Commissioner McFarland, many of the surveyors-general have continued making contracts. Colorado has added $180,000 since the close of the fiscal year, making for that State about six hundred thousand dollars for eighteen months. To show how recklessly these frauds are perpetrated, the same men appear as contractors in Arizona, California, Idaho, Nebraska, and Nevada. A California chief reaches from the Missouri to the Pacific. Late in the year they invaded Nebraska from the west, well knowing its settlers did not invoke their presence to obtain additional facilities for surveying, and also knowing that secrecy was important to prevent suspicions.

The statute allows deposits in any United States depository. There is one at Omaha, but better to conceal their operations they send five hundred miles east and make all the deposits at Chicago; then the contracts are made to this wandering band who are so zealous to protect the interests of the settlers on the public domain.

The surveyor-general of Colorado realized that some explanation was necessary for the absorption of half a million. He says:

This increase is due mainly to the extensions of the different lines of railway into regions heretofore almost inaccessible except by pack-trains, rendering every acre of arable land valuable.

If all the surveys were actually made for which he approved contracts, it is also true that the provisions and equipments for surveying parties were transported by pack-trains over the townships to be surveyed. The following table of figures taken from the reports of several surveyors-general will illustrate and sustain these charges:

While the general appropriations for surveys of late have been too small, yet Congress did not intend nor will it sanction the delegation of its power to an irresponsible syndicate for the expenditure of millions, which is the practical result.

The present system is sadly deficient—the appointment of surveyor-general without any regard to his knowledge of the rudiments of the position, with no idea of the mode or correctness of surveys.

Often the appropriations are farmed out to deputies who are not surveyors, to a few favorites, who expect to retain one-half the appropriations as profits, making the whole system a sort of political hospital, without any regard to efficient and economical expenditure.

One object of the resolution was to effect a remodeling of the entire plan; also to have annulled contracts that might be illegal, not of course to impair those made in good faith. Believing these subjects may be more easily reached and no injustice done any one, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with power to make full investigation.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to delay the Senator from Iowa with the appropriation bill he has in charge, but I should like to say a word or two upon this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from Colorado is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado for a moment or two.

Mr. TELLER. The complaint made by the honorable Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK,] so far as it alludes to Colorado is not well taken. No complaint can be made in regard to that State, although a very large amount of the country has been surveyed. The appropriations have been so utterly below what they ought to have been for the purpose of surveying, that State having an area of 105,500 square miles, that the settlers and parties interested in having the public lands surveyed have taken advantage of the statute referred to.

To show that in Colorado there has been an abuse of the statute, the honorable Senator calls attention to the limited number of acres of land that have been entered and paid for. If he had been as familiar with the wants of the people of that State as the Senators from the State are, he would not have cited that as an illustration. Two-thirds of the State of Colorado, at least, is a mineral region. Very little of that can be entered either as homesteads or under the pre-emption act. In every section of it, pretty much, parties are making applications under the mineral law for the entry of mineral claims, both of gold and silver. It is as essential to the complete description of these claims that the country should be surveyed as it is that it should be surveyed where they enter agricultural land, and therefore there has been a necessity for the survey of all that region of the State in which this money has been expended.

While townships and counties may be surveyed as the wants of the people require a survey, yet there is very probably not a single quarter section of the whole country which will ever be taken under the pre-emption act, but hundreds of miners are there locating their finds, locating their claims; and when they make their application for a patent, of which the gentleman has taken no consideration whatever, or when they make their location without reference to the patent, it is a necessity that they should have a township line, a section corner, and all other data of that character.

In Colorado there is no complaint by the people. The people have not been wronged, neither has the General Government been wronged. If there has been frauds and swindles in Nebraska the honorable Senator may speak for Nebraska. He has no right to speak for Colorado.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. In the consideration of the bill I suggest that it be read by paragraphs, and that the reported amendments be acted upon as they are reached in regular order in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be observed if there is no objection. The bill will be read, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the course of the reading.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "public printing and binding," in line 18, after the word "work," to strike out "four" and insert "six" before "hundred thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, and the Departments, and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For rebuilding the revenue steamer W. P. Fessenden with iron hull, (in addition to the sum of $75,000 appropriated for the purpose under the act of March 3, 1881,) $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 28, after the words "United States," to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifty-five;" so as to read:

For freight on bullion and coin between the mints and assay offices and on coin from the mints to the offices of the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 36, 37, and 38, in the following words:

For constructing, repairing, enlarging, and renting vaults and safes for the use of the treasurers and assistant treasurers of the United States, $75,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For constructing, repairing, and enlarging the vaults and safes for the use of the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, California, including pay of one additional watchman, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 24:

For constructing an additional vault in the mint at San Francisco, California, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 58, after the word "Department," to insert "outside of the city of Washington;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, light, water, and miscellaneous items required by the janitors and firemen in the proper care of the buildings, furniture, and heating apparatus, such as brooms, mops, brushes, buckets, wheelbarrows, shovels, saws, hatchets, and hammers, for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the city of Washington, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after lines 65 to 70, to strike out the following words:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Bureau of steam engineering:

For the purchase of plates and material for boilers for ships designated by the Secretary of the Navy as needed for immediate service and requiring new boilers for safety and efficiency, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," after line 75, to insert:

For collecting and subsisting Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 78, to insert:

For support and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 84 and 85, in the following words:

For support of Indians in the central superintendency, to purchase seed-wheat and corn, $3,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

For support of Indians within the limits of the late central superintendency, including the Modocs and the Nez Percés of Joseph's band, made necessary by failure of crops, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 89, to insert:

For support and civilization of the Navajoes, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 143, to insert:

NATIONAL MUSEUM.

To expedite the work of constructing the exhibition-cases in the new building for the National Museum during the present fiscal year, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 180.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out lines 179 and 180.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding was that the bill should be proceeded with and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations considered first, after which the bill will be open to general amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Senator from Iowa to ask that the bill be read by paragraphs, and amendments to it considered as the bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding was that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations should be considered as the bill was read. That is the usual course.

Mr. ALLISON. After the amendments of the committee have been acted on, any portion of the bill will still be open to amendments.

Mr. CONGER. That involves the necessity of going back.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 180, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

For the expenses incurred in repairing damages done to the court-house building in the city of Washington during the storm of June 27, 1881, $1,830.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 186, to insert:

Senate:

For furniture and repairs, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 188, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 190, to insert:

To pay D. F. Murphy for reporting the debates, &c., of the special session of the Senate in 1881, under resolution of the Senate of May 11, 1881, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 195, to insert:

To pay the clerk to the superintendent of the document-room, under resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1881, from the 1st day of January to the 30th day of June, 1882, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 201, to insert:

To pay the assistant clerk to the Committee on Pensions, under resolution of the Senate of January 30, 1882, from the 20th of February to the 30th of June, 1882, $520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 206, to insert:

To pay the telephone operator for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 209, to insert:

To pay the six messengers of the Senate, under resolution of the Senate of February 15, 1882, from February 15 to June 30, 1882, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, $3,240, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 216, to insert:

To pay Mrs. Lucy Burch, widow of John C. Burch, deceased, late Secretary of the Senate, the sum of $3,048; also to Virginia Banks, widow of Andrew D. Banks, deceased, late keeper of the stationery of the Senate, the sum of $1,051.22; also to Mrs. Mary E. Manly, mother of W. H. Manly, deceased, late a page in the Senate, the sum of $360, under resolution of the Senate of February 20, 1882; in all, $4,459.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 227, to insert:

To pay the necessary expenses attending the funeral arrangements, and so forth, of Hon. James A. Garfield, deceased, late President of the United States, and of Hon. Ambrose E. Burnside, deceased, late a Senator of the United States, the sum of $6,000, the vouchers therefor to be examined and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 235, to insert:

To pay the clerks to the committees of the Senate not receiving annual salaries who held such positions on the 4th day of March, 1881, the usual per diem compensation from the 5th of March to the 18th of March, 1881, both inclusive, under resolution of the Senate of March 18, 1881, $2,268.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "District of Columbia," in line 264, after the word "Capitol," to insert "and the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia;" and in line 266, after the word "furnish," to strike out "him" and insert "them;" so as to make the clause read:

To reconstruct the Jefferson school-building on the present site, with fire-proof corridors and staircases, the sum to be received from the insurers of said building and furniture, namely, $48,664.21, which, when received, shall be paid into the Treasury specially to be used for this purpose only, and the additional sum of $21,335.79, making, in all, $70,000: Provided, That the plans and specifications for said building shall be prepared by the Architect of the Capitol and the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, to which end the commissioners of the District shall furnish them the necessary means, and that said building shall be constructed by the commissioners in strict conformity therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Executive Mansion," after line 297, to insert:

For contingent expenses of the Executive Office, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause to be paid the rent for the second and third stories of the building situated on the northeast corner of F and Tenth streets northwest, in the city of Washington, and occupied by a part of the force of the Surgeon-General's Office, for the fiscal year 1882; said payment to be made out of the appropriation for contingent expenses for the office of the Surgeon-General for said fiscal year, and at the rate of $1,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill is concluded, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations have been acted on.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee also propose a few other amendments not printed. After line 109, I move to insert:

For the payment of the clerks and laborers in the Patent Office for the remainder of the current fiscal year, $5,230.49; and to enable the Secretary of the Interior to increase the clerical force of said office for the remainder of the current fiscal year, $4,769.51; in all $10,000: Provided, That the compensation of the additional clerks herein authorized shall be fixed by the Secretary, not to exceed, however, a greater rate than $1,200 per annum for each clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it would not be well to put in the RECORD, if for no other purpose for the use of the House and the conference, the letter of the Commissioner of Patents relating to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for making that suggestion. I will ask to have the letter of the Commissioner of Patents and the accompanying communications printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

The letter and accompanying communications are as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 16th instant, relative to the necessity for a deficiency appropriation for the payment of salaries of clerks and laborers in the Patent Office during the present fiscal year.

The subject is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1882.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 16, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, of date 13th instant, in which he sets forth the necessity for a deficiency appropriation for salaries of clerks and laborers in his office during the current fiscal year.

For the reasons stated, I am of the opinion that the appropriation should be made, and beg leave to recommend that the accompanying papers be transmitted to Congress for its consideration.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. BELL, Acting Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to herewith transmit a deficiency estimate of $10,000 for salaries for clerks and laborers in this office for the present fiscal year, and to request that you will transmit the same to Congress with your recommendation thereof.

The estimates made for the present fiscal year were based upon the business of the office for the year 1879 and such part of the year 1880 as had then transpired. There is now an actual deficiency, with the force employed and the salaries paid, of $5,230.49, if said force is retained until the end of the present fiscal year. The increase in the business of the office during the last calendar year made it necessary to employ a larger force than was contemplated in the appropriation therefor. The excess in the receipts of the office for the year 1881 over those for 1880 was $103,980.57; the number of applications received during said time in excess of those received during the former year was 3,047. The increase in the business still continues. The receipts for the month of January, 1882, exceed those for the month of January, 1881, by the sum of $14,182.58, and for the first eleven days of the present month over those for the same time in the corresponding month of 1881, $4,618.65.

There is not a sufficient force employed in the office to promptly and properly perform the work it is called upon to do, and for which the parties furnishing the work are ready to pay. It will therefore be impossible, without serious detriment to the work of the office, to discharge any of its employés, which it will be necessary to do unless a sufficient appropriation is made to continue the present force.

The estimate I herewith submit is in excess of the actual deficiency, and is made larger than such deficiency, in order that I may add to the force a sufficient number of persons to bring up the work now somewhat in arrears.

I think, with the appropriation of the above-mentioned sum, which will provide for the continuance of the present force, and for such additions thereto as may be necessary, I shall be able to properly transact the business submitted to the office, unless the increase hereafter should be greater than during the past twelve months.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. M. MARBLE, Commissioner.

Hon. S. J. KIRKWOOD, Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move between lines 71 and 72, immediately after the heading "Interior Department," to insert:

For stationery for the Department of the Interior and its several bureaus and offices, $4,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have any communication printed with the amendment now offered?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir. The information in regard to it is found in Executive Document No. 33 from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Containing the deficiency estimates?

Mr. ALLISON. It is one of the regular deficiencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, after line 70, to insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For mileage of officers of the Army when traveling under orders, $20,000.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not object to the amendment, though I did not agree to it because there was no reason given to the committee why that deficiency should exist. The Department says it does exist, the only reason given being because we gave them some $30,000 less than they asked for in their estimates; but they have furnished no evidence showing how the money has been expended, or why the deficiency exists, and why they did not keep within the appropriation. The effort of Congress has been steadily to require all the Departments, in regard to mileage and all like matters, to be as economical as possible; and the idea of all the Departments is to spend all they please up to the amount estimated for and demand a deficiency without giving any reason for it.

If the money they have expended for mileage was expended in carrying out the necessary orders of the War Department, and enabling the officers of the Army to go from one point to another to carry out any purpose necessary for the good of the service, then the deficiency is necessary; but if part of it, say $1,000, (I use this as an illustration,) was expended for mileage to enable General Sheridan to come here and have his father-in-law, General Rucker, appointed Quartermaster-General, to be retired in three days, then that is not a legitimate deficiency. If $1,000 or $10,000 is to be expended by General Sherman to carry his whole staff all over the country under the pretense of making inspections, to hire steamboats, palace cars, and every thing else, and then call for a deficiency, because they see fit to do that, it is not a legitimate expenditure.

I desire to know how the money we gave them was expended. They do not condescend to tell us; they simply say, "we have spent the money." There is no evidence as to how it was spent, for whom it was spent; but simply a defiance of Congress in every effort to keep down expenditures by spending all they please for any purpose they please, using in eight months what we gave them for twelve. I deny the right of the Secretary of War, the General of the Army, or anybody else to carry their officials over the country in palace cars under the pretense that they are making inspections. I deny the right of General Sheridan to come here and have a man appointed Quartermaster-General of the Army seventy-two years of age, adding $15,000 or $20,000 to the expenses of the Government, out of the taxpayers of the country, and then charge mileage for himself and his secretaries or others, if he has done that, out of the mileage provided for the Army. I deny that that is legitimate. Surely Congress has the power to say what shall be expended for mileage, and that the Department should keep within the appropriation; or, if they do not, they should tell us what exigency has arisen that requires them to exceed it. I do not know that improper expenditures have been made, but I believe they have, or the money would not be all gone.

Why are all the distinguished gentlemen now invited to the Garfield memorial or ceremonial on Monday? I understand from the papers that they are all invited, and of course they will all be entitled to mileage. By what authority is that done? They have no right to it. Senators understand that there is a constant struggle between the representatives of the people and the Executive Departments of the Government to see who shall control the money of the people; the Departments do not condescend nine times out of ten even to tell us how the money has gone. It is well enough for the Army officials to come here on Monday at their own expense, but when we appropriate money to pay mileage for necessary work, what authority has the Secretary of War or the General of the Army, or any one else, to take that money and pay it to these gentlemen as their guests?

Mr. BUTLER. Was there any statement in regard to it before the committee?

Mr. BECK. None at all; and while we have these expenses to pay the legitimate service will suffer, because a large proportion of this money has very likely, or for aught we know, been spent for illegitimate purposes. I desire to enter my protest against voting in ignorance of the facts. I refuse, therefore, to agree to this item of appropriation.

I do not like to talk about these matters, but it is a fact shown by the records that large expenditures which this Congress would not sanction, and many things that could not have been done, are done under the guise of mileage and other things. I expect the money demanded will have to be given, but we ought to require careful investigation by the Committee on Military Affairs in regard to these matters, and we ought to require a careful examination specially, in order to see that the Executive Departments do not needlessly defy Congress by using money for purposes not intended, and then force us, in order to carry out legitimate purposes, to give them more money, for they are our servants and not our masters, and they should obey us and not force us to do what they want done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire a vote on the amendment?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; I believe I shall not insist on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection. It is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think after the statement of the Senator from Kentucky I ought to make one observation at least in reply. If the Senator's argument has any force at all, it is an arraignment of the officials who expend this money.

Mr. BECK. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know, but I venture without knowing to state that it certainly cannot be that gentlemen who are invited here are paid mileage, or that General Sheridan coming here upon a private errand of his own, if he did so come, would charge the Government with mileage for that. I think the Senator from Kentucky must be wide of the mark in reference to his facts. If those facts be true, of course it is an abuse of the provision of law which authorizes Army officers traveling under orders upon duty to receive mileage while so traveling.

But this mileage matter is one that is very difficult to arrange; it is even difficult to estimate for. Why? Because every head of a department in the Army has authority to swell the account for mileage. The head of the Department, the Secretary of War, has that authority; the General of the Army has the authority. Suppose, for example, that General Sheridan, commanding the Department of the Missouri, or whatever may be the style of that department, shall order General Terry to go to Fort Assiniboin, if you please, away on the Upper Missouri; General Terry is bound to go there; and he must while on that service, under the law, be entitled to receive mileage to cover his traveling expenses. So, if the general in command in Texas, if you please, order an officer to go up and down the Rio Grande, incurring large expenditures, the expenditures must be paid by the Government.

It is impossible for the Secretary of War or for the General of the Army or any officer here to say just how much these expenditures will be for any given year. Last year the expenses were $247,000. We appropriated for this year $200,000. In the deficiency estimates, which will be found in Executive Document No. 33, the Army ask of us $52,000 as a deficiency for this year. Upon inquiry and upon receipt of information from the Pay Office of the Army, where these accounts are settled, we are told that there is no fund now to pay the mileage of officers. Therefore we have inserted in this bill the small sum of $20,000 to bridge over the time intervening between this and when the general deficiency bill shall be presented in order that these accounts may be settled and paid.

Of course, if abuses exist, as stated by the Senator from Kentucky, they ought to be remedied, and I have no doubt upon inquiry we can get a full statement of the expenditures for the mileage of officers during the current year. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. BECK. All I desire to say further is that if General Terry is ordered to any point in the West, or any other officer is ordered on duty, he ought to be paid mileage; but they avow that they have expended in eight months all that was allowed them for twelve months. The money will be all gone by the 1st day of March, and they have not condescended to tell us how that money was expended. Was it not their duty, when Congress said $200,000 would be enough for the fiscal year, for them to show urgent reasons why it has been expended in eight months instead of twelve months? If they desire Congress to give an account to the people and show that we are not extravagant, should they not give us evidence why the further appropriations now asked for are required? More than the fact that they have spent now what we gave them for the whole year that they have not done.

I do not know that General Sheridan drew a thousand dollars, or any other sum, when he came here to retire a competent man sixty-five years of age because he was too old, indeed the most efficient man in the service, and put in his place his own father-in-law, who was over seventy, and who was retired with the rank of a brigadier-general at once, charging the taxpayers of this country with the increased pay from now until the time of his death; and still another man is now nominated who is said to be over sixty-two, and may be retired to-morrow, thus giving him that much more money without consideration or right. If mileage is to be spent for purposes like that, it is robbery of the people, and I protest against it. I repeat that I desire to know how they spent in eight months what we gave them for twelve.

While I would not injure the service by withholding the money, I will ask the Committee on Military Affairs or the committee in charge of such matters to call attention of the Department to the fact and ascertain how all the money allowed for twelve months has been spent in eight, and to call for itemized accounts, so that the Committee on Appropriations can resist these demands. When men say "we have spent in eight months what you gave us for a year" they ought to give us some reason for doing it. I know that the Committee on Military Affairs, when their attention is called to it, (and I have made this objection to the amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of that distinguished committee to it,) will look into it. That was my purpose rather than to make any objection to giving the money now asked for.

Mr. MAXEY. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not present, but I beg to say to the Senator, so that no one may be misled, that that committee has never had the privilege of inspecting the appropriations made for the Army. The Committee on Military Affairs has time and again called the attention of the Senate to the fact that it would be wise to submit the appropriations asked for the Army to that committee in order that they might report and that the Senate could act advisedly. It has never been done.

I can point out to you one evil resulting from this careless way of doing business. The Army retired list was increased from three hundred to four hundred on an appropriation bill which was never submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, although in the case of that very bill they asked that it should be done; and I apprehend that not a half dozen men in the Senate knew that that increase was made from three hundred to four hundred until the bill of the Appropriations Committee had become a law. It was couched in two or three lines in the Army appropriation act of June, 1878, and the first intimation the Military Committee had in regard to it was after the bill had passed.

It is impossible that gentlemen who are not intrusted with the management of bills can know these things. If the Senate will submit the appropriations for the Army to the Military Committee I will guarantee that that committee will make a rigid inspection and investigation and report, and in my judgment the service would be benefited by having such a report made.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to what the Senator from Texas says in reference to the extravagance of the Committee on Appropriations on this topic, I want to remind him that the particular instance he names is an instance where an effort was made to reorganize the Army on an appropriation bill, and that effort came from the House of Representatives. The Committee on Appropriations resisted every attempt to reorganize the Army in that way, and it was only through the means of a committee of conference that the Army appropriation bill was finally passed with some of these provisions in the bill. It was not an original suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate at all.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit me to remind him a little as we go along?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. At that very time, as the RECORD will show, the Committee on Military Affairs, through one of its members on this floor, asked that everything pertaining to the Army and its reorganization in that appropriation bill should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for its supervision and report, and it was not done.

Mr. ALLISON. Why was it not done, Mr. President? I do not wish to prolong this debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No question is before the Senate. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. It was not done simply because the Senate did not choose to refer the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the chairman of the committee other amendments to submit?

Mr. ALLISON. I am about to do so. At the end of line 64, under the head of "Navy Department," which was stricken out of the bill, I move to insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read at the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in reference to the amendment, before the Secretary proceeds to read it, that it was not submitted to the Committee on Appropriations at its regular meeting when the bill was considered. I have shown the correspondence and the letters relating to it, I believe, to nearly if not all the members of the committee. The amendment explains itself fully, and I will ask to have read in connection with it a letter from Admiral Rodgers and a letter from the Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 64 it is proposed to insert:

For the repair and purchase of instruments to be used in observing the transit of Venus, which will occur December 6, 1882, and for the necessary preliminary experiments, $10,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be immediately available, and that it shall be expended subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the transit of Venus commission created by the act approved March 3, 1872: And provided further, That the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac be, and he is hereby, created an additional member of the said commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter sent up by the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 24, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: The inclosed is a copy of the letter of Admiral Rodgers such as has been sent formally to the President. The emergency is pressing for the appropriation which he asks at this time, and I trust in the interest of science that it may promptly meet with the approval of Congress, and be included in the immediate deficiency bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. HUNT,
Secretary.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON, United States Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless the reading is requested I will ask that the letter of Admiral Rodgers be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be ordered.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY,
Washington, February 20, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a bill which it is proposed to offer to Congress in order to obtain the means of observing the transit of Venus, which will occur on the 6th of December, 1882.

The transit of Venus is regarded by astronomers as an important means of ascertaining the parallax of the sun—a quantity which enters directly and as a most important factor in the deductions of astronomical science; for by its parallax our distance from the sun is computed, and our distance from the sun is the unit by which the universe is measured.

The English Government in 1769 sent out Captain Cook to observe the transit of Venus; whence resulted the discoveries of that illustrious navigator which have so much redounded to the honor and to the advantage of Great Britain.

In these days the importance of the transit of Venus has become relatively less since other means of finding the sun's parallax have been devised; but the transit of Venus is still of so much moment that the countries of Europe are already making extensive and costly preparations to observe the transit of December next.

We cannot afford to neglect this one, which will be the last until the year 2004.

The principal instrument employed by ourselves is different from anything which it is proposed to use in Europe—we contemplating to use the horizontal photo-heliograph. This method is peculiarly American, and its use seems to promise so well that we think it should not be neglected. Foreign photographic methods have apparently given no results of value. It is deemed important that the instruments already on hand should be overhauled and put in order, since, when the regular appropriation is made, time will not serve to prepare them. To this end, I ask that the accompanying papers be forwarded to the honorable chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, in order that the sum of $10,000, for the preparation and repair of instruments and for preliminary experiments, may be made available during the current fiscal year, and as soon as possible.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral, Superintendent.

Hon. WILLIAM H. HUNT,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I inquire of the Senator from Iowa at what time other amendments will be in order?

Mr. ALLISON. In a few moments, I have one other amendment. In line 96, after the words "provided for," I move to insert "including the schools for freedmen in the Indian Territory." I move this amendment at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who states that there are now several schools in the Indian Territory, and there is a deficiency for them which cannot be paid unless this provision is inserted in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. I understand the amendment does not increase the appropriation, but only provides the manner in which it shall be expended.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 65 I ask to have reinserted the words "Navy Department." The heading was struck out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] gave notice of a desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out lines 179 and 180, in the following words:

And the sums thus appropriated shall be paid from the proceeds of the money-order business.

I make the motion in order that the Senator in charge of the bill may explain why the preceding appropriations should be paid from the proceeds of the money-order business. I desire to say that the clause itself is indefinite; it does not state how far it shall be made to apply, whether to the money-order business, or route agents, or any thing of that kind. I should like to be informed why the money from any particular fund should be appropriated.

Mr. HOAR. It relates back?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, it relates back to all that precedes under the head of "Post-Office Department."

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Michigan will observe that the items under that head are in paragraphs, and the provision relating to the money-order office forms a single paragraph. It is intended simply to modify a provision found in the statutes of last year. We authorized the removal of the money-order office from the Post-Office Department building and authorized the payment of $5,000 per annum rental, and this rental was to be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business. It is now found that the Post-Office Department could not rent a suitable building for $5,000. This provision, as I understand it, authorizes the Postmaster-General to pay $8,000 for the rent of a building for the use of the money-order office, and it simply provides, as the act last year provided, that this sum shall be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business. Of course that is a matter of very small moment, because the money-order business is more than self-sustaining. I suppose it is a convenient method of paying the money, perhaps without settling with the accounting officers of the Treasury, and so the money-order office is authorized to pay this rent out of its own receipts.

Mr. CONGER. Does it also authorize the payment of the items preceding "watchmen, laborers," &c.? As it reads it would pay all the appropriations under the head of the Post-Office Department, for the clause reads "and the sums thus appropriated shall be paid from the proceeds of the money-order business." That would necessarily include the whole of the items under that head.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, the two items are to be paid, the rent and the item relating to watchmen, being watchmen for the rented building.

Mr. CONGER. The clause does not say so. A fair construction would include the $75,000 in the first item and $25,000 in the next item, and so on all through.

Mr. ALLISON. The criticism is pretty fine. I suggest to my friend from Michigan if he will look at line 162 he will see that there is a period, a regular stop; and then commence two more paragraphs, and these two sums are to be paid out of the money-order business. If that is not quite clear if the Senator will suggest an amendment to make it clear I shall be glad to adopt it.

Mr. CONGER. I did suggest an amendment to strike out the lines 179 and 180.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to that.

Mr. CONGER. Another objection I have to the proposition is to allowing officers to pay out of the proceeds money coming in from that business without the money having been paid into the Treasury and been properly appropriated. I think it is faulty.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will recollect that none of the Post-Office revenues go into the Treasury. All the receipts go for the general purpose of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CONGER. I understand they all go into the Treasury and are reappropriated. I do not understand that the officers of the Post-Office Department can appropriate money received in that Department, here and there and everywhere, without an appropriation by law.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I understand the general law, and I think the Senator understands it, all the Post-Office expenses above the entire earnings of the Post-Office are appropriated from the Treasury, but its receipts are first applied to its use and so many more million dollars in addition are appropriated. Perhaps this is the only case where the revenue does not go directly into the Treasury and is not drawn out in the usual manner. The Post-Office Department has an auditor of its own, and the entire revenue is used for the purposes of the Post-Office, for transportation, &c.

Mr. CONGER. But it is drawn from the Treasury by appropriations specifying the amount for each particular branch of the service just as any other money. This clause gives the power to the superintendent of the money-order office to appropriate the money without its passing into the Treasury, which is a faulty way, and legislation has been directed in an effort to avoid all such uses of public money.

Besides that, another objection is that if there is a surplus in the money-order business it is due to those who use the money-order system that that surplus should be reduced by a diminution of the fees; that it should not be a source of revenue for other purposes. If it sustains itself, and more than sustains itself, let the amount charged for the particular part of this service be reduced to merely the amount required for its business.

I think the appropriations for every branch of the service should be made from the money in the Treasury, and that the proceeds derived from each branch of the service should be covered into the Treasury. That is the reason why I have moved to strike out this clause. The appropriation should be made from moneys in the Treasury, and the proceeds of the money-order business should go into the Treasury, the accounts should be kept there, and not be parceled out by such legislation as this.

Mr. ALLISON. The criticism of the Senator from Michigan has some justice in it; but whatever there is in it applies to the whole Post-Office Department. It is true we do appropriate a gross sum for the Post-Office Department each year, but that sum includes all the revenues of the Post-Office Department, and a deficiency, if there is any, comes out of the Treasury.

We found this provision in the bill as it came from the other House. It is in the law of last year, the very provision that this seeks to amend. I find in looking at the letter of the Postmaster-General that he asks that this appropriation be paid out of the proceeds of the money-order business, so that while there is some force in the criticism, and a good deal of force so far as it relates to the method of accounting for the disbursements in the Post-Office Department, yet it is hardly worth while to make a question on this single provision with reference to a small appropriation when under the law the whole revenues of the Post-Office Department are substantially disbursed in this way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLATT. By direction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, after line 243, to follow the amendment of the committee relating to expenditures in the Senate, I move to add:

For folding speeches, $500; and not exceeding $1 per thousand shall be paid for such folding.

I think there will be no objection to this amendment on the part of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the amendment comes from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. It does.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. In line 149, I move to strike out, at the end of the line, the words "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty," so as to read instead of $75,000, $150,000 "for additional clerk hire in post-offices." If I am correctly informed, this matter did not receive the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. The Postmaster-General asked for $150,000 for clerks in the post-offices throughout the country; the House of Representatives cut down the amount to $75,000. I need not state that the increase of the business of the country throughout these offices runs about from 25 to 40 per cent., varying at the different locations. This amount is not for the clerical force in the Department here but for the clerks in the post-offices throughout the country. As I understand, from the first and second class offices there are about two hundred applications to-day for an increase of pay for clerical force, amounting to $150,000; from the third and fourth classes there are 1,300 applications, amounting to nearly as large a sum. I think it requires in gross about $300,000 to meet the applications at the door of the Post-Office Department pleading for increased pay for clerical force. The Postmaster-General has asked for one-half that amount, $150,000. I send to the Chair his letter to be read, which I think gives so clearly the condition of the case that no one will object to the amendment after hearing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1882.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 30, asking for information in reference to the additional appropriation for clerks in post-offices, is before me. In reply I would briefly state:

The appropriation for clerks in post-offices for the year ending June 30, 1881, was $3,680,000; for the year ending June 30, 1882, it was $3,850,000, only about 4½ per cent. more than it was for the year previous, while the increase in the work performed has been much larger than at any time in the history of the service. The Department has yet to learn of a single office that does not show an increase of business. Many show an increase of from 25 to 40 per cent. and some even more.

This great increase in the labor to be performed of course necessitates more clerks. There are now on file in the Department more applications for additional allowances for clerk hire than ever before. A large number of worthy cases have been held up for two years, because of the inability of the Department to furnish aid. Many postmasters are now paying out the entire amount of their salaries in order that the clerical work in their offices may not be neglected. The work at the small offices, where the separation of mails for other offices is performed, has kept pace with the general increase, and not a few of these are actually suffering for relief.

On the 15th of August last reductions to the amount of about twenty-five thousand dollars were made in the allowances at one hundred offices in order that some of the most worthy applications then on file might, in a measure, be satisfied. In most of the offices where reductions were then made the increase of business at this time will justify the Department in restoring the amount of the reduction. I presume it is not expected at this time that I will enumerate all the offices that are asking for additional allowances for clerk hire. I will state, however, that there are now on file about thirteen hundred applications of this nature from offices of the third and fourth classes. The amount asked for by these applicants is in round numbers $175,000. From the first and second class offices there are upward of two hundred applications, and the amount asked for is $140,000.

In this connection I desire to call your attention to the increase of business since the last biennial readjustment at a number of offices. Many others, from which repeated applications for clerical assistance have been received, will show a larger increase of business than some of the offices named, but because of the fact that the Department was unable to comply with the requests the work of ascertaining the actual increase has not been completed. The increase at the offices named may possibly be considered larger than the general increase will average, but the cases have not been selected as exceptional ones by any means. They are as follows: Chicago, about 25 per cent.; Kansas City, 45 per cent.; Washington, 20 per cent.; Baltimore, 25 per cent.; Knoxville, 30 per cent.; San Diego, 50 per cent.; Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, 70 per cent. The increase at Washington, New Jersey, is 78 per cent.; Binghamton, New York, 15 per cent.; Burlington, Iowa, 11 per cent.; Butte, Montana, 25 per cent.; Charleston, South Carolina, 21 per cent.; Elmira, New York, 21 per cent.; Fall River, Massachusetts, 17 per cent.; Lawrence, Kansas, 23 per cent.; Jamestown, New York, 21 per cent.; Jacksonville, Illinois, 21 per cent.; Portland, Oregon, 13 per cent.; Watertown, New York, 15 per cent.; Nashville, Tennessee, 21 per cent.; Lynchburgh, Virginia, 32 per cent.; Oswego, New York, 34 per cent.; Des Moines, Iowa, 43 per cent. The largest increase seems to have been at Durango, Colorado. The same amounts to 276 per cent. At the last-named office more than half a ton of mail is handled daily by the postmaster and his wife, there being no allowance for clerks.

Any additional information will be most cheerfully given.

Very respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK,
Chairman of House Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to emphasize what was said by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in favor of this amendment. I happen to know personally very much about this. From my own State I receive by almost every mail letters asking for increased compensation for the employment of clerks in post-offices. These letters I refer to the First Assistant Postmaster-General, who admits in many of the instances that it is right that the allowance for clerks should be made, but he says they have no appropriation to meet it.

I beg to say that in my own State from the 1st of September, 1880, to the 1st of September, 1881, we built 1,680 miles of railroad. We have now running over 5,000 miles of railroad. We nearly doubled our population from 1870 to 1880. The result of all this is enormous increase in the post-office business, and necessarily it follows that there must be an increase in the clerical force, and that increase should be sufficient to carry on the mail service as the business ought to be conducted. I, for one, believe—and I have never concealed that belief—that the mail service of this country ought to be conducted in the interest of the people, and whatever amount is necessary to render the people all the facilities needed in their mail service ought to be granted. I do not believe that a dollar could be expended by this Government wiser than in giving the people their mails promptly and efficiently and fully up to their needs.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I also wish to add my hearty approval to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, and I am only sorry that the Post-Office Committee did not ask for $200,000 or $250,000.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator must attribute that to the modesty of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the modesty of the Postmaster-General also, or perhaps not so much his modesty as his fear that Congress would not give it to him because it looked like a large figure. It is not a large figure when one understands at all the growth and the business of the country. I understand from the letter of the Postmaster-General that he could properly use $315,000 annually, and I believe him, and I will tell you one of the reasons. I have been for a long time trying to get a little more help in my own town. The carriers there are absolutely unable to make their rounds, the clerks are absolutely unable to do their work, and two of the old and faithful clerks have lately resigned, with injured health, because they could not go through the labor required. The surplus revenue from my town was $87,000 last year, being an increase from $74,000 surplus the previous year. Moreover, we have had only one additional carrier in eleven years and one additional clerk in ten years, and I fear we shall have to take up subscriptions to run our post-office, with $87,000 surplus.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, the appropriation for the support of these offices throughout the country has been a subject of complaint all through the West, I am certain. In my own State the complaints are very loud and constant. At the post-office in Saint Paul, the capital of the State, the amount appropriated for the service is as small as that made to any post-office in the country of the same class. I know that the post-office referred to by the Senator from Connecticut is in the same condition. The employés in that office cannot perform the labor, and the Postmaster-General gives as his only excuse for this condition of affairs that Congress will not make sufficient appropriations. I believe his complaint is well founded, and that this appropriation should be increased. This is a service in which the public are interested, and they should be well served. If we cannot appropriate for the service we had better inform the public that they cannot be accommodated. I know in regard to Minneapolis and Saint Paul that the complaints are very just and are constantly made.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, all over the West, where the towns are growing rapidly, we hear the same complaint. The letter just read calls attention to the fact that in the town of Durango in the State of Colorado the receipts of the Post-Office Department increased 276 per cent. in a single year. That is, of course, an exceptional case. There are very many other places where a large increase has been made, but none perhaps as large as that. I know in some sections of Colorado post-offices that are returning a net revenue to the Government of a considerable sum of money, where the postmasters are serving practically for nothing. In one post-office in the central part of the State, not in the new part of the State, the postmaster last fall demonstrated to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General that he was serving and paying to the Government $250 a year for the privilege of being the postmaster of his town, and the net revenues to the Government of that post-office were nearly $15,000 a year, and yet the Second Assistant Postmaster-General declared, and truthfully I have no doubt, that he had no power to relieve in that case.

In one case in the State since I have been here the postmaster gave his entire time, furnished the rent of a building—and in that country rent is high—and when he got through at the end of the year he was $144 ahead. The Government received during that time about four thousand dollars net each year out of the post-office, and this man served practically for nothing. Nearly all the post-offices in the State that have attained any considerable importance have been demanding for the last year additional clerk hire—I speak now of my own State—and nearly all of them are able to show that they are making a net return to the Government of a very much larger sum than they are asking for clerk hire; many of them receive no allowance for clerk hire at all, and yet they pay a very handsome revenue to the Government.

Now, this is all wrong; it is unfair to put men in office and ask them to do the duties of postmasters, accommodate the people, and furnish the clerks and pay the whole expense out of their own pockets. There have been in the West within the last five years some extremely hard cases, and I will just mention one case as illustration. I mentioned it the other day in a committee, having had occasion to do so.

The post-office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, was a very small affair, but with the increased population the business grew up very rapidly. A young man who was there without means, of a very reputable family, from the State of Illinois, proceeded to take the receipts of this office to employ clerk hire. There never was any doubt, I think, in the minds of those who investigated the matter that the money which he received he paid out for that purpose, but it was without authority of law. The Post-Office Department at Washington declared that they had not the money wherewith to make the allowance and, of course, it was charged up against him, and he was unable to pay it. The result was, not having means of his own, that his bondsmen were called upon to make good this money. When they were called upon, of course they were incensed. Then a prosecution was brought against this young man. He was indicted and tried in the United States court there for embezzlement of the public funds which he had paid out in furtherance of the mail service at that place, and he was convicted too of embezzlement, and would have gone to the penitentiary but for executive interference.

In another case that I know, where the postmaster paid out many thousands of dollars within a year, several thousands of dollars more than he received, he was able to respond and he paid up. But all over the western country comes this demand. We make these appropriations so small that when they parcel them out at the beginning of the year the money is all gone, there is none to keep as a surplus; and if a post-office from being a twelve-dollar office, in six months, as is frequent in the western country, becomes an office requiring four or five or six clerks to do the business, there is no money in the Treasury available for clerk hire, and no way of meeting the emergency, and when the year has passed the Post-Office Department cannot go back and pay it, and the result is it comes out of the men who are so unfortunate as to hold the office at the time.

Now, $150,000 is asked as I understand by the Post-Office Department; they ought to have more, because they ought to have a surplus that can be called upon in the cases that arise, such as I have mentioned, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not interpose any objection to this amendment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury on the 23d day of January, 1882, submitted "estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments to complete the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and prior years," and this was his letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 23, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and prior years, amounting to $23,159,690.81.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER,
Secretary.

Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

And in those estimates there is not one dollar estimated for additional clerk hire in post-offices, for which the House of Representatives have allowed in this clause of the pending bill $75,000. This bill is not the regular deficiency bill; it is a bill to provide "for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," such deficiencies as are so urgent that they cannot wait for the regular deficiency bill or until exact information is given. It was made apparent, I suppose, to the House of Representatives that $75,000 would be needed now before the regular deficiency bill came in, and no communication being made to the Senate we agreed to it in our committee and allowed it so to remain.

The regular deficiency bill will be before the Senate, I suppose, in the next six weeks, perhaps in the next four; I do not know how soon. Then the committees of both houses can inquire of the Postmaster-General exactly how he desires to use this $150,000 or $200,000. In the mean time what is now called this urgent deficiency bill, without any estimate being made for it, contains an item of $75,000 to provide for the most urgent cases that cannot wait for the regular deficiency bill.

The first question is, ought we not to have had in the Book of Estimates giving the estimates for deficiencies a statement that there was a deficiency in this item? Ought we not to know precisely how he is going to use this money, and where he is going to use it, and what the occasion is. We are giving him $75,000 now at a venture, in advance of the regular deficiency bills, without an estimate and without any detailed information except what is now sent in the letter which has been read. Of course an increase of 276 per cent. in the business of one post-office in Colorado simply means that a new mining town has been established in Colorado and there has been a great increase of the business there owing to the discovery of a valuable mine in the neighborhood; but there is no evidence that there was not enough force to do the work needed before the increase took place.

I believe, although I have not the estimates before me, that for the service of the current fiscal year Congress gave to the Postmaster-General substantially all he asked. I remember that we have been always very careful, knowing the importance of the Post-Office Department, not to cripple it, not to hamper it, but to give it whatever was necessary. We have always recognized the fact that it was growing; but ought we now, in an urgent deficiency bill to simply supply the wants that are absolutely necessary before we can obtain accurate information for action when the general deficiency bill comes up, where we shall certainly make all the needful provision, go further than the House has gone? No committee can resist an application from the Post-Office Department. There is not a man about here who does not want to aid it to the greatest possible extent.

I was at home at Lexington the other day, a town of nearly seventeen thousand people according to your census, over twenty-one thousand by our calculation, and at the post-office there we have one clerk who has to stand at the window appropriated for men, and at the window appropriated for ladies, and at another window where there is a general delivery, and the whole room is not over twenty feet square. That office has but one clerk, and business men in the business hours of the day have to stand twenty minutes sometimes before they can get their mail.

Mr. MAXEY. Does the Senator think that right?

Mr. BECK. No; it is all wrong. There are plenty of hard cases of that sort which ought to be remedied, and so there are everywhere. But I would ask the Senator from Texas if he does not think that when we give $75,000 now to meet the most urgent cases, especially as the Postmaster-General made no estimate for this, and we gave him last year all he asked for, the Postmaster-General can wait for the general deficiency bill before we supply all that may be needed for the whole fiscal year, so that meanwhile we may get the information as to exactly where the money is needed. I do not care if the sum wanted is $175,000; but I desired to explain why the Committee on Appropriations simply acquiesced in what the House did, there being no information except the general information that the business was growing and that there were very many hard cases that he could now supply, and in the general deficiency bill we could make it all good, whether we give him $150,000, or $175,000, or $200,000, or only $75,000 now. I think it makes very little difference how far we go now. I have only explained why the committee stood by the House provision. We had no estimate, no information until we heard this communication read this morning. I think it would be safe to require the Department to await the general deficiency bill, and in the mean time give them $75,000 for the most urgent cases. We have a new Postmaster-General now, recollect; he is not expected to know as much about the business as he would if he had been there three or four years, and we propose to bridge over his immediate trouble and give him a little further time to explain to us what he really requires. I think this is as much as can reasonably be expected under the circumstances.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not put my recollection against that of the Senator from Kentucky who is upon the Committee on Appropriations, but my recollection is that in the last bill we granted but about two-thirds of the amount asked for by the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Rhode Island will pardon me for interrupting him. I will state to him that last year we gave the Post-Office Department exactly what they estimated for clerk hire.

Mr. BECK. That is my recollection.

Mr. ANTHONY. I received different information from the Department. Anyhow we do not want an estimate for a deficiency that we all know to exist. The Senator from Kentucky makes a strong argument by reference to his own town for the passage of this amendment. I know in my city the business increased 50 per cent. without any increase of clerk hire, and the postmaster is now paying from his own salary compensation to clerks because he cannot get a sufficient number nor retain those of sufficient character without it.

I think the Post-Office should be conducted somewhat on the principle of a man's private business, to grant the facilities where the patronage comes from. We grant much to routes on the frontiers; we make enormous appropriations for the transportation of the mails in remote sections; but in those places where the Government receives its chief revenue the service is hampered by the lack of a sufficient number of persons to carry it on. The city of Providence returns a net income of from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year to the Post-Office, and it has not sufficient force to carry on the business. I hope that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FERRY. What the Senator from Kentucky has disclosed verifies what I stated when I presented my amendment, that the Committee on Appropriations had not considered this amendment. Their attention, it seems, had not been called to the fact that the Postmaster-General had recommended a larger sum for this service; that this item in the bill is not equal to his wants. I suppose that the Postmaster-General expected that the Committee on Appropriations would in their good judgment accord him what he asked for; but it seems they did not. It then became the duty of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to suggest to the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate that they ought to accord to this new Postmaster-General just what he does ask, inasmuch as he has asked only one-half of the amount that is now applied for by fifteen hundred postmasters throughout the country. When the Senator cites the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, and says that they did not cover all the necessities of the business here, it is simply verifying the fact that no man in this country can anticipate the progress of this great nation.

The Senator from Kentucky says that one-half of the amount will answer now, and we can give the balance hereafter. I think the Postmaster-General has been very generous. He has divided the amount of his necessity, and now asks Congress to give him a sum sufficient to carry on the business of these offices. He states in his letter that he has been compelled to draw from certain post-offices in order to treat others a little more justly, scaling down, doing injustice to a portion of the offices and helping the others, because Congress will not give him means enough to keep up the business as it properly should be kept up.

The business has increased more than I stated when on the floor before. I said that it had increased from 25 to 40 per cent., but the average is greater than that; and because the business has increased largely ought we not to provide for it? If we compel clerks to labor for the Government, shall we not pay them? When we have millions in the Treasury, shall we not put our hand in and pay justly those men who have earned that money on the basis of their salaries? When the allowance for clerk hire is not adequate, and postmasters are compelled to employ a greater force, they take it out of their own salaries and run the risk of the Government paying them, and the Government does not do it, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] suggests, until by stint of pressure appropriations are made and money put in the hands of the Postmaster-General.

I am glad we have a Postmaster-General at the head of the Post-Office Department who has held a seat in this Chamber, who has had legislative experience, who has known the times when perhaps the Senator from Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations, has resisted such appropriations. We know how eagle-eyed that Senator is for the economy of the nation, and yet there is such a thing as blurring the eye of facts and necessities, and I am afraid the Senator is in that condition to-day. I hope not, because I believe he is rising now to accept the situation and vote for the amendment.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FERRY. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. He says it became the duty of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this fact. When was that done?

Mr. FERRY. I did not state that I had called the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to it. I said I had called to it their attention in the Senate. I said that the Postmaster-General supposed that the committee would in its good judgment act upon it on his letter; but the bill being reported back without any amendment on this point, simply concurring in the House action, it became the duty of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate to the matter, and the attention of the Senate to the fact which it finds here that they had not given the Postmaster-General the amount that he asked. Of course it was not my place to enter the room of the Committee on Appropriations; I am not a member of that able committee; but I am a member of another committee conserving the interests of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BECK. Let me say to the Senator that neither the Postmaster-General nor any official of his Department thought it worth their while to come before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, although we had the bill in our possession nearly a week and have been three or four days acting on it, even to advise us of any complaint. Will he be kind enough to tell me why that official did not come before us and why he did not estimate for the deficiencies, as it was his duty to do if he had any?

Mr. FERRY. I answer the Senator that if the Postmaster-General should drive down to the Senate every time there was an objection to an item in his bill he would be compelled to employ more vehicles and horses than the Senator from Kentucky would be willing to appropriate for.

Mr. BECK. If the Postmaster-General is so high an official that he cannot condescend to tell Congress in the Book of Estimates what deficiencies he wants, and cannot tell the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate that the House has done an injustice to his service, although he has positive information, when they are acting upon a deficiency bill, then he has no right to come here and criticise through anybody the action of that committee.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me, the Postmaster-General has through his letter communicated to Congress.

Mr. BECK. He has written no letter to the committee of the Senate. That letter was to the House committee.

Mr. FERRY. I said to Congress. This is a branch of Congress.

Mr. BECK. It is not Congress.

Mr. FERRY. It is a part of Congress. If I mistake not, the Senator is as much a stickler for that as I am.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say further that when he wrote that letter to the House committee, and the House granted him $75,000, he stood content and never ventured to suggest to the committee of the Senate that he had any fault to find with the action of the House.

Mr. FERRY. I am not aware that the Postmaster-General has accepted willingly or graciously what the House has done. As the organ representing more directly the interests of the Post-Office Department, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the House of Representatives have not done what he asked for, and also to the further fact that he has stated that he has now applications for over $300,000 to do justice to men who have earned the money, and he comes here with a letter asking for one-half that amount, $150,000, and that was cut down in the House. The Postmaster-General very naturally awaited the action of the Senate, knowing the Senate to be a more conservative and more generous body perhaps, and waiting for the Committee on Appropriations to change the $75,000 to $150,000, so that this item might be equal to the amount stated in his letter; but as the bill returned to the Senate without that, it became the duty of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to move the amendment asking that the recommendation of the Postmaster-General be concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The presumption is that when he did not estimate for any deficiency in this item in the Book of Estimates that there was no very urgent necessity in the case; and when the House allowed him $75,000, and he did not see fit to come before the Senate committee and make any complaint it was fair to assume that he had no complaint to make, and it would have been I would almost say presumptuous on the part of the committee of the Senate to have altered the sum allowed him by the House when he neither wrote a letter nor appeared before the committee nor sent a messenger to advise us in any way that he had any fault to find with what was done by the House. It was his duty to have estimated for the deficiency if there was one, and to have told us why, and to have stated the things that are now being said for him, that he was behind, and that complaints were being made, and that he could not wait for the general deficiency bill. Having failed to do all these things, whatever the Senate may do with the amendment, I do not see how the Committee on Appropriations can be criticised. It was not our duty to ask him why he did not find fault with the House for not giving him all he asked for. If he had not received from the House what he asked for, it was his duty to say that the House had not done him justice, and give us a chance of considering it. He did not do that; he sent us no letter; and the only excuse I have to make for him is the same one I made before, that he was recently put into a place about which he knew nothing, notwithstanding all the parade about civil-service reform, and did not know what his own wants were. Now the Post-Office Committee, it seems, has to take up for him what he did not know himself.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I only wish to submit an observation or two with reference to this amendment, and chiefly by way of reminding my friend from Michigan that the Committee on Appropriations are obliged to use, and do use, the ordinary methods of securing information with reference to appropriation bills.

In the first place, the committee last year gave to the Post-Office Department all it asked for this purpose. In the next place, the committee, when this deficiency bill came before it, looked over the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. Why? To see whether or not all the deficiencies had been sufficiently provided for. In that letter they found nothing whatever in the way of a deficiency for the purpose indicated in this amendment. In the next place, we turned, as we always do, for instruction not only to the remarks of the Senator from Michigan, but to remarks and speeches made elsewhere. We turned to the debates on this bill elsewhere. We found that this paragraph for $75,000 had passed without an objection made from any quarter whatever with reference to it in the House of Representatives, if I may allude to what occurred there, as perhaps I am not strictly permitted to do. Nothing appeared, therefore, to the Appropriations Committee with regard to this item until the Senator from Michigan, in his place in this body, asked us why we did not increase the sum allowed by the House. I think I have given a satisfactory reason why the Committee on Appropriations did not do it.

We found also that for the next year the estimates for this very item amount to $4,235,000. The appropriation bill under discussion in the House of Representatives gives to the Post-Office Department that full sum for next year. The full sum asked for in the estimates is provided for in the bill as printed and laid on the tables.

It may as well be understood once for all that the Committee on Appropriations have other labor and other service to perform than to be running around and inquiring at the various Departments whether it is not possible for us to give them more money. If an addition is required to appropriations made and reported to this body from the House of Representatives it is due that somebody somewhere should communicate that fact to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or else communicate, as they have a right to do here, by way of amendment, as suggested by the Senator from Michigan.

I know it is useless for us to oppose this amendment, because I have in my mind distinctly the story of the Arkansas jury, and I know also that there is probably a necessity existing for more than this $75,000, after the facts have been disclosed as they have been in the letter of the Postmaster-General. Therefore, for one, I intend to vote for this amendment myself, and I should have been ready to do so long ago, but was waiting to hear my eloquent friend from Michigan, and the reply of my colleague on the committee, in order that I might be fully informed as to what my duty was in the premises.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment we know is out of order. It does not come from a committee, and the Committee on Appropriations has not had one day's notice of it. No Senator knows that better than the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Therefore, if the Committee on Appropriations chose to enforce the rules, he could not get his amendment in. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said that he intended to vote for it. I rather regret that he has said so. I think it a big stretch, and I have myself a notion to call the attention of the Chair to its being out of order; but I suppose I had better not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment to be inserted after line 243, or rather to follow the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT,] which comes in after line 243:

That the employés of the Senate, including the Capitol police, receiving an annual compensation, who were employed on the 4th day of March, 1881, and who were on the rolls on the 29th day of October, 1881, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate per annum they were receiving at the last-mentioned date specified herein; and a sufficient sum for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is out of order.

Mr. BUTLER. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. To be put on this bill? I should be glad to know when that was referred.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It does not come from a standing committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but I want to hear when it was referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa raise a point of order on the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. First, it does not come from a standing committee of the Senate; and, secondly, it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is mistaken about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be advised by the Secretary from the record how the fact is. [A pause.] The Chair is advised from the indorsement on the amendment that it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations on February 20 and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As an amendment to this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I see now that it has been referred as an amendment to this bill; I was not aware of that before. I will say to the Senate that this proposition has been so often before the committee that it escaped my observation that it had been referred as a special amendment to this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But what committee does it come from?

Mr. ALLISON. No committee; I raise that point.

Mr. BUTLER. I offered the amendment myself and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations declined to incorporate it in the bill, and the committee evidently did not see it; but I am not responsible for that.

I desire to state in connection with it that it simply provides one month's pay for the annual employés of the Senate. Those employés have been here during two or three extra sessions from March 4 until about the 20th of May last spring, and then again in October, and have never been paid this month's extra pay. The employés of the House have had it twice, as I am informed; and if that be the case I see no reason why the employés of the Senate should not be paid likewise. They came here at a period of the year when it may have been very inconvenient for them to be here paying their own expenses; they did duty, and it seems to me they are entitled to this allowance. I am reminded by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] that the reason they were not paid at the time was that we could not do it by resolution.

Mr. BECK. But it is not a deficiency; it belongs either to the sundry civil bill or to a separate bill. This is an urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. BUTLER. If this is not a deficiency I do not know what it is, and it certainly is urgent.

Mr. BECK. Everything referred to the Committee on Appropriations should go to its appropriate bill, and when a deficiency bill comes a thing that is not a deficiency ought not to be considered by us in connection with it.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Chair rule the amendment in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled upon the one point suggested by the Senator from Iowa, that in the opinion of the Chair that point is not supported; but the Chair thinks that under rule 27 the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state what that rule is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

27. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds under that rule that the effect of this amendment would be to increase an item of appropriation already in the bill, and that it is not in pursuance of any existing law, or moved by the direction of a standing or select committee, or proposed in pursuance of any estimate by the head of a Department.

Mr. BUTLER. I am reminded by the Senator from Ohio that the Senate passed a resolution authorizing this. It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment would be in pursuance certainly of a resolution of the Senate, and hence not obnoxious to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no information on that subject. If there is such a resolution it can be produced. Does the Senator appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I do not appeal, but I do not agree with the Chair.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 243, on page 11:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay Richard S. Murphy for services rendered as clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations from December 6, 1881, until December 19, 1881, inclusive, at the rate of compensation allowed per diem committee clerks, $84.

I will only say that this young gentleman performed the service described in the amendment, and cannot be paid unless this appropriation is made. I presume there will be no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am instructed unanimously by the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Congressional Library to offer the following amendment, to come in at the bottom of page 5, after line 108:

To pay expert architects employed under the act of June 8, 1880, for work on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, and to meet other expenses of the committee on that subject, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 143:

The Secretary of War is authorized to use the unexpended balance of the appropriations for the Susquehanna River above and below Havre de Grace in the construction of the channel and breakwater of the Fishing Battery below Havre de Grace.

This is a matter that has been before the Committee on Commerce, and it is with the assent of the committee that I offer the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the wording of the paragraph from line 153 to line 160. It is as follows:

That the sum of $35,000 of the amount appropriated "for mail-route messengers" under the act approved March 1, 1881, "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," is hereby transferred and made available as follows, namely.

Then follow three items aggregating $85,000, and not $35,000.

Mr. ALLISON. My friend will observe that there is a period after each one.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that, but at the same time it would seem as though all those items there were to be embraced in the transfer. There is nothing to distinguish them. I was going to suggest, inasmuch as there is another item for precisely the same purpose, to make the thing more specific and certain, that we strike out the words "as follows, namely," and say "for payment of route agents." These are substantive appropriations and not transfers.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think that makes any difference. Line 160 is a transfer, and the $35,000 there might perhaps be omitted. If the Senator will look at the House print he will see that at the end of the $35,000 in that line there was a semicolon; and if that were so now his criticism would be a good one. Perhaps he has the House print before him. But this is now a paragraph by itself; and the next item is a paragraph by itself. The two items are just as distinct as though they were a hundred lines apart.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The chairman will recollect that the committee considered that matter.

Mr. ALLISON. We did, very thoroughly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We looked at it in the light of this very suggestion.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not going to urge the matter against the committee, but the formality that is employed in designating the appropriation would seem to indicate that there was more than one item under the transfer clause "and made available as follows, namely," as though it was divided into items separately making several sums out of that $35,000, whereas the first line following appropriates $35,000. It seems to me that as it stands in its relations to the bill it causes doubt about the purpose to appropriate the additional sums of $10,000 and $40,000 in the two succeeding items thereafter, as the $10,000 seems to be for the same general purpose.

Mr. BECK. But the whole object was to change the reading from "mail-route messengers" to "route agents."

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that the $35,000 is transferred and made available for the payment of route agents.

Mr. BECK. That is it.

Mr. PLUMB. Then there is no necessity for the change.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Kansas seems to have been misled I am afraid some other person may be; and, therefore, perhaps the clause had better be amended.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the words "as follows, namely," in line 159, and insert "for the payment of route agents." And then to strike out the whole of line 160.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed changes will be reported from the desk, so that they may be understood.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the word "available" in line 159, it is proposed to strike ont "as follows, namely," and insert "for payment of route agents;" and to strike out line 160, as follows:

For route agents, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed by the Mississippi River; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for the passage of a bill to regulate interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for the passage of a bill for the distribution of the unexpended balance of the Geneva award; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of the bill to facilitate the decision of controverted questions in customs-revenue cases; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of George W. Burchfield, late of Company A, Fifth Regular Cavalry, praying that he may be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Juniata County, Pennsylvania, praying that George W. Burchfield, late of Company A, Fifth Regular Cavalry, may be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of members of the bar of the county of Erie, Pennsylvania, urging upon Congress the great need existing for a suitable public building at the city of Erie for the accommodation of the post-office, the collector's office, the internal-revenue collector's office, and other Government uses; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Kentucky, by his attorney, J. Madison Cutts, praying that his previous petition and papers be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 14) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1321) giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across the Delaware River between Philadelphia and Camden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1322) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1323) for the relief of Henry Starr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1324) to place Ordnance-Sergeant Joseph Burkhart, United States Army, on the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1325) to restore to market lands in the State of Michigan remaining unsold within Indian reservations, under treaty with the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of July 31, 1855; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. BROWN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1400) for the relief of Carlile Boyd;

A bill (H. R. No. 1516) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Annie A. Hays;

A bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of B. B. Connor, now on the files, be taken therefrom and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. VOORHEES, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1400) for the relief of Carlile Boyd was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 1516) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Annie A. Hays was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of William P. Chambliss was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall not oppose the taking up of that bill if it can be taken up coupled with the understanding that when action of the Senate has been had upon it the tariff-commission bill shall become the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only question before the Senate is whether it will proceed to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from California.

Mr. BAYARD. I feel it to be my duty to press on the consideration of the Senate the tariff-commission bill. I do not deny at all the relative importance of the bill relating to Chinese immigration to our friends upon the Pacific side, and I am disposed to believe that I sympathize with them in their desire to pass it; but that is not the question. It is a matter for the Senate to decide upon the precedence to be given to measures of public interest. I know of none more important now to the business interests of this country than that the tariff-commission question should be settled by the Senate. If we can come to a vote on that, the sooner the better. But I trust the Senate, with this notification, will not agree to take up the measure suggested by the honorable Senator from California. I say it not with the slightest idea or the slightest intention of antagonizing the final success of his measure; but merely as to the order of discussion, I consider that the tariff-commission bill should have its place and should keep it. Therefore I trust the Senate will not agree to the proposition of the Senator from California, and if it should be defeated I shall then move to take up the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the motion of my colleague ought to prevail. This is a matter which the people of the entire Pacific coast, and I think of this coast, have a very important interest in; and unless we can get action upon the bill at an early day, in all probability the occasion for the bill will have passed away. Every steamer that has come from China for the last three or four months has come in loaded with Chinamen, and they are bringing disease upon our coast, they are injuring our interests in every respect. In addition to that, those Chinese who arrive here before this bill becomes a law will not be subject to the provisions of the act. Now, if we can get this bill up and can have action upon it, I hope it will not take two days to discuss it and pass it or defeat it. The people of our whole coast, and I think those on this side, are interested in the consideration of the question. We have plenty of time to consider the tariff-commission bill. That bill has been debated on this floor, and its consideration has been gone through with by a number of Senators.

Mr. BAYARD. Then let us have a vote on it.

Mr. FARLEY. The Chinese bill will not delay action on the tariff bill more than one or two days; and my colleague and myself have agreed that if at any period it seems likely to take up more time than it ought to take, we will consent that it shall go over as unfinished business and allow other matters to be taken up. For that reason I insist that the motion of my colleague ought to prevail at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALDRICH.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Brown,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Butler,	George,	Kellogg,	Sawyer,
Call,	Hampton,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	McDill,	Slater,
Coke,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Teller,
Conger,	Hill of Colorado,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Vest,
Edmunds,	Jonas,	Plumb,	Walker.
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Hawley,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Dawes,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Garland,	Platt,	Voorhees.

ABSENT—25.

Aldrich,	Groome,	Lamar,	Sewell,
Blair,	Grover,	Logan,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Hale,	McPherson,	Williams,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Mahone,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,
Frye,	Jackson,	Mitchell,
Gorman,	Johnston,	Morgan,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

APPROVAL OF JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. JOYCE. I was not present when the Journal was read, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] has stated to me that it does not correctly state the action taken with regard to some sections which I moved to strike out in the District code bill last evening, and which were passed over to be afterward returned to.

The SPEAKER. It is so stated in the Journal.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It was not so read.

The SPEAKER. That part of the Journal will be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOYCE, by unanimous consent, moved to strike out sections 193 to 198 inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following amendment as one section:

* * * * * * * *

Pending which,

Mr. GEORGE D. ROBINSON moved to amend section 193 by striking out the word "nor" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "or to sell such liquors, wines, or cordials."

Ordered, That said sections be passed over for the present.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That is all right.

The Journal was then approved.

JOHN H. JONES AND THOMAS D. HARRIS.

Mr. MCKINLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4656) for the relief of John H. Jones and Thomas D. Harris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPAULDING. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Private Calendar for present consideration House bill No. 804——

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

PRINTING FOR JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILLITS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That certain papers before the Judiciary Committee relative to an additional Representative for the State of Nebraska be printed for the use of said committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. WILLITS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING SMITHSONIAN REPORT, ETC.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 144) authorizing the Public Printer to print reports of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WEBBER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two weeks on account of important business.

CHILI-PERUVIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask unanimous consent to submit for immediate adoption the resolution of inquiry which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be directed to inquire and report to the House respecting the abstraction from the files of the Department of State of certain letters and documents referred to in the letter of the Secretary of State of February 17, 1882; also respecting the making of any contracts in Paris or elsewhere by and between any foreign corporation or company and any American citizens concerning any concession made by Peru to any French or foreign company wherein allusion was made to the diplomatic action of the United States; and that the Committee have power to send for persons and papers, and have leave to report thereon at any time.

Mr. KASSON. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] obtained the floor I was attempting to get the attention of the Speaker to offer a resolution on the subject which I think will be perhaps more satisfactory than that offered by the gentleman from New York. I ask that my resolution be read, and if the subject is to be considered now I ask its adoption as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this subject?

Several MEMBERS. Read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] proposes to submit as a substitute if this subject is to be now considered will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged in connection with the Chili-Peruvian correspondence recently and officially published, upon the call of the two Houses of Congress, that one or more ministers plenipotentiary of the United States were either personally interested or improperly connected with business transactions in which the intervention of this Government was requested or expected; and

Whereas it is further alleged that certain papers in relation to the same subjects have been improperly lost or removed from the files of the State Department: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the said allegations, and ascertain the facts relating thereto, and report the same with such recommendations as they may deem proper; and they shall have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Yes; I object to its consideration.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let them both be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as there seems to be some diversity of opinon in reference to them.

Mr. KASSON. If there be no question as to which should be adopted, I have no objection to their reference, with leave on the part of that committee to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to their present consideration. Is there objection to their introduction for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Who objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection. The gentleman from New York offers a resolution which has been read, to which the gentleman from Iowa moves a substitute.

Mr. KASSON. If they are referred they can both go together.

The SPEAKER. Objection to their consideration has been withdrawn. The question is then on the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Accept it.

Mr. BELMONT. I accept it as a modification of my own resolution if it sufficiently covers the ground of my proposition.

Mr. KASSON. There need be no debate, and I will retain the floor for the purpose of calling the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa be again read, to see whether it covers one of the points of the resolution of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Iowa has been accepted by the gentleman from New York as a modification of his, and therefore there is no proposition before the House but that of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON's resolution was again read.

Mr. BELMONT. The second clause of the resolution I presented, I think, would cover the point better than the resolution as read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to accept and adopt the substitute as it was offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BELMONT. I did; but as to the second clause I would like to have it agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no power in that regard.

Mr. KASSON. I retain the floor for the purpose of not interfering with other business, in order to call the previous question, if necessary, but am quite willing to hear any suggestion.

Mr. BELMONT. I will offer mine, then, as an amendment, and I ask the Clerk to read that second clause of my resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also respecting the making of any contract in Paris or elsewhere by and between any foreign corporation or company and any American citizens concerning any concession made by Peru to any French or foreign company wherein allusion was made to the diplomatic action of the United States.

Mr. KASSON. I object to that because it is involved in the other inquiry, and distinctly intended in the first resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist this is covered by his resolution?

Mr. KASSON. Unquestionably it is covered by the first resolution.

Mr. BELMONT. I think I will insist on my amendment, as the gentleman's resolution does not cover the whole ground.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will see it is involved from the fact the signatures of the paper referred to are the very thing which is inquired in reference to.

Mr. BELMONT. I can see no objection to the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I think there is objection to it simply because it is not necessary, and I do not want at this stage of the case to aim a specific charge. When it comes back into the House they will see undoubtedly this and all other subjects involving the general question will be inquired into. I state distinctly the intention of the resolution, and now demand the previous question.

Mr. BELMONT. I accept the gentleman's resolution on the gentleman's statement that his covers the whole ground.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution of Mr. KASSON was adopted.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4657) granting relief to Archibald Hunley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSISSIPPI AT KEITHSBURGH.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4464) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road, in order that it may be considered and put on its passage at this time. It has been reported back from the Committee on Commerce favorably.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order of business, and object to everything except introduction of bills for reference.

Mr. MARSH. There can be no objection in the world to the bill I ask to take up for consideration, and I appeal to my friend from Missouri to withdraw his objection. There is a railroad on either side of the river, and the bridge is now ready to be constructed. The interests of transportation and of the people of that region who are interested demand it. There can be no possible objection to it.

Mr. BLAND. The bridging of the Mississippi River is an important matter, and ought to be thoroughly considered.

Mr. MARSH. It has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Commerce, and a written favorable report accompanies the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist on his objection?

Mr. BLAND. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order cuts off all applications for unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would like to state to the gentleman from Missouri and to the House——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded; and the regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

EUGENE B. ALLEN.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2338) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN BLACK.

Mr. HASKELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 33) for the relief of John Black; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL H. COLLINS.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3681) for the relief of Michael H. Collins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. S. A. WRIGHT AND MRS. C. FAHNESTOCK.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 667) for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright and Mrs. C. Fahnestock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GENERAL D. C. THOMAS.

Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2012) to increase the pension of General D. C. Thomas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM THOMAS.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2433) granting a pension to William Thomas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY T. M'CAWLEY.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1769) granting a pension to Mary T. McCawley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PHEBE W. ROSS.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 708) granting a pension to Phebe W. Ross, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSAN MARSHALL MASSIE.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOUISVILLE.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the bill (H. R. No. 521) for the construction of a public building at Louisville, Kentucky. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CASWELL. I hope the House will permit us to go on with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I give notice, if the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be voted down, I will then move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope the House will go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. We have had no private bill day for two weeks.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let to-morrow be considered as private bill day, and to-day can be devoted to finishing the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 60.

Mr. CASWELL. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CASWELL and Mr. TAYOLR were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 60.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. DUNNELL in the chair.

Mr. HISCOCK. I give notice that we shall insist on a session of the House to-morrow for the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business on the Private Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of William P. Chambliss; which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate William P. Chambliss, late a major of the Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, and place his name on the list of retired officers of the United States Army with the rank to which he would have attained in service at the date of the passage of this act: Provided, however, That he shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind under the provisions of this act for the time intervening between the 1st day of November, 1867, the date of his resignation, and the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the committee will indulge me a moment, I will endeavor briefly to explain what I consider the merit of this proposition.

Mr. SPARKS. What is the order of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is now pending before the committee, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] who reported it from the Committee on Military Affairs has the floor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. This proposition is the application of Major William P. Chambliss, who resigned in the year 1867-'68 from the United States Army, to be restored to the retired list with the rank held by him at the time. It is one of only two or three cases of a similar character. Without arguing in detail the whole case, I will call the attention of the committee to the statement of Major Chambliss of the circumstances under which his application is made. He states in a letter in my possession as follows:

In my condition of health, and at my age, the money consideration involved in the question of my retirement cannot now be a matter of serious consequence to the Government, or even to myself; but at the time of my resignation the country had but recently emerged from a long and devastating civil war. It was encumbered with a vast public debt, and its financial future was at least uncertain. The nation then could only be just, not generous; and had I at once petitioned Congress to reinstate and retire me, my petition should have been denied. But now the country is great and prosperous, and will not, I am sure, exclude an equitable claim upon technical grounds. My anxiety in the matter arises from a wish to be able, when I die, to bequeath to my children a legacy of incalculable value to them, an act of Congress which would be in its nature and effects a recognition that I had in the hour of my country's peril rendered services worthy remembrance and reward.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

At the time Major Chambliss resigned he believed he would be able to secure by active exertions in life in his profession some support for himself, but the wounds which he received on the battle-field became aggravated in their character, so that at this day almost at every hour his life is menaced by them. Let me for a moment state what these wounds are, and I will quote from the report which accompanies the bill:

CINCINNATI, June 25, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to state that I was wounded at the battle of Gaines's Mill on June 27, 1862, and taken to Libby prison as prisoner of war. In this prison, and lying next to and very near me, was William P. Chambliss, then a captain of the Fifth United States Cavalry. He was very dangerously wounded, and for several weeks it was thought impossible that he could live. Being so near to him, I became perfectly familiar with his condition; daily saw his wounds dressed, and perfectly well knew the nature and extent of them, and expected that each day would see his suffering relieved by death. He was wounded in the abdomen by a gunshot, and in the left thigh gunshot, charge of buckshot, and right shoulder dislocated from fall from his horse; also a gunshot wound in the back close to one of his kidneys, the ball remaining in his body; it could not be extracted, and no doubt entirely disables him. Captain Chambliss, Major Clitz, Twelfth United States Infantry, and myself were paroled and taken to Westover Landing the same day, and came to New York in the hospital ship towed by the Vanderbilt. Captain Chambliss was even then so critical in condition that he had to at once enter hospital in New York City.

From my personal knowledge of his condition, resulting from wounds received in battle, I do not consider him capable to perform any duty of a character requiring a reasonable amount of physical exertion; and that he is still alive is a remarkable case and exceptional in every way.

I certify the above to be a true statement of the facts in this case so far as my recollection serves at this time.

P. W. STANHOPE,
Major, U. S. A.

The Hon. COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

It is from that last wound that to-day he is, as it were, walking in the very shadow of death.

I shall be excused, Mr. Chairman, I know, for referring to a distinguished gentleman on the floor of this House, Colonel UPSON of the State of Texas. He was the man into whose hands Major Chambliss fell, and he is here to bear tribute to the fact that the charge in which Major Chambliss was wounded was more brilliant, more daring even than that one so celebrated in song as the charge at Balaklava. That man having in his patriotism resigned because he believed his Government was burdened by heavy debt, now seeing that his country is prosperous, while his wounds have become aggravated in their character, asks as a matter of justice, as a memorial of honor to transmit to his children, that Congress will recognize his services as they have those of other distinguished and gallant patriots by placing him, as this bill proposes, upon the retired list of the Army. The committee have reported the bill favorably, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, to all that part of the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee touching the gallantry of this soldier while in the service I have no desire to make any objection. He was, I presume, a good soldier. He was wounded two or three times in battle, and that indicates that he must have got somewhere near the enemy. He subsequently retired from the Army of his own free will and by his own volition, and I presume under the law got one year's advanced pay and allowances.

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. SPARKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOOK. I know the gentleman from Illinois would not intentionally make a statement unless he knew it to be warranted by the facts, but I think he is mistaken in this regard. I am absolutely certain that he is mistaken, and that this officer did not receive the advanced pay and allowances alluded to by him. He resigned, I think, in 1866, which was before the law was passed authorizing this year's advanced pay and allowance.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I think I must stand corrected upon that point, for I find that he retired before the passage of that law. That law was passed in 1870 and this officer left the service in 1867, consequently he could not have received the advance pay and allowances under it. He did, however, make his application for a pension on account of wounds received in the service, and got it, and his name now stands upon the rolls of the Government as a pensioner. He has received, and is now receiving, twenty or twenty-four dollars per month, and has, I presume, got all the arrears due to him at that rate, if he did not get his pension in time to preclude the payment of arrears.

Now these are, as I understand them, the facts in relation to this matter. This was a gallant soldier, I have no doubt about that, nor have I any doubt of the fact that he served his country faithfully and well, just as a million of other men did under similar circumstances. He retired of his own accord; resigned his commission in the Army and went into private life of his own volition. I presume there were satisfactory reasons, personal to himself, for doing this, and I suppose he has succeeded well in the ordinary affairs of business to which he has devoted himself since his resignation, but this I do not know. Now, after a great number of years' absence from the Army, out of the service, and drawing a handsome pension, he discovers that if he had contrived to get retired upon the retired pay of the rank then held by him he would have drawn much more money from the Treasury and filled his pockets much fuller than he has done in drawing his ordinary pension. Hence his desire to be restored to the Army and retired.

Now, what is the argument in favor of his restoration? Why should he be restored? Why not restore every other officer who has resigned? These applications, Mr. Chairman, are now pouring in upon us at a rapidly increasing rate; application after application is already presented, and if you open the doors in this manner by the passage of this bill where they will end it is difficult to foresee. The only object that I can see for this man's wanting to be restored, and the only reason for Congress restoring him that I can comprehend, is simply to give him the difference between $20 or $24 a month pension, which he is now entitled to receive and is now receiving, and some $200 a month which he would draw as a major on the retired list of the Army. Are we prepared to do this?

I remember a case we had here some time ago, I think it was in the Forty-fifth Congress, when an effort was made to place General Shields, who had served so gallantly in the Mexican war and was wounded so severely at that time, and who had also served his country so well in the late war, on the retired list as a brigadier-general. Though it passed this House it was defeated in the Senate, and it was regarded as a great thing afterward to allow him the pitiful pension of one hundred dollars a month, after a lifetime of gallant and meritorious service for his country. But Congress has undergone such change that now this man, who left the service of his own accord, who has been drawing a large pension ever since he has been out of the service, comes in and asks to be placed upon the retired list, of such rank as to enable him to draw some two hundred dollars a month, twice as much as Congress was then willing to allow General Shields, who attained the rank of major-general in two wars, was severely wounded in each, and was a hero in both. I shall not occupy the time of the committee but a moment longer.

I hope, sir, that the committee will consider this matter carefully before giving its assent to a proposition fraught with such mischief as this bill proposes. I have said nothing derogatory to the character of this applicant as a soldier or as a man. I could say nothing truthfully against him, for I know nothing about him that is to his disparagement. I speak only of the facts as they are presented here. I think to grant such an application would be an outrage upon the people whom we represent. If under the circumstances here presented we put this man upon the retired list, hundreds upon hundreds of applications will be following close upon this, all presenting reasons equally strong, and urging services equally meritorious in the applicants in order to get themselves placed upon the retired list to live high at public expense.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, in response to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, I will occupy the attention of the committee but a few moments.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask if it would be in order to move that the committee rise and limit debate on this proposition? We have spent a good deal of time already on the last private bill day upon this bill, and we have been in the habit of consuming the entire day on every Friday with the consideration of a single case. I hope debate will be limited.

Mr. STEELE. I shall occupy but a few moments of the time of the committee.

I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that there would be no voice raised against the passage of a bill so meritorious as that which is now presented for the consideration of the committee. I have examined it carefully, and the Committee on Military Affairs will bear me out when I say that I am scrupulously careful about making favorable reports.

Major Chambliss was two years in Mexico, and for his gallantry there won his commission in the regular Army. In 1861, after serving in Texas in the spring of that year, we find him here, and owing to his trustworthy qualities his battalion was placed in the United States Treasury to protect it against threatening surroundings. And, Mr. Chairman, well did he perform his duty.

With his comrades in arms, his brother officers from all parts of the South appealing to him to join them, he remained faithful to his trust, and his response was always like that of a faithful soldier, that he would on no account admit their right to the Treasury or the capital of the United States, and that it was his duty to remain and defend the capital, let what would follow.

June, 1862, found him at Gaines's Mill. The enemy had massed a very heavy force upon the right of our line. Imminent danger was threatening us, and Major Chambliss and his command of barely two hundred men were the only force we could find to oppose them. He was ordered to charge. An order to such a man meant victory or death; and of those two hundred men charging on that line there were only eight or ten who came off without being wounded or having suffered death. Major Chambliss was wounded in the back, right in the midst of the enemy. He had eight buckshot in his body and four other gunshot wounds. He lay on the field of battle there ten days in the rain or under the scorching sun. He went to Richmond and there lay in hospital broken out all over with erysipelas, so that his body was literally painted all over with iodine. As General McClellan says, he escaped death as by a miracle.

The medical evidence shows from that day to this he has been incapable of performing any manual labor. The records show that he went on and tried and tried to perform the duties of a soldier.

The year 1867 found him broken down in health and his wife's health very bad. He was at that time eligible to retirement in consequence of wounds received; but he had a repugnance to asking the country to care for him in civil life. Therefore he resigned his commission, and said to the country, "I have given fifteen years of the best of my life to the military service of the country; I will now try to do for myself." He comes back to us now and says, "I have made as good a fight as I know how; I could have been retired in 1867 and have drawn up to this time about twenty-five thousand dollars in money; I hope that undertaking to fight life's battle was no offense, and that you will put me right back to where I was then; my rank then was major; I ask to be restored as major and retired; every single cent of money I have drawn for pension I propose to restore; I do not ask you a single dollar of pay for the interim; I only ask that I be placed on the retired list to date from and after the passage of this act." I do not believe that this committee is going to say to that gallant man, "Technically, you are out of the service; and we will prevent you from coming back."

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. Does the bill propose to give back his pension to the Government. If the gentleman says that, I controvert his statement. The bill proposes no such thing. It provides that he shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance for the time between the date of his resignation and the passage of the act. But meanwhile he has been drawing his pension.

Mr. STEELE. If that is not considered as compensation then he would not have to restore that. I do not think he ought to be required to restore it. There is not one single charge against this man of any kind. His record is brilliant all the way through. The only question is whether we will retire him now instead of his having been retired as he might have been under the law in 1867.

It has been said upon this floor that the restoration of this gallant officer might be opposed because I, forsooth, opposed the restoration of Kirby. The cases are not similar, and I venture the prediction, and I stake my reputation on it, that while we are working on this officer's bill he is not lying drunk in this city. I hope the bill will be reported favorably to the House.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

Mr. BRAGG. I hope it may be the pleasure of this committee to look with favor on this bill; and I cannot but express my deep regret that the late distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs should think that this bill was one unworthy of the support of this committee. And I can assign no really good reason that should actuate him [Mr. SPARKS rose] except it be that this man does not come here asking at the hands of this House that he shall be relieved from the verdict of a court-martial for drunkenness, incapacity——

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BRAGG. And conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. It is but two weeks since——

Mr. SPARKS. Does the gentleman allude to me as desiring that an officer shall have that relief?

Mr. BRAGG. It is but two weeks since the stentorian voice of my distinguished colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs made this Hall ring with the justice of a demand that a man who had been so dismissed by the verdict of a court should be reinstated and be given his rank after fourteen years' absence from the Army, he never having served in the regular Army but two years, placing him over those who had fought the battles of the country from that time to this and raising him nearly two hundred upon the files for future promotion. And yet to-day we hear him denouncing this bill as one unworthy the attention of this House. And why? Because this officer resigned.

Do the committee know what the retired list of the Army was prepared for? Do they know what the object of it was? Do they know that the sole object of it was to provide for the officers of the regular Army who were worn out in service, or who, by reason of disability contracted in the service, should have fixed for them a home and a provision made for them by a generous Government, for which they had risked their lives and lost their constitutions and their health.

Who is Major Chambliss? A soldier of the Mexican war from Tennessee, appointed to the regular Army just after the close of the Mexican war. I will give the date in a moment. I find he was appointed in 1855 a lieutenant of the Second United States Cavalry. He was on the frontier when his senior officer and many of his fellows saw fit to adopt the policy of going with their States. Resisting all influence from his own State, from his own family, from his own surroundings, he stood true to his flag under which he held his commission, deserting his own State, and standing by the national colors.

At the battle of Gaines's Farm, while leading his command, he received ten wounds from bullets, was riddled with bullets like a sieve, and lay for ten days upon the field. He was then taken captive and carried to prison, and for being alive to-day he may thank the kind attentions which he received at the hands of the late Doorkeeper of this House, Colonel Field, and his wife.

In 1867, being unable to do duty, he resigned. To what was he entitled at the time of his resignation? He was entitled to go upon the retired list of the Army. He belonged to a class for which that retired list had been established in 1861. By the act of 1861, when an officer becomes incapable of performing the duties of his office he is to be retired from active service, or wholly retired from service. In that law there is a provision for the appointment of a board of officers to inquire into the nature and occasion of his disabilities, and if they find that such disabilities were worthily contracted the officer is to be retired with the rank he then holds.

Had he been so retired in 1867, instead of the paltry pension of which the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. SPARKS,] speaks, he would have been able to draw from the Government during all those years $187.50 per month. That is what he is entitled to under the law. But true soldier as he was, feeling then as all of us felt, that the Government at that time was heavily burdened by the debt which was hanging over it, and not appreciating, as but few of us appreciated, the era of prosperity which was to ensue, with the pride of a soldier declining to go on the retired list and live at the expense of the Government, he went forth into common business life, riddled with balls as he was, and sought there to provide for himself, preferring to do so as a man rather than to accept the benefits which the act of Congress had provided for the support of him and others in like circumstances.

Years afterward, in the days of our prosperity, he had learned from experience the fact that it is easier for a soldier to imagine that he can go into ordinary pursuits of life and struggle with those who have been bred to business than to actually accomplish that result. He finds that that effort on his part is in a great measure a failure. He sees that his Government is prosperous and with a large surplus in its Treasury, and he now comes back and asks the favor of having restored to him what he could have had and what he was entitled to as a matter of right, but what he did not take at a time when the Treasury was depleted.

Now shall such an officer as that, with broken health and a shattered constitution, a man who has given the best years of his life to the service of the Government—shall he be told that because he gave up $187.50 a month and has received in lieu of it for but a portion of the time since the sum of $20 a month, we have no place for him, but that we have places for men who have been dismissed and cashiered for drunkenness and for non-performance of duty?

I trust that such is not the sense of this House; but that this soldier, and all others who may be standing in the same position which he stands in, may not appeal to this Government and have their appeals unheard and unanswered.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am in full accord with the gentleman from Wisconsin in regard to the merits of this case; but I desire to make an inquiry of him as he seems to be familiar with the law. I would inquire of him whether if this officer is restored and retired he will be counted in the number to which the retired list is restricted—that is, four hundred?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If he would be I should be opposed to this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. He will be retired by special act of Congress; and, as I think, the Department construes the limit that is placed upon the retired list as a limit intended to apply to retirements made in regular order under the laws controlling the Department and regulating retirements. This will stand as a case of special retirement. Even were it not so, the fact that there is a limit is no reason why we who made the limit and have the power of removing it should hesitate one moment in removing it when we find a case deserving of such action.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If the gentleman is clear that this might be done in addition to the limit now fixed I should be very glad to have the bill passed.

Mr. BRAGG. If there is the least doubt about it I have no doubt the gentleman in charge of the bill will consent to an amendment if the gentleman from Michigan sees fit to offer one.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Indiana, my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. STEELE,] as I am informed, in closing his speech on this occasion, made some reference to some action of mine touching another case that was recently before the House. I say I am informed (for I did not hear the gentleman) that he made a statement which insinuated that while I opposed this soldier's claim I was ready on another occasion to vote for another soldier who was lying around this city drunk. Am I correct in that? The gentleman is present and I ask him.

Mr. STEELE. I stated that I had been told this bill would be opposed because of my antagonism to the bill for the restoration of Kirby.

Mr. SPARKS. Was that all you stated?

Mr. STEELE. That is what I said in that regard. I also said that the cases were not similar; that I would stake my reputation on the fact that this officer is not lying drunk here while we are considering his bill.

Mr. SPARKS. I am afraid the gentleman has not fairly answered my question. The gentleman evidently alluded to me. If the gentleman means that because he favors or opposes any case that I would favor or oppose one, that I would be influenced by any such consideration as that, I must say that the gentleman has no conception of the character of the man to whom he alludes. I care not how the gentleman votes, or for whom he votes, or whose case he advocates. It is no concern of mine.

But the man who would insinuate that I would advocate on this floor the claim of any one, knowing or believing him to be an unworthy man, slanders me and falsifies every act of my life. No, sir; if I have ever voted for or advocated in this House the claim of any unworthy man I have been overreached in my estimate of him, for I have certainly believed him to be worthy. The gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] with more knowledge of me and of the facts than had the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. STEELE,] intensifies that insinuation by an indirect——

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SPARKS. No, sir; I do not yield; you did not yield to me.

Mr. BRAGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SPARKS. By the insinuation that I have been advocating the restoration of some unworthy officer back into the Army. Mr. Chairman, I will let my reputation for supporting worthy objects and worthy men on this floor go out to the country side by side with that of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I shall feel that its verdict will not be unfavorable to me.

The case of Kirby has been alluded to. What is the case of Kirby? He was an officer who, as the record showed, had been badly treated. A farcical court-martial had attempted to turn him out. He was a brave soldier. An admitted weakness with him was that on one notable occasion it was apparent that he had been drinking too much. Sir, that weakness notoriously pervades others in and out of the Army. Thank God, I can stand here and truthfully say that it does not apply to me. But apart from this weakness of Kirby, he was accused of having acted dishonestly touching money matters, and of having insulted a lady. A farcical court-martial had acted on his case, and in defiance of the law and common sense and fairness had convicted him. We argued these questions frankly to this House. The bill was advocated by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE,] by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. HENDERSON,] and by other gentlemen who had carefully examined it in committee, and I believe was carried through the House by a vote of nearly two to one, notwithstanding the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] resorted to filibustering expedients to defeat it; and it passed the Senate by a large majority, and the Senate bill is now lying on your table.

The affirmative vote I find in the RECORD on the Kirby case was 97. These ninety-seven gentlemen, therefore, have been committing the same fault that I have in that case; but upon the gentleman's theory I am not permitted to come in and urge that this bill ought not to pass, for the reason that I once advocated the passage of some bill which the gentleman himself in the minority thinks the majority should not have passed. I cannot see the relevancy of that argument. I cannot see that the Kirby bill cuts any figure in this case. It has been disposed of. If I have on any occasion voted for a man who has subsequently disgraced himself (which I do not believe) I hope God will forgive him and me too. That "me too" is original. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am about done with this question. I regret exceedingly that gentlemen have indulged in reflections upon their colleagues on the committee touching other cases not now before us and having no connection with the subject now under discussion. What is this case? I have stated once that I believe Major Chambliss to be a good man and a gallant soldier. But I do object to his being restored to the Army and retired with the rank of major, for the reason that he resigned that office voluntarily and went out of the service, afterward applied for a pension, obtained his pension, and now seeks to come back upon the register of the Army and get about ten times the amount of his pension. I do not think that is right. I do not think we ought to pass such a measure, and to do so I think will be to establish a mischievous and dangerous precedent.

Mr. BRAGG addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. I think, from the discussion already had, the Committee of the Whole understands the bill, and I hope my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will permit a vote to be now taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

Mr. BRAGG. I desire only to make a remark or two. I regret exceedingly that I brushed the hair upon the head of my colleague on the committee [Mr. SPARKS] the wrong way. I had no idea there would be such a grand exhibition of fire-works. I regret exceedingly his temper is such this morning that we are not able to show his inconsistencies by alluding to the course taken in a late debate with reference to another Army officer. I sincerely beg his pardon if he thinks I intended to reflect upon him personally.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to appear at all without raising something like "fire-works;" but I have never been able before the public to play so skillfully as the gentleman from Wisconsin his peculiar game of "brag." [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I very much wish that when a case of this kind comes before the House we would confine ourselves to the question at issue. I do not propose to discuss the merits of this bill, which was very fully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I had hoped met the unanimous approbation of that committee. There is but a single question in this case; that is whether, under any circumstances whatever, when a man has voluntarily retired from the Army, he shall ever be restored and placed upon the retired list. This bill certainly presents as strong a case as any that could be presented for our consideration.

What are the facts? Simply that this man, when he was wounded, disabled, unfitted for service, and was entitled to be placed on the retired list of the Army, thought proper to resign rather than become a charge upon the country. Now, when he finds his disability increasing, he asks to be restored to the right which he voluntarily surrendered some years ago. I think no one who will examine the merits of this case, who will read the record and history of this officer, can hesitate for a moment to admit the justice of his application, which is all the stronger because of the circumstances of his resignation. If he had been an active man, if he had been fitted for the service at the time of his resignation, if he had not been entitled to be retired when he voluntarily left the Army, I would not vote to restore him and place him upon the retired list. I have opposed the passage of any bills of that sort, and propose to continue to oppose them. But in this instance it does look to me as if this officer was entitled now to the recognition which he asks at the hands of this committee and of this Congress and of the country, because of his resignation at the time when he could have enjoyed the right which he now seeks.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, upon the merits of this question it seems to me that there ought not to be the slightest difference of opinion, and I do not propose to discuss that subject at all. But the question I suggested to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] whether the reinstatement of this officer and then his retirement would be counted upon the retired list, I think presents an open question, and if it is to be so counted, then I think it ought not to be done, because when an officer of the regular Army is retired it gives an opportunity for promotion of the officers occupying the lower grades all the way down the line; but where you take an outside party and reinstate and retire him, it gives no opportunity for promotion, and if that is to be counted in making up the limit fixed by law, that is, four hundred, I think it would work great injustice to the other officers of the Army.

After making the suggestion my attention was called to the proceeding—and perhaps this is not altogether parliamentary for me to refer to—in the other end of the Capitol on yesterday, when this very question was raised, whether the retirement of a certain officer would not be counted in addition to this four hundred, and considerable doubt was expressed in reference to it. In view of that doubt, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the retirement provided for shall be in addition to the number now authorized by law.

Mr. BAYNE. There is no objection whatever to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ERRETT. Is there not an amendment of the committee pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not been informed of any pending amendment.

Mr. ERRETT. The committee reported an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the bill is reported back as amended.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that is wrong. I think the committee would oppose the bill without that amendment. There is an amendment reported by the committee that ought to be adopted by the House; that is, to strike out certain words in the bill in relation to the rank.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question pending when the bill was last under consideration to the committee.

Mr. SKINNER. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether, if this bill passes, it entitles the officer to back pay, and if so to how much?

Mr. McCOOK. It does not entitle him to back pay.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; that was stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in lines 6 and 7: "to which he would have attained in service at the date of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside and reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 17.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SPARKS. I shall not make the point of order of no quorum, for there is evidently a quorum in the House.

WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 670) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William M. Maynadier, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,726.50, the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona Territory, caused by robbery committed by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, at Prescott, April 3, 1876, as shown by the finding and report of a board of inquiry appointed by General Kautz, commanding that military department, to investigate the circumstances of the loss; and also the further sum of $100 paid by said Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler, the restoration of both sums having been recommended by said board of inquiry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying that bill? If so, I ask that it be read.

The report was read. It is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 670) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, report that the committee finding no papers with reference thereto on file with the clerk of said committee, they requested the War Department to furnish a statement of the evidence in their possession regarding the loss of the money referred to in the bill, and in reply to this request the committee have received the accompanying documents, which is all the evidence before them, and is a full and complete history of the circumstances. The documents referred to are as follows:

First. Letter from the honorable Secretary of War, of January 16, 1882, transmitting evidence. One sheet.

Second. Proceedings of a board of officers convened at headquarters Department of Arizona, November 17, 1876, pursuant to Special Orders No. 138, dated Headquarters Department of Arizona, November 6, 1876, to examine and report upon the loss of public funds for which Major W. M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army, is responsible, reported to have been stolen from his official safe by an absconding clerk.

This report, together with the documents attached thereto, in all comprising forty-three sheets, are attached hereto as a part of this report.

The report shows that Major Maynadier, in the performance of his duties as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona Territory, was authorized to keep the Government money in an iron safe at that place. That his clerk stole or embezzled therefrom $4,017 of Government funds, together with $147.35 which Major Maynadier had received as the effects of a deceased soldier, and absconded.

That prompt measures were taken by Major Maynadier to pursue and arrest him, and that he was arrested.

That $290 was returned, and the balance, $3,726.50, was replaced by Major Maynadier, he borrowing the same.

The report also shows that Major Maynadier paid $100 of his own funds to secure the arrest of the clerk.

The board states that this clerk "had been highly recommended by two experienced paymasters, in whose employ he had been, and that during the year that he served with Major Maynadier he was considered honest and capable. Again, the safe was one which had been specially selected by proper authority for the paymaster's use, and was believed to be perfectly secure."

The sworn statement of Major Maynadier, which appears as an exhibit to the report of the board, shows that the clerk, D. D. Chandler, never had the combination of the safe locks, and was never permitted by Major Maynadier to enter the safe.

The same sworn statement says:

"When I received my appointment as paymaster, I asked the Paymaster-General if he knew of a suitable clerk he could recommend to me, but he did not happen to know of any at that time. Colonel Carey, paymaster United States Army, then informed me that he knew of an excellent man, David D. Chandler, who had been clerk for him for two or three years and who was then serving as clerk to Major Bridgeman, paymaster United States Army; that he could recommend him as being a good clerk and a reliable man. Upon such recommendation I employed Chandler as my clerk, although previously I had no knowledge whatever of the man."

The board close their report in the following words:

"In conclusion, the board find that Major Maynadier was on duty by proper authority as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona; that he was duly authorized and required to keep public money in a safe provided for the purpose, there being no depository available; that he did so keep public money, though not in excess of what the service at his station required; that the safe provided for him was a large fire and burglar proof one, manufactured by Jonathan Kitridge, of San Francisco, having two combination locks, the outer one being T. E. Burwall's and the inner one 'Young's rotary combination;' that Major Maynadier never made known these combinations; that said safe appears to be a good and secure one; that the clerk, D. D. Chandler, was well recommended and apparently capable and trustworthy; that on March 31, 1876, Major Maynadier had in his safe what under a customarily careful count appeared to be $4,081.11, but there should have been $4,228.46; that on Monday, April 3, 1876, he found in his safe only $211.46, the balance, $4,017, having been stolen by Chandler, who afterward returned $290.50; leaving the amount actually lost by Major Maynadier $3,726.50.

"The following tabular statement will show more briefly the exact state of the case:

Amount shown as on hand by statement of April 1, 1876	$4,081 11
Amount received in March, 1876, but not reported until May (effects of deceased soldiers)	147 35
True amount for which Major Maynadier was responsible	4,228 46
Amount found in safe after burglary	211 46
Total amount stolen	4,017 00
Amount returned by Chandler upon his arrest	290 50
Amount actually lost	3,726 50

"Under instructions of the Paymaster-General, Major Maynadier has refunded the amount lost, but so far as the board can ascertain it believes that Major Maynadier exercised due care in the keeping of the public money intrusted to him, and therefore recommend that he be relieved from responsibility for the loss of the $3,726.50, and that this amount, increased by the $100 paid by Major Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler, making a total of $3,826.50, be restored to Major W. M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army.

"There being no further business before it, the board adjourned sine die.

"RODNEY SMITH,
"Major and Paymaster, United States Army, President.
"C. A. REYNOLDS,
"Major and Quartermaster, United States Army, Member.
"JOHN SIMPSON,
"Captain and Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army, Recorder."

The committee find that precedents appear to show that when money is lost in the custody of a disbursing officer under circumstances as above described it is returned to him by act of Congress.

Major Maynadier had lost the interest upon the amount for nearly six years, which he does not seek to have restored to him.

House bill No. 670 is therefore reported back, with recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that those portions of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes which I have marked be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

First. All claims founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the Government of the United States, and all claims which may be referred to it by either House of Congress.

* * * * * * *

Third. The claim of any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence, or other disbursing officer of the United States, or of his administrators or executors, for relief from responsibility on account of capture or otherwise, while in the line of his duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, and for which such officer was and is held responsible.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to perceive from anything which appears in this report why this bill should now be presented for our consideration. This officer was entitled to have had an adjudication of his case through the intervention of the Court of Claims. The third clause of the section of the act which has just been read confers jurisdiction expressly upon the Court of Claims in any case where a disbursing officer seeks to be relieved from responsibility on account of capture or otherwise of Government funds while in the line of duty; that is to say, in all cases where relief is sought by such officer for losses sustained while in the performance of his duty.

To my mind the argument is conclusive that this claim is not one properly before Congress, unless it be shown in some way satisfactorily that for some cause the officer was not able to get in the Court of Claims the relief to which he was entitled under the law. I hope the gentleman reporting the bill will show how it has happened that this court which had jurisdiction over the matter was not resorted to, or why this gentleman failed to avail himself of that opportunity.

There was a tribunal authorized by law to try the case, and where a judgment in the case of a disbursing officer, under this paragraph of the section, would have been final and conclusive. But it seems that he has not thought proper to go to that source of relief that has been furnished by the Government.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think a careful examination of that statute will show that it does not cover the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. That it does not cover it?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; that it does not cover this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to read the statute unless this provision does cover this case. This was a disbursing officer. "The claim of any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence or other disbursing officer of the United States." He was a paymaster. "For relief on account of capture or otherwise." It covers the whole ground, no matter how the loss occurred, whether "by capture or otherwise." It does not matter whether it occurred by embezzlement of a subordinate or by another cause. It is covered by the words here used, "by capture or otherwise while in the line of duty." Certainly my friend does not propose to relieve him if he was not in the line of duty. "While in the line of duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, and for which such officer was and is held responsible."

There is something latent and hidden about that if it does not apply to this case. Here was a disbursing officer, a paymaster, one of the officers named in the act, having charge of public funds, and he alleges those funds were lost by the embezzlement of his clerk, and yet he shows satisfactorily to my mind that his clerk could not get into that safe, and there are no facts before the committee to show that the clerk did get into that safe, and yet my friend, I say, suggests the law does not cover this case. It leaves me so embarrassed in discussing the question, because I found my opposition on the statute and the lack of proof of embezzlement, that I give way to my friend to explain why it does not cover the case.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, in the examination of this case the Committee upon Military Affairs considered very carefully the evidence which was placed before them by the War Department. They also considered the action of Congress in previous instances of a like character. The closing words of the report are as follows:

The committee find that precedents appear to show that where money has been lost in the custody of a disbursing officer under circumstances as above described it has been returned to him by act of Congress.

I hold in my hand volume 1 of a work published by Congress containing an alphabetical list of private claims brought before the Senate of the United States. I have selected a few cases from this lengthy list, all of which are laws enacted by Congress, and all of which were laws reimbursing officials for money lost or stolen. Many of the cases cited were reimbursements to officers of money lost through the defalcation or theft of clerks or deputies. I have only examined the first part of the list extending from the letter A to the letter G. The paper I have prepared gives the names of the beneficiary under the act, the date of approval of the law, and the page upon which the case is reported. I request that the paper be read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHEELER. I might have gone on through the alphabet, and through the various volumes of private claims which have been favorably acted upon by this body, but I did not feel it necessary to occupy the time of Congress upon that subject. Enough has been cited to show the uniform course of legislation upon such matters. I stopped with the case where Congress relieved and reimbursed ex-President Grant for moneys stolen from him while a disbursing officer of the Army of the United States.

Every one of the cases read by the Clerk were similar in character to the one now before the committee, and I have been unable to find that any of them had more merit than the case now under consideration.

With regard to the statute my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had read from the Clerk's desk I desire to say one word. I request that the House will give the section 1059 a critical and judicial examination. It states that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction "for relief from responsibility on account of capture or otherwise."

Now every lawyer in this House will admit that in judicially construing this language we cannot extend the meaning and use of the word "otherwise" to cover every character of loss, as is contended by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] Such language in a statute construed as I submit it always is and always should be, by judges and lawyers, can only be extended so as to refer to losses of a character similar to losses by capture. For instance, losses caused by or incident to war. If the word "otherwise" included every loss, then the word "capture" would mean nothing, and we cannot assume that Congress used so significant a word as "capture" without attaching some meaning to it. If the law-makers had intended to include money stolen by a clerk in time of peace they would have used different language, and if they had meant, as my friend suggests, to cover all losses, they would not have used the word "capture."

Therefore I think the reasonable construction of that statute would not give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in this case, and we are strengthened in this view from the fact that we see by the paper read by the Clerk that since the organization of the Court of Claims Congress has gone on and relieved officers in cases like this; and we all know that during this session bills have passed the House and Senate of a like character.

It seems to me unnecessary to detain the House by further discussion, and I leave it to this honorable body in the hope they will sustain the committee, who, I assure them, made every effort to give it the careful examination such a case merited.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say this one word. I am unable to discover why the Court of Claims has not jurisdiction of this matter, and I entirely disagree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat that the statute was not intended to cover just such cases. Indeed I hold in my hand the ninety-fourth volume of the Reports of the Supreme Court of the United States, of a case decided in 1876. It was decided by the Court of Claims in the first place, and come up on appeal to the Supreme Court. The statement of the case in the head-notes is this:

On the 12th of April, 1873, Clark filed his petition in the Court of Claims praying relief from responsibility under the act of May 9, 1866 (14 Stats., 44)— on account of the loss by robbery of funds to the amount of $15,979.87 belonging to the United States, and in his hands as a paymaster in the Army. The United States pleaded the general issue and the statute of limitations.

That was the case of a loss by a paymaster of the United States Army, who filed his petition in the Court of Claims under this identical statute. He obtained judgment, and then the case, upon an appeal to the Supreme Court, was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, upon that question I have no doubt but what the Court of Claims has jurisdiction of this matter, and it ought to go there. And while I am up, without detaining the committee a moment, I challenge the attention of the committee and the gentleman who has this matter in charge to the fact that nowhere in this report are the circumstances stated under which this money was stolen. Now, we never have granted relief except in those cases where it appeared that the officer having charge of the money exercised due care in taking care of it. But in this case, from the beginning to the end, there is nothing in the report even stating the circumstances under which the money was lost; whether the officer went out of the room and left the safe wide open; whether he was guilty of the grossest negligence or not. Nothing of this kind appears in this report; and I submit, independently of the question whether the Court of Claims has jurisdiction of this matter or not, that upon this report this claim ought not to pass, because there is not a statement in it from beginning to end of any of the circumstances, much less anything showing ordinary care or any care whatever. As long as the report is utterly silent upon that question, I submit that we ought not to pass a claim of this magnitude until the committee having this matter in charge shall disclose to the Committee of the Whole the circumstances under which the money was lost, so that we may judge whether ordinary care even was exercised in the custody of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

On the question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN's motion there were—ayes 37, noes 18.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to.

CARLILE BOYD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1400) for the relief of Carlile Boyd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate Captain and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Carlile Boyd, lately of the United States Army, who was wholly retired from the service on the 22d day of March, 1879, and to retire him in the grade of captain as of the date he was wholly retired, charging him with all extra pay and allowances paid him at that time.

The bill was reported with the following amendment:

In line 8 strike out the words "as of the date he was wholly retired, charging him with all extra pay and allowances paid him at that time," and insert in lieu thereof "from and after the passage of this act."

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs submit the following report on the bill (H. R. No. 1400) for the relief of Carlile Boyd, late captain in the Army:

Carlile Boyd entered the military service of the United States as second lieutenant Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry May 9, 1861. Was promoted to be major of that regiment January 1, 1863, and was mustered out at expiration of term of service May 14, 1863. Was appointed major Veteran Reserve Corps September 17, 1863, and lieutenant-colonel Veteran Reserve Corps September 29, 1863, and honorably mustered out June 30, 1866. Was appointed captain Forty-fourth United States Infantry July 28, 1866, and brevetted major and lieutenant-colonel United States Army March 2, 1867, for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battles of Gaines's Mill and Groveton, Virginia. He was transferred to the Seventh United States Infantry May 27, 1869, in which regiment he served until wholly retired, March 22, 1879. Captain Boyd was ordered before a retiring board in February, 1879, at which time he had been absent from his regiment sick for about four years. The board reported that he was incapacitated for active service on account of anæmia and lung disease, which report with the proceedings were forwarded to the War Department, and subsequently returned with instructions to the board to investigate a charge of intemperance made against Captain Boyd by an inspecting officer in Dakota Territory in May, 1877, at which time Captain Boyd had been at his home sick and under medical treatment for the disease of his throat and lungs for more than two years. The board reconvened in March, 1879, and again examined Captain Boyd's case, especially with reference to the said charge of intemperance, and reported him incapacitated for active service on account of anæmia and lung disease, but failed to find that his disease was incident to service, but that it resulted mainly from intemperance. Upon this finding Captain Boyd was wholly retired March 22, 1879, with one year's pay. It appears from the record that Captain Boyd made no defense against the charge of intemperance, nor effort to show that his disease was incident to service, and it does not appear from the evidence before the board that he had been intemperate to a degree that interfered with the performance of his duties as an officer. He has, however, presented evidence before the committee which shows that his long disease was in all probability the result of an attack of pleurisy contracted in 1870, while in the line of his duty, and that from that period until 1874 he was to some extent incapacitated from the discharge of his duties in consequence of it. In October, 1874, he obtained a leave of absence, and went to his home in Philadelphia, where he remained until March, 1879, (the date of his retirement,) sick and unfit for duty. There can be no dispute in regard to Captain Boyd's gallantry and efficiency as an officer up to the period when, as he alleges, he was attacked by pleurisy. He was severely wounded at Groveton, Virginia, (second Bull Run,) August 30, 1862, and was captured by the enemy. The charge that the sickness from which he suffered at the date of retirement was not an incident to his service does not appear to be fully sustained, although there is evidence that at times Captain Boyd indulged freely in the use of stimulants. The certificate of at least one Army surgeon (Major Basil Norris) is to the effect that in June, 1880, Boyd's chest measurement showed "that the left half of the thorax is one inch smaller than the right half," a condition which in his opinion "resulted from a previous attack of pleurisy and consequent contraction of the lung," thus, partially at least, substantiating the assertion of Boyd, that the attack of pleurisy in 1870 was the cause of his physical disability.

At this time Captain Boyd's condition is very serious, and under all the circumstances, taking into consideration his long service, his wounds, and the fact that he is a great sufferer, your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment. That amendment is to the effect that he shall be placed upon the retired list from the date of the passage of the act. Your committee also report that a bill of a somewhat similar character was favorably reported to the House during the Forty-sixth Congress.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

V. M'NALLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize an appointment in the Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint V. McNally, the present chief clerk of the Ordnance Department, an ordnance storekeeper in the Ordnance Department of the Army; and all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act only: Provided, That prior to his appointment he shall have passed a satisfactory examination before a board of ordnance officers.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. SPOONER said: I think it will be unnecessary for the Clerk to read the appendix containing the report of the Secretary of War and accompanying papers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] asks that by unanimous consent the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know if the reading of the report is listened to very attentively by the committee. But as a general thing I think the report should be read in full.

Mr. SPOONER. What follows is in a great measure a repetition of what has been already read.

Mr. KLOTZ. The letter signed by the Secretary of War is certainly not a repetition of what has been read.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the reading being proceeded with.

The Clerk proceeded to read the communication of the Secretary of War. The report in full is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize an appointment in the Army, have duly considered the same and accompanying papers, and recommend that it pass.

The facts upon which this recommendation is based are so fully set forth in the letter of the Secretary of War and the report of the Chief of Ordnance that your committee ask to make them a part of their report.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 16, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 13 instant, inclosing bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize an appointment in the Army, and requesting my views thereon.

In reply, I have the honor to inclose to you herewith a communication addressed to the Secretary of War, under date of January 14 instant, by the Chief of Ordnance, attached to which is a copy of a communication addressed by me on the same subject, December 19, 1881, to Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, United States Senate, in which I recommend a favorable report upon the bill then before me, which, I believe, was identical with bill H. R. No. 721. Inviting your attention to these papers,

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. H. J. SPOONER, M. C.,
Washington, District Columbia.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 14, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith House bill No. 721, referred by the Military Committee for report.

The bill provides for the appointment of V. McNally, the chief clerk of the Ordnance Department, to be an ordnance storekeeper, provided he shall pass a satisfactory examination before a board of ordnance officers.

Of the eleven storekeepers in service, only four are young and active; the others are either on permanent sick leave or over seventy years of age. This appointment will be an eminently proper one, and will give to the service a young and active man with a most excellent record, and who deserves such a recognition of his services.

I inclose a letter written in 1872 by the then Chief of Ordnance, (General Dyer,) recommending him for this position; and the Secretary of War, your predecessor, approved my recommendation during the last session of Congress.

This bill gives to the service a much-needed officer, whose ability, industry, long experience, and intimate knowledge of ordnance duties render him unusually fit for the position. All ordnance storekeepers have been appointed from civil life, and some of those appointed have been promoted from clerkships in the Ordnance Department. This appointment would be in the light of a civil-service promotion, as he has reached, by merit alone, the limit of promotion on the civil list of the Ordnance Department.

In addition to the ordinary requirements, he possesses the varied technical information so essential in the performance of the duties of the Ordnance Department.

Ordnance storekeeprs have not heretofore been required to pass any examination, but I cordially approve the examination proviso in the accompanying bill.

Mr. V. McNally's record of nineteen years in the Ordnance Department is one of faithful and valuable service and of important duties well performed, and I strongly and urgently recommend the passage of this bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 12, 1872.

SIR: Should promotions and appointments be allowed in the Ordnance Department this session, there will be two vacancies in the list of storekeepers, and I have the honor to recommend Dr. V. McNally for one of the places. The doctor has been in the employment of the Department, first at the Springfield Armory, and then in this bureau, since April, 1862; and has, by his talents, acquirements, industry, and faithfulness, reached the position of chief clerk, which he has filled during the past twelve months with signal ability and to my entire satisfaction.

The large property and money responsibility that sometimes fall to the lot of a storekeeper requires that he should be a man of just such habits, acquirements, and experience as I know Dr. McNally to possess, and believe that his appointment would be an excellent one. I therefore earnestly recommend him to your favorable consideration for the position of storekeeper, or any other of equal prominence in the Army.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. B. DYER, Chief of Ordnance.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

APPENDIX.

A copy of the Secretary of War's report on Senate bill No. 190.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, December 19, 1881.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 17th instant, inclosing bill "S. 190, to authorize an appointment in the Army," requesting my views thereon, I have the honor to inclose to you a copy of a communication this day received from the Chief of Ordnance, inclosing a copy of a communication dated December 12, 1872, to the Secretary of War, from General A. B. Dyer, formerly Chief of Ordnance, to which I invite your attention.

I concur in the views expressed by General Benét, the Chief of Ordnance, in respect to the proposed appointment of Mr. McNally as an ordnance storekeeper, and have the honor to recommend a favorable report upon the bill now before you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, U. S. Senate.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 19, 1881.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

[Forty-seventh Congress, first session.—S. No. 190.]

A bill to authorize an appointment in the Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint V. McNally, the present chief clerk of the Ordnance Department, an ordnance storekeeper in the Ordnance Department of the Army, and all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act only: Provided, That prior to his appointment he shall have passed a satisfactory examination before a board of ordnance officers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. GILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1047) for the relief of William H. Gill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint William H. Gill a military storekeeper in the Quartermaster's Department, with the same grade and rank he would have held had he remained continuously in service: Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowances whatever for the time he shall have been out of service, nor shall he be required to refund the pay or allowances received by him at the time he was mustered out of the service: And provided further, That the acceptance of any benefit under this act by the said William H. Gill shall be taken and construed to be by his election a bar to any claim for pay or allowances from the date of his muster-out to the date of his acceptance of a commission under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect William H. Gill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. A precisely similar bill has passed the Senate for the relief of this officer and lies on the Speaker's table. The House Military Committee have made this report; and I ask consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, and to put it on its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate bill cannot be considered now, not having been referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House, and when in the House I will move that the Senate bill be substituted.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MAJOR G. W. CANDEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid to Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury, the sum of $2,650, being the amount stolen from him at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in the fall of 1869, without fault or negligence on his part, and restored by him out of private funds.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, Paymaster United States Army, respectfully submit the following report:

The committee having fully considered said bill and all the facts upon which Major Candee bases his application to Congress to be relieved from the loss sustained by him, report said bill back and recommend its passage.

The facts upon which this recommendation is made are fully set forth in the reports of Major Candee and of the late Paymaster-General of the Army, General Benjamin Alvord, and in the testimonials of officers of high character in the Army, which are hereto annexed and made part of this report.

The committee entertain no doubt of the high character for integrity and fidelity of Major Candee and his clerk, and that said loss was sustained without any fault or negligence of theirs, and believe that under the circumstances he should be relieved from the loss sustained by him:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 8, 1880.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the Committee on Military Affairs, copies of reports of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, and Brigadier-General Benjamin Alvord, Paymaster-General, United States Army, dated, respectively, December 29, 1879, and January 3, 1880, containing information called for under date of December 9, 1879, by the Hon. Benjamin Le Fevre, sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs, in relation to the inclosed bill, House of Representatives No. 3049, for the relief of Major G. W. Candee.

ALEX. RAMSEY,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 19, 1879.

SIR: The accompanying bill (H. R. No. 3049) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, is before the committee, and referred to me for examination and report.

I respectfully request the following information, viz:

First. The military history of the officer.

Second. Was there a want of reasonable care and diligence exercised by the paymaster, Major Candee, while on disbursing duty at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, at the time $2,650 was stolen from his safe?

Third. Is much consideration due Major Candee for his promptness in repairing the loss of the amount of money stolen?

Fourth. If no fault is attached to Major Candee, and his reputation is that of a faithful, industrious, and honorable paymaster, would the Department hold it to be an act of justice if the relief asked for in bill H. R. No. 3049 was granted?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJ. LE FEVRE,
Sub-committee.

The Hon. ALEXANDER RAMSEY,
Secretary of War, Washington, D.C.

[Second indorsement.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 29, 1879.

Respectfully returned to the Paymaster-General, inviting attention to the following report:

November 15, 1869, I received orders from my immediate superior officer, Colonel N. W. Brown, assistant paymaster-general, United States Army, which orders commanded me to leave my station, Fort Smith, Arkansas, and proceed on a disbursing tour in a prescribed district, and pay the troops stationed therein. For the purpose I took with me $83,000 in paper currency of the United States, in packages running from $100 to $5,000. At the Creek agency, Indian Territory, two companies of the Tenth Cavalry were stationed. In paying the said command I used $2,350 from a $5,000 package, which amount paid was marked off the strap that secured the bills; the broken package I returned to the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer; I locked the safe and put the key in my pocket, resumed my journey, arriving at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, at 4 o'clock p. m., November 25, 1869. I accepted an invitation extended to me by Captain Joseph B. Rife, Sixth Infantry, to share his quarters during my temporary residence at the post. After luncheon, arrangements were made to begin the payment of the troops. I unlocked and took from my safe several packages of money, locking my safe afterwards; my clerk assisted in the removing of the straps and placing the bills on the pay-table. When I ceased disbursing for the day I returned to the safe the small amount of money left on the table. As I locked and took the key from the safe, my clerk, Lewis Candee, inquired if I remembered having assorted the broken $5,000 package; I replied I did not handle it. My clerk secured the straps that were taken from the packages of bills paid out. We retired to my sleeping apartment; my clerk looked over the straps; the one belonging to the broken package was not among the number; the contents of the safe were removed, and no trace of the broken package containing the $2,650 was to be found. On my return to my station, Fort Smith, Arkansas, I balanced my accounts, and found a deficit of exactly $2,650. It is evident it had been taken from the safe soon after it was opened, and during the few minutes when my clerk and myself had our faces to the pay-table, arranging the bills in rows and piles of their respective denominations. The loss of the $2,650 being established, my brother, who was then my clerk, insisted that Captain Rife was the thief. I naturally felt that he committed the act, as there was no other way for me to account for the loss, he being the only other occupant of the quarters besides my brother and myself, yet it was a hard matter to charge the officer, whose hospitality I was accepting, as being the thief, when I did not detect him in the act of appropriating the money. In obedience to instructions, my brother went to Richfield, Illinois, and obtained from my father $2,650, to make good the loss, which amount was deposited with the assistant treasurer of the United States at Saint Louis, Missouri.

It is the unanimous opinion of the officers stationed at Fort Arbuckle at the time, that Captain Rife was the person who abstracted the $2,650, which belief is strengthened by a later act of Captain Joseph B. Rife. While commanding an escort for Major David Taylor, paymaster, United States Army, he took from Major Taylor's pocket during the night, while he was asleep, the key to his safe, opened it, and stole from the only remaining $10,000 a package of $1,000, which theft later he acknowledged, and paid back the amount by draft drawn on his brother in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. At this time Captain Rife was forced to resign on account of serious charges then pending, aside from the theft of the $1,000. There can be no question; it is plain that he appropriated the $2,650.

I feel as though I am in no manner deserving of reprehension, and that the desired relief should be granted, as the loss occurred through no fault of my own.

G. W. CANDEE,
Paymaster, United States Army.

[Third indorsement.]

PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
January, 3, 1880.

Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of War.

As to the military history of Major George W. Candee, paymaster, he was first appointed an additional paymaster February 23, 1864, and was mustered out January 15, 1866. He was afterwards appointed a paymaster in the Army, January 17, 1867, under the eighteenth section of act of 28th July, 1866, which required the vacancies to be selected from those who had served as additional paymasters. His being selected for reappointment exhibits his standing during the war; and his entire course since has been confirmatory of the high character he has always held for probity, vigilance, and intelligent discharge of his duties. Thus I doubt not the affidavits presented by himself and his clerk, Lewis Candee, his brother, deserved to be treated with entire respect. His averment as to his care, caution, and diligence on the occasion referred to should have great weight. His brother, Lewis Candee, several years clerk to him, stands very high in character.

No report of this transaction was made to this office. Major Candee, no doubt, refrained from making such report, and applied at once to his father for the money to replace the amount, under the supposition that the loss must be promptly made up in order to maintain his record.

I think that consideration is due this officer for his prompt restitution. The claim he has for legislation in this case is not absolute, but in proportion to his long and faithful service to the Government.

In private life a rich bank often makes good to a painstaking, faithful teller an amount unluckily paid or lost, when there is unmistakable evidence of high character and fidelity, though the act of the bank must be one not at all founded on legal claims, but prompted by the bounty of the corporation in the spirit of generosity and good policy toward an unfortunate employé.

BENJ. ALVORD,
Paymaster-General, United States Army.

APPENDIX.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, August 22, 1881.

I certify that during the years 1866, 1867, 1868, and a portion of 1869 I was in command of the posts of Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, and Fort Smith, Arkansas. Paymaster George W. Candee was the district paymaster, and I always considered him as being a man of great probity and exceedingly correct as a man and also as a Government disbursing officer. In 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879 I was in command of Fort Randall, Dakota. Major Candee was the district paymaster, and until ordered to Washington paid my post with great regularity. I always considered him a good man, and faithful in the performance of his official duties. His brother, Mr. Louis Candee, who has always been his clerk, is universally respected for his correct habits and great business capacity. I have always considered him as being both intelligent and reliable. Being familiar with their method of doing business, and the very great care taken by them in looking after the public funds while making payments, I am fully convinced that his loss of funds in 1860 was not due to any neglect on their part.

PINKNEY LUGENBEEL,
Colonel Fifth Regiment, United States Infantry.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1881.

MAJOR: Having been informed that you contemplate applying to the next Congress for relief on account of money stolen from your safe at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in 1869, I desire to state that I was stationed in that military department, serving upon various duties, as district commander, post commander, and as superintendent of Indian affairs during the time you were on duty there, and having excellent opportunities for observing your conduct at that time I take great pleasure in thus testifying to your high character for integrity, sobriety, and discretion, and the careful and prompt performance of every duty devolving upon you.

I sincerely hope that your application for relief may be successful, and you are at liberty to make such use of this letter as you may desire.

Very truly, yours,

W. B. HAZEN,
Brigadier and Brevet Major-General, Chief Signal-Officer, U. S. A.

Major G. W. CANDEE, Paymaster, United States Army.

---

392 FRANKLIN STREET, BUFFALO, NEW YORK.
August 13, 1881.

I have the honor to state that I have known Major G. W. Candee for a number (ten or more) of years, serving a part of the time in the same department with him. I can testify to his promptness and correctness in business affairs, and his courage and perseverance in traveling over lonely and perilous routes in the Indian country, and to his general high standing as an officer and a gentleman. I firmly believe Major Candee's loss was from causes unavoidable in a frontier country.

D. S. STANLEY,
Colonel Twenty-second Infantry, Brevet Major-General.

CAMP ON WHITE RIVER, COLORADO,
August 17, 1881.

COLONEL: It is earnestly hoped by all your friends that the bill will pass for your relief which is now before Congress. Those who have known you for so long a time in the Army can give the strongest assurance of your unimpeachable rectitude and integrity, and in your various important duties you have won their highest respect and esteem.

Very truly, yours,

ORLANDO H. MOORE,
Major Sixth Regiment Infantry, U. S. A.

Col. G. W. CANDEE, U. S. A., Washington, D. C.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTIETH INFANTRY,
Fort Brown, Texas, August 28, 1881.

I have known Major G. W. Candee, paymaster United States Army, for the past nine years. During the year 1873 he paid the troops at Fort Randall, Dakota, and while I exercised command at that post. During the years 1874 and 1875, while I held the position of inspector of the military department of Dakota, I inspected his official accounts. Since 1876 I have not met him, as our stations have been widely apart. My knowledge of Major Candee's official transactions has been quite intimate, and I believe him to be a gentleman of upright character and strict integrity. His clerk and brother, Lewis Candee, I also know well, he having been present and given assistance at the numerous inspections which I made of Major Candee's accounts. He is honest, diligent, and faithful in the extreme.

E. S. OTIS,
Colonel Twentieth Infantry, Commanding.

Mr. BRAGG. Without making any imputation upon the character or capacity of this officer, I desire to say the Committee of the Whole have just expressed their sense in the case of Major Maynadier that no action should be taken by Congress where there is a court having the jurisdiction of the case.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] took the position, which was also supported by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS,] by citing a case from the Supreme Court of the United States, that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction of all this class of claims. Now, having disposed of the claim of one paymaster in accordance with that view of the law, it seems to me that it would be highly unjust on our part to make an exception in the case of another paymaster, and take jurisdiction of his case ourselves.

I hope, therefore, this bill will not pass, and I would move to strike out the enacting clause except that I see my colleague on the committee, the chairman of the committee, [Mr. HENDERSON,] desires to be heard upon this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Having reported this bill to the House, and therefore having charge of it, I feel called upon to make some remarks in reference to the character of the bill.

It is possible that under the statute read by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] this case may once have been within the operation of that law, and Major Candee might have obtained relief from the Court of Claims. But I have an impression at the same time that Major Candee has been advised that he cannot obtain from the Court of Claims the relief that he desires.

I want to say this much further: I do not know this officer, and this committee now has in its possession all of the information which I have upon the subject. I found the papers before me, as they have been before Congress for several years. Bills of this same character have been favorably reported both by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Military Affairs of this House. Even while we are discussing this bill there is upon the Speaker's table a bill which has come to us from the Senate granting relief to this officer.

I wish to say this also—and if I had not been called out of the Hall I intended to have said the same thing in regard to the bill granting relief to Mr. Maynadier—that while the Court of Claims may have jurisdiction in this case, it does not follow that even if that court had rejected the case, as has been intimated to me, for the want of sufficient testimony, therefore the claimant might not apply to Congress for relief. Oftentimes we have cases referred to us which present very strong equitable claims, but where there are no legal grounds which the claimant could insist upon before the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. Is it not the fact that that is the reason why Major Candee comes to Congress for relief, that he has no evidence of his loss or of the circumstances under which the loss occurred, except his own declaration? Did he even go so far as to ask a board of military survey to examine the circumstances of the case?

Mr. HENDERSON. He says he did not know that he could have obtained a board of survey. The gentleman says there is no evidence in this case. There is the evidence of his clerk as well as his own evidence.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask the gentleman if that was not the reason he comes here, that he had no evidence to present to the Court of Claims?

Mr. HENDERSON. All I desire to say is that if there is any doubt about the fact of Major Candee having lost this money, if there is any reasonable doubt in the minds of any member of this committee, then let him vote against this bill.

I do not ask any man to vote for this bill if he has any doubt about the propriety of it. As I have already stated, I do not personally know this officer; I do not know anything about him. I have no information upon the subject except as I find it in the papers before the committee, and in the favorable reports which have heretofore been made by committees of the Senate and of the House in favor of this officer.

When I reported this bill to the House I believed that there could be no reasonable doubt that this officer did lose this money, and under exactly the circumstances stated in the report. That is, that the money was absolutely taken from him by the man whose hospitality he was enjoying at the time it was taken from him; and therefore he was perhaps not as diligent as he would otherwise have been, if he had not been in the presence of a brother officer whose hospitality he was enjoying. Perhaps it would have been considered rather unkind for him to have suspected his host of being a thief.

The question is whether or not he lost this money. I think he lost it; I have no doubt about it. And I have no doubt that where an officer with the character which Major Candee has, who has been constantly traveling in different portions of the country, and having in his custody large sums of money, and always acting with honesty and fidelity and accounting for every dollar of it except in this case; I have no doubt that we ought to give to an honest upright officer, a man of good character, the relief that he asks, if we believe the money was stolen from him, and under circumstances where a prudent man might not have suspected a thief to be so bold as to take his money while inviting him to share his hospitality.

Circumstances which afterward occurred show clearly that that officer was the thief, for he afterwards took other money which he finally surrendered and gave up. I believe, therefore, that he took this money.

This case comes before us having been favorably considered heretofore by committees of the House and of the Senate, and a bill has recently passed the Senate for the relief of this officer, which bill is now upon the Speaker's table. I think this officer should be relieved. That is all I wish to say upon the subject.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. This bill is similar to the one upon which this committee acted a few moments since. There is no difference in the facts reported by the committee in the two cases, or if there is any it is in favor of the bill which this committee has just rejected.

In that case the proof showed that the officer had the money in a safe upon which safe there was a double combination lock, and there was no proof as to who opened that safe or how it was opened, or that anybody was in possession of the combination. The officer missed his money, of which there is no doubt. Yet we rejected that bill and refused to grant him relief.

Now, I think we were perfectly right in rejecting that bill, for there was no proof that the officer ever was robbed or that there was any burglary committed.

What are the circumstances in this case? Precisely similar, except that this man had no double-combination lock on his safe. Where he carried the key of his safe nobody knows; there is no account given of it. There is no proof that anybody ever did steal the money from the safe, but after the lapse of some time he ascertained that this amount of money was missing, because his clerk drew his attention to the fact and asked him whether he had not better look over the packages and see what balance he had in his hands. Upon this examination, made on the advice of his clerk, he ascertained that he had lost this amount of money; when, and under what circumstances, the report does not show. Now, I say that the evidence entitling the claimant to relief is not so strong in this case as it was in the other.

But in addition to that, the provision of the Revised Statutes which was read at the instance of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] shows conclusively that in cases of this kind there is relief given by law in the Court of Claims; and there is no reason given by this claimant or by the committee why he should not resort to that court. If it was right to drive the other party out of these Halls to seek relief in the Court of Claims, it is right to deal out the same even-handed justice to this gentleman, and let him go with his private claim before the court which the Revised Statutes have opened to him—a court which can investigate the case impartially and where his loss, if there is sufficient evidence, can be established.

I think, Mr. Chairman, we have adopted a very loose rule in relieving public officers having funds of the Government in their hands. In every case read by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] this morning (and the cases were numerous) the proof showed conclusively that a theft or a burglary had been committed. In neither of these cases is there any such proof. The Court of Claims is open to this gentleman; why not let him go there in accordance with the action of the Committee of the Whole in the case which preceded this?

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I supposed that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] as having been rejected by the committee was not rejected on account of the insufficiency of the testimony. I supposed it was rejected because of the statute which gentlemen of the committee believed gave the claimant relief in the Court of Claims. If this bill is to be rejected, I much prefer its rejection should be put on that ground rather than upon the ground that there is not sufficient proof of the loss; for I think no reasonable man can examine all the facts and circumstances without coming to the conclusion that Major Candee without doubt lost this money. But whether we are to give him relief or not is another question. I want to say that I am in favor of holding officers to a high degree of diligence when they have public moneys in their custody; and I am not in favor of relieving them unless it very clearly and satisfactorily appears that they have suffered loss without fault or neglect on their part.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not know what considerations may have influenced any other member of this committee in voting upon the former bill; but I know what influenced me. I voted to reject that bill because there is provided by law a court in which the claim can be investigated, in which the claimant can manifest his right to relief if he is entitled to any. That was one reason. I voted against the bill, in the second place, because there was no proof presented here establishing the fact that a burglary or a theft had been committed; and there is none in this case—not one particle of such proof. The court is open. Let this man prove his case in the court provided by law.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the enacting clause be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

MARTHA A. LEWIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Lewis, widow of William G. Lewis, late a private in Company B, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read in each of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis, have considered the same, and report:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in House Report No. 1142, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which said report is hereto annexed and made part of this report:

"Martha A. Lewis is the widow of William G. Lewis, who was enlisted as a private in Company B, Second Regiment Vermont Infantry Volunteers, August 15, 1862; discharged said service on account of disability, February 12, 1863, and died January 21, 1871, of tubercular consumption.

"It is alleged that his death was occasioned by disease contracted during his service in the Army.

"The Adjutant-General reports 'William G. Lewis sick in hospital, Washington, District of Columbia, November and December, 1862; discharged for disability February 12, 1863.'

"The Surgeon-General reports: 'Private William G. Lewis, Company B, Second Vermont Volunteers, admitted to Epiphany Hospital, Washington, District of Columbia, November 17, 1862, with febris typhoid, and transferred January 12, 1863; was admitted to Columbian College Government Hospital, District of Columbia, January 12, 1863, with febris typhoides, and discharged the service February 11 or 12, 1863. Cause, chronic hepatitis; not incident to service.'

"Surgeon's certificate of disability for discharge states: 'William G. Lewis is incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of chronic hepatitis, having existed previous to enlistment.'

"Lewis L. Bateman, Levi L. Munson, and Joseph Mears testify that they were comrades of Lewis in the service; that they knew him before his enlistment intimately; that he was to all appearance a sound man, and they so considered him; that while in the service he was sick, sent to hospital, and discharged; that they saw him immediately after the regiment was mustered out of service; that at that time his health was totally shattered, and that he was never well again.

"The claimant files an affidavit in which she states her inability to procure the affidavit of the surgeon of said regiment because of her ignorance of his residence.

"Dr. S. H. Griswold states that he was called to treat the said Lewis in April, 1870, and found him suffering from tubercular consumption; that he continued to treat him till his death, in January, 1871.

"Dr. L. D. Ross testifies that he knew the soldier well prior to his enlistment, and that at that time he knew him to be to all appearance a sound man; that no disease had at that time developed itself, and he continues: 'Had it been otherwise, it would seem to me, from my intimate acquaintance with him, I must have known it.' Dr. Ross says that some time after the soldier's discharge he treated him professionally for a chronic cough, which the soldier claimed he contracted in the Army. At that time he was somewhat emaciated and unable to labor. Dr. Ross continues:

"'Between the 20th of March and the 20th of April, 1865, I was called to attend and treat said soldier for pneumonia, and found him with high fever, difficult breathing, great pain in left lung, distressing cough, expectorating musty-colored sputa, left lung heavily congested, from which, after fourteen or fifteen days, he began to amend, and so far recovered as to be able to do some light work. He never fully recovered from the cough, which after a few months began to grow worse, and he continued to lose flesh. This condition continued as long as I knew him until his removal to Rutland, Vermont, when I ceased to treat him. I am of opinion he never was a well man after his discharge from the Army.'

"The marriage of claimant to the soldier is fully shown by competent testimony, as is also the birth of the following children, issue of said marriage: Laura, born February 7, 1860; Nettie E., March 3, 1862; Ella L., May 15, 1864; Charles W., August 28, 1868; Frankie L., August 31, 1868."

The committee are satisfied from all the evidence that the disease of which the soldier died was attributable to his Army service, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire whether in this case the soldier himself ever applied for a pension?

Mr. JOYCE. I do not know that he did.

Mr. BLAND. I suppose there never has been any application to the Department at all in this case.

Mr. JOYCE. I cannot tell about that; I do not remember. This soldier was a member of my regiment, but whether he ever during his life applied for a pension, I certainly do not know.

Mr. BLAND. It seems to me this is a rather loose way of granting pensions. If a party thinks he is entitled to a pension, he should apply to the Department in the first place, before coming here. It does not appear whether this soldier ever applied for a pension or whether his widow has made application.

Mr. JOYCE. This report, as the gentleman will notice, is a duplicate of the report made upon the same case in the Forty-sixth Congress. So far as I have known, it has always been the practice of the Committee on Invalid Pensions not to consider a pension case unless application had been made to the Pension Bureau and refused. From the fact that this report was originally made in the last Congress, the present committee having adopted the report then made, I have no doubt the fact of a previous application to the Pension Bureau appeared. I have really no doubt that application was made to the Pension Office either by the soldier himself or by his widow. It was the unanimous report of the committee, both of this Congress and of the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Vermont, because I did not hear a word he said, whether the husband of this woman made application during his life-time for a pension?

Mr. JOYCE. That was the question asked by the gentleman from Missouri, and in reply I had stated the fact that the Committee on Pensions had always adopted the rule, so far as I know anything at all of the proceedings of that committee, not to consider any case which had not first been before the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Does the gentleman know application was made in this case?

Mr. JOYCE. I do not know it was made in this case, but I know it has been the practice of the committee not to consider cases unless application had been made in the first instance to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has Mrs. Lewis made application?

Mr. JOYCE. I have no doubt the pensioner himself, or his widow, has made application.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If he died of disease contracted in the service all she had to do was to make application. We ought to have information whether application was made or not. I do not think anybody ought to come to Congress without first making application to the Pension Office for relief.

Mr. BLAND. It is an ungrateful thing I know to object to a pension case, but there ought to be some certainty in legislation of this sort. We ought to know whether this case has been rejected by the Pension Office or not, and if it has been rejected by the Pension Office there ought to be some strong reasons advanced why Congress should pass the bill over the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions. Now here is a case where a soldier did not apply for a pension, and did not think he was entitled to one during his life. Nor has the widow, or surviving heirs who may be applying here, made application to the Pension Office; and while it is not a very agreeable thing to me to object to any pension case, yet there must be some rule, and in view of the growing list of pensioners in this country and the great complaints of fraud, and the loose manner of granting pensions, I must object until there is something more definite given to us in the way of information.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I do not wish to antagonize this claim, but I should like to know whether or not application has been made to the Pension Office. I ask by unanimous consent the bill be passed over for the present, till that fact can be ascertained.

Mr. JOYCE. I think the report shows that fact. While I have not the least doubt about it in the world that application was made to the Pension Office and refused, yet it is not distinctly in my mind. Here is a clause in the report which states that the claimant filed an affidavit, in which she stated her inability to procure the affidavit of the surgeon of such regiment because she could not learn his residence. I have no doubt that was an affidavit which was filed in the Pension Bureau, and that was the reason why she was refused a pension there. That is all I have to say about it. There is not the least doubt the application was made.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If there is no doubt about that fact, very well.

Mr. JOYCE. There is not the least doubt about it.

The bill was by unanimous consent passed over for the present.

SUSAN R. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan R. Johnson, mother by adoption of George Davis, late a private in Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson, foster-mother of George Davis, late a private in Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, respectfully report the following statement of facts and conclusions presented by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Forty-sixth Congress in this case as embodying their views:

"That Susan Johnson applied to the Commissioner of Pensions for a pensions on the 5th day of May, 1871, (claim No. 195998,) on the ground that she was the foster-mother of George Davis, a private in Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, who died of disease contracted in the service of the United States, after his discharge, and who was the only person upon whom she depended for support.

"The evidence is clear and cumulative to the following points, namely,

"That Mrs. Johnson was a widow without children of her own, and that she adopted George Davis when a baby, raised him, and treated him in all respects as if he had been her own son.

"That when George Davis became able to work he did so industriously, and gave his earnings to his foster-mother, and treated her as if she had been his own mother.

"That Mrs. Johnson's husband, John Johnson, died August 7, 1852, and left no property, so devolving on her the necessity of supporting herself, which she did until George Davis grew up so that he could earn means with which to support her.

"That George Davis died of the disease contracted in the service; that he was a good soldier, and was honorably discharged by reason of expiration of term of service, which was for three years or during the war.

"These facts are shown by the records and by the affidavits of ten persons of high character in the community in which they live.

"The Commissioner of Pensions of course rejected the claim, their being no law under which he could grant a pension."

The committee, without going further into the details of the case, recommend the passage of the bill, which is herewith returned.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNIE A. HAYS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1516) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Annie A. Hays.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to liquidate and pay to Mrs. Annie A. Hays, widow of Alexander Hays, late a brigadier-general in the United States Army, the sum of $20 per month from the 5th day of May, 1864, to the 14th day of July, 1870.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1516) granting arrears of pension to Annie A. Hays, widow of General Alexander Hays, respectfully report the following statement of facts and conclusions presented by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Forty-sixth Congress in this case, namely:

"That General Alexander Hays was born in Franklin, Venango County, Pennsylvania, on the 8th of July, 1819. He was the son of General Samuel Hays and Agnes (Broadfoot) Hays. Was graduated at Allegheny College, Meadville, in 1840, and in the same year entered the Military Academy at West Point, where he was graduated in 1844.

"His first commission was that of brevet second lieutenant in the Fourth Infantry. His regiment was among the first to advance upon the enemy's territory in the Mexican war, and in the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, Lieutenant Hays exhibited undaunted heroism, capturing, in connection with Lieutenant Woods, the first gun wrested from the enemy. In the latter engagement he received a wound in the leg.

"In recognition of his gallantry in those actions, he was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, and was transferred to the Eighth Infantry. His wound now unfitting him for arduous duty, he was sent on recruiting service and soon rejoined the Army at Vera Cruz with two hundred men.

"His list of Mexican battles numbers twenty, ending in Zacualtapan.

"In 1846 he married Annie, daughter of John B. McFadden, and resigned his commission in 1848.

"His education at West Point had made him a skillful engineer, and the country, just then waking up to the importance of railroad construction, had need of such talent. He found employment first in California, and subsequently in Western Pennsylvania, and was engaged in making the drafts for a bridge for the Allegheny Valley Railroad at the commencement of the rebellion. This he at once laid aside and enlisted in a militia company, of which he was chosen captain. Soon after he was commissioned major of the Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. After the three months' service he raised the Sixty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he was made colonel. At the second Bull Run battle he was severely wounded. For his services in this action he was appointed and confirmed brigadier-general of volunteers and lieutenant-colonel in the regular Army. At Gettysburgh his command captured twenty banners and battle-flags and three thousand stand of arms.

"He was engaged in all the battles of the Army of the Potomac up to the day of his death. He was killed in the battle of the Wilderness May 5, 1864. His sole legacy to his widow and seven orphans was an unblemished name and a brilliant record of military achievements.

"Mrs. Hays applied for and obtained a pension, No. 29353, of $30 per month, which continued until July 14, 1870, when by an act of Congress (United States Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 654) her pension was increased to $50 per month. It was believed at the time this act was passed that it would cover the period intervening between the date of the death and the time the act was approved. But it turned out that this act was exceptional in its character."

Hon. Edwin L. Stanton, on the 11th of October, 1870, inquired in behalf of Mrs. Hays regarding this, and Hon. H. VAN AERNAM, then Commissioner of Pensions, replied as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., October 11, 1870.

"DEAR SIR: The increase of pensions granted by special acts of Congress to the widows of those generals who were killed in battle in all cases (except to Major-General Hays) commence at the date of the death of the officer. No invidious distinctions should be made in her case. If the attention of Congress was called to this, the deviation from the rule would be corrected perhaps.

"Respectfully,

"H. VAN AERNAM.

"E. L. STANTON, Esq."

The circumstances of this case justify the committee in pronouncing this a most deserving application, and the committee report the bill with a recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. This proposes to go back to 1864.

Mr. MAGINNIS. This is the widow of General Alexander Hays, one of the bravest and most gallant officers of the Army.

Mr. MILLER. Why is there any necessity for this if General Hays's widow is now drawing a pension of $50 a month?

Mr. BLAND. Just one word. If I understand this case, this is the second time it has been before Congress. Congress once passed a bill giving relief to the extent of $50 a month, raising her pension $20 a month.

A MEMBER. No, $30 a month.

Mr. BLAND. Of course that would be in lieu of her back pension. That is compensation of itself for arrears of pension—$50 a month for the future. Now, having obtained that increase of $50 a month for the future, the present effort is to go back and secure arrears of pension from 1864 to 1874. Not satisfied with one pension, not satisfied with having her pension increased from $20 to $50 for the future, it is now proposed to go back and give her the same increase from 1864 to 1874. If we continue to pass such cases there will be no end to the pension list, nor will there be money enough to pay for all these increased grants.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman, it has been the practice to grant to the widows of general officers a pension at the rate of $50 a month. The gentleman from Missouri will see, if he will look at the report accompanying this case, that General Hays was killed at the battle of the Wilderness on the 5th day of May, 1864. Congress on the 14th day of July, 1870, passed an act granting his widow a pension, and it was supposed at that time that the pension would reach back to the date of the death of her husband, and this bill is for the purpose of giving that pay that it was at the time supposed she would receive under that act of July, 1870; that is, from the date of the death of her husband, May 5, 1864, down to the 14th of July, 1870, when the act was passed. It appears here from this statement of Mr. VAN AERNAM, who was then Commissioner of Pensions, that this was an exception to that law, as will appear from his letter in the following words:

The increase of pensions granted by special acts of Congress to the widows of those generals who were killed in battle in all cases (except to Major-General Hays) commence at the date of the death of the officer. No invidious distinctions should be made in her case. If the attention of Congress was called to this the deviation from the rule would be corrected perhaps.

Thus, in all these cases pensions were granted to these widows of the men to begin from the date of the death of the soldier; but, as shown by this letter, this was an exceptional case, and by some means or other, I do not know how it was, the bill was so framed that Mrs. Hays was only permitted to draw a pension from the date of the passage of the special act in her behalf.

Mr. BLAND. I think I can inform the gentleman, if he will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, how this happens, from my own knowledge of such cases before committees. In a great majority of cases of this kind, where these applications are made for back pension, an increase has been granted instead. I do not know whether in this case an application was before the House for a back pension or not, but frequently these applications are made for back pension, and instead of granting the back pension the committee in some cases have allowed an increase of pension for the future, and it is probable for that reason that this case was increased from $30 to $50 a month; the application most likely having been made originally for the back pension, but a concession or compromise was made in this form by the committee. I do not know that such was the case here, but at any rate the committee have made many such compromises, and instead of granting the application for back pension, have increased it for the future, and, as I say, that was probably done in this case.

But there has evidently been an increase, and now, after that is accomplished, after that increase has been granted, then you want to come back again and pay the whole pension, back pension and all. I say that is not right or just.

Mr. JOYCE. I think the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken. The facts in this case show directly the contrary. The facts show, as I stated before, that all these ladies, widows of soldiers, have been granted pensions to date from the death of their husbands; and from the reading of this act passed on the 14th of July, 1870, when they came to construe that law, they found that they could only pay her from the passage of the act.

Mr. BLAND. How does it happen, then, that Congress gave only $30 a month and then increased it to $50?

Mr. JOYCE. I cannot tell you how that happened.

Mr. BLAND. Did not she get the same pension that other widows get who are similarly situated?

Mr. BAYNE. All of them get the same rate of pension; but this case, as has been shown here, is an exception to the general law.

Mr. BLAND. But was not $30 a month granted under the regular law, and that has been increased to $50? Now, however, you want to go back and draw the back pension in addition to the increase. It comes back to what I have before stated, that although this increase of $20 a month has already been granted, and in view of that increase, what right is there to insist upon going back and asking arrears of pension too?

Mr. JOYCE. I do not understand it so.

Mr. BLAND. I do.

Mr. HAWK. I do not rise to antagonize this bill, but I wish to say simply that it seems to me this bill is giving arrearages; that is to say, it is in that line. Now we know that there are many meritorious cases where this Congress has refused to give arrearages of pension, and it seems to me that we should treat all of these cases alike. Either we must reject them all, or admit them all.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HAWK. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know, being a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that it is not proper that I should state what occurs there or what is now pending before that committee. But in the line of the suggestion made by the gentleman, and as fortifying his position, I will suggest that if you will search all the reports made by that committee you will not find another one in which there are arrears allowed. This is the only one.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to be informed on that point. As I have stated, I do not desire to antagonize the bill. This woman, justly and properly, I have no doubt, has received $50 a month pension. It was perhaps the intention at the time to give her this additional pension to extend back to a certain date; but the law failed to accomplish that object. Now a bill is brought in which proposes to make up all that pension that is claimed and go back allowing arrearages.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow the law to be read in this connection?

Mr. HAWK. I will be through in a moment.

There are, sir, many similar cases, I have no doubt, cases almost parallel with this, which, it seems to me, are just as worthy—possibly not widows of gallant officers, but widows of men just as earnest, just as patriotic, just as determined in the prosecution of the cause of the Union.

God knows I would be the very last man upon this floor to appear even to antagonize a measure of this kind; but it seems to me we must be consistent in these matters. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman now allow me to make a very brief statement?

Mr. HAWK. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire at the same time to reply to what was said by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. McMILLIN.] The gentleman from Tennessee says the Committee on Invalid Pensions has made no other report similar to this. The simple reason is there is no other case similar to this in the whole American Union.

This lady received by the uniform pension laws $30 per month. A special act of Congress was passed giving her $50 a month. By some neglect or oversight on the part of those who drew that bill the pension only accrued to her from the date of the passage of the act. Other pension bills were passed giving to widows similarly situated with this lady $50 per month, and every single solitary one of those bills gave the pension of $50 per month from the date of the death of the officer. This is the only exception in the whole country, and the only one which needs a remedy, and this bill provides a remedy.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to this fact: the case was reported upon by the Commissioner of Pensions at that time, Dr. VAN AERNAM, now a member of the House. He says in his letter to Mr. Stanton:

DEAR SIR: The increase of pensions granted by special acts of Congress to the widows of those generals who were killed in battle in all cases (except to Major-General Hays) commenced at the date of the death of the officer. No invidious distinction should be made in her case. If the attention of Congress was called to this the deviation from the rule would be corrected perhaps.

Mr. HAWK. I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania to explain just one thing: how is it this was not claimed before by this widow?

Mr. BAYNE. It has been claimed. The bill was reported favorably in the last Congress. The claim was presented to the Commissioner of Pensions and this was Dr. VAN AERNAM'S reply to this lady's application. And as soon as she could, and when her necessities drove her to take that step, she came to Congress and made her application for this sum, which I believe does not amount to more than six or seven hundred dollars, to put her on an equality with the widows of the other major-generals who were slain in the war.

Let me say one word further. If there be a widow in this whole Union who is entitled at this time to the consideration of the American Congress, it is the widow Aleck Hays. No man in the Mexican war rendered more distinguished service; and I can call on his old friend, General ROESCRANS, and others here who will bear cheerful testimony to that fact. And no man rendered more distinguished service in the war for the suppression of the rebellion. At the head of his division he was slain in the battle of the Wilderness, leaving his widow with six daughters and one young son without any competency or any proper provision for their support.

I hope this will not be denied to her, because if there is now living in this whole country any one entitled to such an act on the part of Congress, it is the widow of this general.

Mr. HAWK. Lest I should be misconstrued as intending to give direct opposition to this bill, I desire to add a remark or two to what I have already said. I in no sense desired to antagonize the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not understand that the gentleman did.

Mr. HAWK. My purpose in rising was that just such explanations might be made as have been made by my friend from Pennsylvania; but I deemed it to be due to other applicants for pensions that a distinct, fair, open, plain understanding of this question be had by this House before the passage of this bill. This was my only object. If it were true that this was granting arrearages of pension to this lady, then I believed there were other equally worthy cases with hers; but on this explanation, that this was the only case, as I understand it, where the law failed to go back to the death of the deceased officer, I have no more to say if that be true, and I shall vote for the bill with great pleasure.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think the amount provided by the bill is about fourteen hundred dollars. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that it was only about six hundred dollars.

Mr. BAYNE. I may have made a miscalculation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The bill provides for the payment of $20 a month for a period of a little over six years, and the amount will be about fourteen hundred and eighty dollars.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to say but a word. I believe this is the only bill so far reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions that contemplates paying arrears. And it has been so reported, simply because the committee regarded this as an exceptional case. That is, it provides for arrears of pension to this woman because she is the widow of a major-general who was killed in battle; and all others of the like class have been pensioned by special acts of Congress at a like sum commencing at the date of the husband's death. It is exceptional in this that the widow must be the widow of a major-general and a major-general killed in battle. That is the only precedent that is intended to be established.

Mr. BRAGG. I would ask the gentleman if he is not mistaken as to the rank of this officer?

Mr. BROWNE. I may be. I take that simply from what has been stated. It may be he was only a brigadier-general. I am informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] on my left that he was a major-general of volunteers. I do not know, but the precedent is simply this, so far as we are willing to establish it, that this rate of pension shall be allowed to the widow of a general officer who has been killed in battle. That is the whole of it.

Mr. MILLER. I made the inquiry, Mr. Chairman, which perhaps led in part to this discussion. I did not do so because I desired to antagonize this bill for the reason that it grants a pension of $50 per month to the widow of a gallant soldier of two wars, or because it grants her arrears of pension not covered by the original act. I have never been of those who denounced the legislation known as the pension arrears act. I believe the great error in that act is that it limits the arrears to those who filed their applications by or prior to the 1st day of July, 1880. Why should the soldier who, for any cause, has deferred filing his application until to-day be only entitled to receive a pension from the date of such application rather than from the date of his disability? I am free to say, sir, that if a bill was before this House to grant arrears of pensions to all those entitled thereto I would freely support such an act. I assert that the Government of the United States made as solemn a contract to pay pensions to all those who were wounded or disabled in the service, and to the widows and orphans of such as fell in battle, or died from disease contracted in the service, as it did to pay the soldier his wages. It was clearly a part of the original contract, and if the soldier saw fit to delay asking the Government to fulfill its part as to pension, why should it not pay the principal? The interest is not demanded. It is the duty of the Government to pay to every man who was disabled in the service and to the legal representatives of those who died from wounds or disease contracted during their service a pension not only from the date of application but from the date the disability was incurred.

But, sir, there is one feature of this bill that I do not fully indorse. The act under which this pension was originally granted by the Pension Department limited the pension to $30 per month. That is all the pensioner could receive by the general law, and more than the widow of the private soldier could obtain. I contend that all the soldiers of the country living and the widows or orphans of those dead should stand on a perfect equality. I contend that if a pension of $30 a month is enough for the widow of the soldier who sacrificed his life fighting in the ranks, it is ample for the widow of the soldier who gallantly wore on his shoulder the insignia of a colonel or general; that if $18 is sufficient for the brave fellow who lost his good right arm while gallantly carrying a musket, it is enough for the gallant colonel or general who lost his carrying a sword. Mark, sir, I do not say it is enough in either instance; for I believe that this country can never pay its wounded and maimed and disabled heroes enough for the service they rendered or the sacrifices they made. Let those who murmur and find fault with Congress for passing the pension arrears act take time some day to compute what the cost to this nation would have been if these pensioners had not responded to the call of the country in the dark days of 1861 to 1865. I contend, however, for equality. I contend against making fish of one and fowl of the other.

It is not out of place, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that we should inquire into the necessity of the passage of such bills as this when the attention of Congress is officially called thereto. I know it is urged by some that frauds are practiced under the law. There may have been fraudulent claims presented and unwittingly granted by the Department, but is that any argument against the justness of the law? There is counterfeit silver coin made and circulated; therefore shall we close our mints? There are counterfeit members of religious associations; therefore, shall we shut up our churches? By no means. If there are unjust claims let them be purged. Permit me to say, however, that my personal attention has been called to over two hundred pending claims from the district I represent, and I do not know of a single instance among them all where an attempt has been made to defraud the Government. The extravagant allegations of fraud, so easily and flippantly made, are not justified by my knowledge of a multitude of cases, and I believe that this opinion will be borne out by the experience of the members of this House.

I trust, sir, that this country shall never forget the promise embodied in the golden words of the illustrious Lincoln in his second inaugural, delivered at a time when hope and fear alternated in every patriotic breast:

With malice toward none, and charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wound, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphans, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

Now that peace and prosperity have blessed our country, let it not be said of us that, when the shadow of danger was removed and our once enemies meet us in this Hall and greet us in social gatherings, we have forgotten him who "has borne the battle, or his widow or orphan."

Mr. BLAND. I will now ask the Clerk to read the act of Congress giving the increase of pension in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to increase the pension of Mrs. Anna A. Hays, widow of Brigadier-General Alexander Hays, who was killed in the battle of the Wilderness May 5, 1864.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of Mrs. Anna A. Hays, widow of Brigadier-General Alexander Hays, who was killed in the battle of the Wilderness on the 5th day of May, 1864, at the rate of $50 per month, to commence from the passage of this act, and to continue during her widowhood, and to be in lieu of the pension heretofore granted to the said Anna A. Hays under the provisions of the general pension laws.

Mr. BLAND. This act was passed July 14, 1870, now very nearly twelve years ago. The committee will observe that it specially provides, in hæc verba, that the pension shall take effect in the future, shall not relate to the past. That shows that Congress, being at that time nearer the period of the war, having probably all the facts before it and understanding fully the case, specially inhibited any back pension, and gave this widow an increase of pension to $50 per month.

We have heard read here the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, but that is very indefinite. We are not told in that letter what amount of increase of pension has been given to other widows similarly situated, whether to $40 or $50 per month; we have no knowledge on that point. There is nothing here to show that this widow has not been treated by Congress as liberally as others.

I believe with the gentleman who preceded me that we ought to act fairly by all, and the only way to do that is by a general law. I am opposed to these special laws, to this special legislation for individual cases, when general laws can be passed that will deal out justice to all alike. It is about time that we put a stop here to this special legislation, increasing a pension one session of Congress to $50 per month, and at the next session giving back pensions in special cases and for particular individuals, when the private soldier is denied that which is his right. Let us pass general laws and let all abide by them.

It seems that this widow obtained a pension under the general law, and was not satisfied with it. She came to Congress and obtained special relief. Not satisfied with that she now comes here, almost twelve years afterward, and asks for further special relief. I say that it is unjust, that it is neither politic nor right to pass these special bills when general legislation can be devised to cover all these cases.

Mr. BAYNE. I now move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 22.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

Many MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. BLAND. Oh, yes!

Mr. BAYNE. We can have a vote on this bill in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point having been made that no quorum has voted, tellers will be ordered.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAYNE and Mr. BLAND were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 121, noes 28.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCOOK. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DUNNELL reported that the Committee of the Whole had had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House with various recommendations.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAJOR WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 670) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with a recommendation that the enacting clause be struck out, which is equivalent to a rejection of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put to the House—the question of sustaining or agreeing to the report of the committee—I would like to make a few remarks, if it would be in order.

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the opposition to this bill in Committee of the Whole was based upon two grounds: first, that the Court of Claims had jurisdiction in cases like this, and second, that there was no proof before the House that this money was stolen which the bill provided shall be restored to Major Maynadier. I should feel that I had neglected my duty did I not bring these two points again to the attention of the House.

Since this bill was considered by the Committee of the Whole I have as carefully as the limited time would allow examined the reports, and cannot find a single case like this which has been adjudicated by the Court of Claims, and I ask the gentlemen who have opposed this bill to cite me to one case where the Court of Claims has assumed jurisdiction in a case of this character. The decision cited by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was a case which I contend sustains my view. I refer to the United States vs. Clarke, 4 Otto, 73. The cause of action arose from loss of money by robbery in time of war. It occurred April 6, 1865, in Texas. This was before the surrender of General Lee's army. But even in this case the question of jurisdiction was not raised.

All other causes which now occur to me where the Court of Claims has been called upon to relieve officers from losses of money are cases where the cause of action arose during the war. The very words of the statute, "by capture or otherwise," show that it is intended to only include cases where money has been lost by capture in war or by destruction similar to capture, such as being burned or a destruction or loss some way connected with the incidents of war.

To sustain that construction of the statute, a construction with which every lawyer is familiar, I will read from an authority which I have before me:

Where general words follow an enumeration or words of a particular and specific meaning, such general words are to be held as applying only to persons or things of the same kind as those designated by the particular words.

That being the rule of construction, which no lawyer will deny, where a statute uses the language "by capture or otherwise," particularly when that statute is passed just after a war, it cannot mean losses incurred by the theft of money by a clerk in time of peace.

In support of this view I have had read at the Clerk's desk a paper showing that Congress has universally accepted this rule of construction in dealing with cases of this kind. The only question that Congress has considered in every case of this character has been, was the case a loss under such circumstances as to entitle the applicant to relief? Congress having established this rule by a long series of cases, officers have applied here for relief and have of course neglected to apply to the Court of Claims, until to-day they find themselves barred by the statute of limitations, and have no remedy in that court.

But even for the sake of argument, admitting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, it is no reason why Congress should not give relief in this case provided the evidence shows that the relief asked for is proper and just. Congress has never surrendered its jurisdiction, and its powers upon this subject are as great to-day as if the Court of Claims had never existed.

Unless gentlemen who oppose this bill can show some case in which the Court of Claims has taken jurisdiction in causes of this kind, I feel that the House in justice to this character of cases will not sustain the motion to strike out the enacting clause, but will allow this case to go back on the Calendar, to be deliberately and carefully considered hereafter.

With regard to the other ground upon which opposition to the bill was based, I will state the record does show very clearly that this money was stolen. It is shown by the evidence of two or three witnesses, and also by the admission of the man who stole it. He was arrested with a part of the money upon his person, and he applied to his relatives for means to make entire restitution. There is no question under the evidence that the money was stolen, as the report states. All I ask is that the House allow this bill to go back on the Calendar, where it may receive that judicial investigation which a bill like this merits.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to call the attention of my friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] to the fact that the statute referred to by him was not passed until after the war. It was enacted in 1866, and under it the Court of Claims unquestionably has jurisdiction of this class of cases. The very case before my friend shows that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction where a disbursing officer is robbed or loses public funds. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. That does not prevent the gentleman from Alabama moving to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar is that the enacting clause of the bill be struck out. If that be adopted it will be equivalent to the rejection of the bill; but if it is not agreed to, then the bill under the rules goes back to the Committee of the Whole House and takes its place on the Private Calendar without any further order of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Still he has the right to move to recommit now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on striking out the enacting clause.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 51.

So the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill, under the operation of the rules, goes back to the Committee of the Whole House and takes its place on the Private Calendar.

CARLILE BOYD.

The SPEAKER. The next bill from the Committee of the Whole House is the bill (H. R. No. 1400) for the relief of Carlile Boyd, which has been reported with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

V. M'NALLY.

The SPEAKER. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House is the bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize an appointment in the Army.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the title of the bill should be amended. It is a bill to authorize an appointment in the Army. The body of the bill includes the name of V. McNally as the officer to be appointed, and I now move the title of the bill be amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the appointment of V. McNally in the Army."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. GILL.

The SPEAKER. The next bill reported favorably from the committee is the bill (H. R. No. 1047) for the relief of William H. Gill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 58) for the relief of William H. Gill be taken from the Speaker's table and passed in place of the bill (H. R. No. 1047) reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with the recommendation that it do pass. Both bills are identically the same, but by taking up the Senate bill and passing it it will go at once to the President for his approval.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senate bill will be taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move that the House bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Senate bill No. 58, for the relief of William H. Gill, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAJOR G. W. CANDEE.

The SPEAKER. The next bill from the Committee of the Whole House is the bill (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill stands on precisely the same footing as the bill for the relief of Major Maynadier. The House having recommitted the latter bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, it is entirely proper this bill should go there also.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the motion to strike out the enacting clause, and if that motion is agreed to it is equivalent to the rejection of the bill, but if not agreed to the bill goes back to the Committee of the Whole House under the rules.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish simply to say to the House in this case this officer is clearly barred by the statute of limitations. I stated he had no relief in the Court of Claims, but my mind was then divided between a committee meeting up stairs and the meeting of the House here. I hope the motion to recommit the bill will be agreed to.

The House refused to strike out the enacting clause, and the bill under the rules went back to the Committee of the Whole House to take its place on the Private Calendar.

SUSAN R. JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a favorable recommendation is the bill (H. R. No. 1521) granting a pension to Susan R. Johnson.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNIE A. HAYS.

The SPEAKER. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a favorable recommendation is the bill (H. R. No. 1516) granting arrears of pension to Annie A. Hays.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 14.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

F. G. SCHWATKA, SR.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1368) for the relief of F. G. Schwatka, sr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. MILTON BEST, DECEASED.

Mr. RANNEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 918) for the relief of the estate of J. Milton Best, deceased; which on motion of Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARY S. PORTER.

Mr. RANNEY also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2948) for the relief of Mrs. Mary S. Porter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RANNEY also, from the same committee, reported back the following cases adversely; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2018) for the relief of Squire Finley;

A bill (H. R. No. 3502) for the relief of John M. Dowell and Peter F. Dowell;

The petition of John A. Leveredge; and

The petition of William F. Fraser.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PHELPS, for one week from Monday next, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. HOBLITZELL, for one day, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move the House adjourn..

Mr. MURCH. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SPARKS. We agreed to have a session to-morrow by adjourning over on Washington's birthday.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 112.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE. Pending the motion to adjourn, I hope the gentleman from Missouri will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BLAND. We will have four or five months of the session yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana desires to make a request with reference to business of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BROWNE. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ANDERSON. Let us see what the request is.

Mr. BROWNE. I am instructed to ask that next Wednesday and Thursday evenings be set apart for the consideration——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of A. B. Wallace, of Dry Lake, Wright County, Iowa, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ATKINS: Papers relating to the claim of Greenbery Adamson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BARBOUR: Papers relating to the claim of Mrs. Mary Chichester, for indemnity for losses sustained during the war of the rebellion—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. H. BURROWS: The petition of citizens of Sullivan County, Missouri, for the relief of certain assistant surgeons in the United States service during the late war—to the Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: The petition of Captain J. D. Parker and several hundred others employed in the commerce and navigation of the Ohio River, praying for the establishment of a marine hospital at Cincinnati, Ohio—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, papers relating to the claim of John A. Coan—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: The petition of John E. Kendall, for the return of $27.98 erroneously paid for private improvements assessed against part of lot 15, square 693, in the city of Washington—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Papers relating to the claim of David R. Cook—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CONVERSE: The petition of J. R. Lunn and others, citizens of Reynoldsburgh, Ohio, for legislation regulating charges for railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 25, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke; and also that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; in which bill and amendments the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time for leave to introduce the resolutions which I send to the desk, and request that the same be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

These resolutions embody the sentiments of 8,000 of the workingmen of the city of New York—men who at their country's call are always the first in the ranks of battle, and who ask that this Congress shall extend relief toward their friends confined in foreign prisons.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the resolutions will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection. The resolutions are as follows:

At a meeting of the delegates of the various divisions of the Laborers' Union Protective Society, representing 8,000 men, held at Central Hall, 229 East Forty-seventh street, on February 22, 1882, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in view of the despotic incarceration of such native or adopted citizens of the United States as are known to be or may hereafter be imprisoned by the British Government or any other despotic government, we believe the time has fully come for Congress and the Executive to demand the immediate release of Irish-American citizens now pining in British dungeons.

Resolved, That these resolutions or a copy thereof be forwarded without delay to our Representatives in Congress, to Hon. S. S. COX, Hon. ANSON G. MCCOOK, Hon. BENJAMIN WOOD, Hon. ROSWELL P. FLOWER, with request to give their earnest support to these resolutions, and that they demand of the President the enforcement of the Constitution by protecting its citizens from imprisonment by any despotic government, no matter what clime or country our citizens may come from.

Resolved, That we demand this in the name of Washington, the Father of his Country, whose birth is to-day celebrated the world over wherever an American citizen can be found; and we demand that the honor and glory of the American flag must be protected the world over wherever it floats, and its citizens protected under its folds in every clime and every country.

JAMES GOUGH,
General President.
P. T. GALLAGHER,
Recording Secretary.

LABORERS' UNION PROTECTIVE SOCIETY, FIRST DIVISION,
New York, February 22, 1882.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 59) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. McMILLIN objected.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is the privilege of gentlemen to object if they think proper.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. JACOBS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4666) relating to contested elections; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS, ETC., COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution in reference to the printing of certain papers and evidence before the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the evidence, papers, and documents before the Committee on Foreign Affairs pertaining to the Hawaiian treaty, the Interoceanic Canal, and the investigation ordered as to certain Chilian-Peruvian correspondence, &c., be printed for the use of said committee, as they shall deem the same essential, from time to time.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4667) relating to recoveries for infringements of patents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to take from the House Calendar for present consideration House bill No. 4439.

TERMS OF COURT IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is withdrawn, and the gentleman from New York moves to take from the House Calendar for present consideration a bill, the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4439) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district and circuit courts in the northern district of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be read, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. HISCOCK. The bill only provides for the holding of the terms of court in the northern district of New York.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If that is all I do not object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That that paragraph of section 572 of the Revised Statutes declaring the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York be amended so as to read as follows:

"In the northern district of New York, at Albany, on the third Tuesday in January; at Utica, on the third Tuesday in March; at Rochester, on the second Tuesday in May; at Buffalo, on the third Tuesday in September; at Auburn, on the third Tuesday in November; and, in the discretion of the judge of the court, one term annually at such time and place within the counties of Onondaga, Saint Lawrence, Clinton, Jefferson, Oswego, and Franklin as he may from time to time appoint. Such appointment, and notice thereof, shall be given in such manner as said judge shall determine."

SEC. 2. That that paragraph of section 658 of the Revised Statutes declaring the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the circuit court in the northern district of New York be amended so as to read as follows:

"In the northern district of New York, at Canandaigua, on the third Tuesday in June; at Syracuse, on the third Tuesday in November; at Albany, on the third Tuesday in January. And when the said term appointed to be held at Albany be adjourned, it shall be adjourned to meet in Utica on the third Tuesday in March; but said adjourned term shall be for the transaction of civil business only."

SEC. 3. That section 806 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 806. No jury shall be drawn for service exclusively in the circuit court for the northern district of New York at the terms thereof required by law to be held at Albany and Syracuse, or at the adjourned term thereof required by law to be held at Utica, if a jury is drawn to serve in the district court held at the same times and places with said terms and adjourned term, but it shall be used for the trial of issues of fact arising in civil and criminal causes in said circuit court; and the verdicts of said jury and all proceedings upon the trial of said issues shall be of the same effect as if the said jury had been drawn to serve in the said circuit court."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I understood the Chair to state that the call for the regular order was withdrawn. I ask the Chair who withdrew the call for the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was understood to withdraw it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I did not.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am instructed by that committee, to which was referred a resolution introduced on the 13th instant by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] to report the same back with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the House of Representatives of the present condition of the Eastern band of the Cherokee Indians residing in North Carolina, what lands they own as a band or tribe or in severalty, and what amount of money, if any, said Indians have in the Treasury of the United States, or what amount of bonds, if any, are held by the United States in trust for them.

That he inform this House fully as to what proceedings were taken in the year 1874 and since that time, either by the United States or by said band with the consent and advice of the United States, for the recovery of lands in the State of North Carolina, claimed by said Indians, or for the recovery of moneys from their late agents, or for the adjustment of their accounts with any of said agents. Also whether any awards were made in favor of said Indians by any board of arbitrators or any court in respect to said lands, moneys, or accounts, and, if so, what said award was, and specifically the action taken by his Department in respect to the same up to the present time.

That he also furnish copies of any contract or contracts made by said Indians with any attorney or attorneys relating to the prosecution of said claims for land, moneys, or the adjustment of said accounts, and what action has been taken by his Department with respect to said contracts, what payments have been made to said attorney or attorneys, if any, by reason of services performed by them under said contracts, and what, if any, is still claimed by said attorney or attorneys to be due on account of said services.

That he also inform this House what disposition has been made by his Department of the moneys belonging to said Indians referred to in an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875. That in giving the information relative to these moneys he shall state in detail each item of expenditure, the purpose for which the same was expended, and the authority of law for the payment of each item, and shall state what amount of money was placed at the disposal of his Department by said act, and how much, if any, remains unexpended. It is further requested that the honorable Secretary furnish this House with any information he may be able to give concerning the settling of whites upon the lands of the Indians, and what steps, if any, are necessary to be taken in order to protect the Indians in their rights.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. REED. I rise to make a privileged report. The Committee on Rules, to whom were referred sundry resolutions relating to the subject, have instructed me to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of nine members be appointed, to whom shall be referred all petitions, bills, and resolves asking for the extension of suffrage to women or the removal of their legal disabilities.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the latter portion of the resolution be again read. It was not heard in this part of the House.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My inquiry is whether that resolution should not go to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged report under the rules of the House from the Committee on Rules. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that it must lie over for one day.

The SPEAKER. It is the report of a committee privileged under the rules.

Mr. McMILLIN. The committee are privileged to report, but under the rules the report has to lie over a day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will oblige the Chair by directing his attention to any rule which requires such a report to lie over one day. It changes no standing rule or order of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. It does, by making a change in the number and nature of the committees. All measures of a particular class, the resolution states, must be referred to the proposed committee, whereas heretofore they have been referred to a different committee. Therefore the resolution changes the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion the resolution does not rescind or change any standing rule of the House. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this does distinctly change one of the standing rules of the House. One of the standing rules is——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has passed on that question, and no appeal has been taken from his decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to Rule X, which specifically provides for the appointment of the full number of committees this House is to have, and this is not one of these committees.

The SPEAKER. Not one of the standing committees, but a select committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. That rule provides there shall be a certain number of committees, the names of which are therein given.

Mr. REED. I sincerely hope this will not be made a matter of technical discussion or debate. It is a matter upon which members of this House must have opinions which they can express by voting, in a very short time, without taking up the attention of the House beyond what is really necessary for a bare discussion of the merits of the question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Would you not, as a parliamentarian, concede that this does change the existing rules of the House?

Mr. REED. By no manner of means, especially when the accomplished Speaker has decided the other way, and no gentleman has taken an appeal from his decision. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Then you have no opinion beyond his decision?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that this resolution does not change any of the standing committees of the House which are provided for in Rule X.

Mr. SPRINGER. It provides for a new committee.

The SPEAKER. It provides for a select committee. The subject was referred to the Committee on Rules by order of the House, and this is a report on the resolution so referred.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rule provides that no standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would decide that this does not propose any change or rescinding of any standing rule of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair hold that the making of a new rule is not a change of the existing rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not decide anything of the kind.

Mr. SPRINGER. What does the Chair decide?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not undertake to decide any such question, for it is not now presented.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this not a new rule?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not?

The SPEAKER. It is a provision for a select committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can you have a committee without a rule of the House providing for it?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ATKINS. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 84, not voting 93; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BRUMM. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only state that it has hitherto held that when a gentleman states that he was giving attention to the call of the roll, and from any cause was unable to hear his name when it was called, and therefore did not respond, the Chair would hold it to be in order to again call his name.

Mr. BRUMM. I state that I was giving attention and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again call the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The name of Mr. BRUMM was called, and he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HILL. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. That is not sufficient; the gentleman must state something more.

Mr. HILL. I was paying attention, and did not hear it called.

The SPEAKER. The name of the gentleman will be again called.

The name of Mr. HILL was called, and he voted in the affirmative.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BARR.

Mr. DARRELL with Mr. ROBERTSON.

Mr. HOBLITZELL with Mr. URNER.

Mr. ATHERTON with Mr. MOREY.

Mr. DUGRO with Mr. CHACE.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, with Mr. WEBBER.

Mr. LORD with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. GODSHALK with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. ERRETT with Mr. SCALES.

Mr. MCLANE with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. WAIT with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. DUNNELL with Mr. DIBBLE.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. FISHER.

Mr. LORD. I am announced as paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WISE.] The pair relates to political questions, and not regarding this as such I have voted.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BREAKWATER, ETC., AT WOOD'S HOLL, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit at this time several executive communications.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the acquisition of a safe harbor and depot and the construction of a breakwater and piers at Wood's Holl, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting reports from United States naval officers in the waters of Alaska, as called for by House resolution of February 1, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENTS, REMOVALS, ETC., IN POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting lists of appointments, removals, &c., under the grade of Assistant Postmaster-General of persons employed in the postal service in the city of Washington, excluding mail carriers and including inspectors, was presented on a former day and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, but was not ordered to be printed. In the opinion of the Chair the printing should be ordered, and in the absence of objection the order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent to make a report.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. STEPHENS. If the regular order is the call of committees for reports, I do not press my request.

The SPEAKER. The regular order would be the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, with the hope and expectation that we may complete the Post-Office appropriation bill to-day, if we commence at an early hour, I move to dispense with the call of committees.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment.

Mr. CASWELL. I will do so.

SILVER COINAGE UPON THE METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. STEPHENS, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures the bill (H. R. No. 114) to authorize the coinage of silver dollars and fractions thereof of full standard value upon the metric system; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] gives way to me that I may present an adverse report from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the Chair has no power to entertain requests for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the call of committees for to-day be dispensed with.

Mr. CASWELL. There are several gentlemen who desire to submit reports; and if I can yield to them for a few moments——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for on both sides.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CASWELL, that the call of committees be dispensed with, there were ayes 97.

Mr. HISCOCK, (before the negative vote had been counted.) I understand there are only two or three gentlemen who wish to submit reports. I trust that by unanimous consent they may make their reports, and that then we shall dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing; and the vote can only be waived by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAZELTON. We will not oppose the motion, if we can have unanimous consent to present our reports.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The negative vote was then taken, and the result was announced—ayes 97, noes 42.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion of Mr. CASWELL was agreed to.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield to allow the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to submit a report.

Mr. MONEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads a bill (H. R. No. 4668) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and recommitted.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.

Mr. SCRANTON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as a substitute for House bill No. 104, a bill (H. R. No. 4669) for the erection of a public building at Pensacola, Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT COURT AT WICHITA.

Mr. MANNING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 429) to provide for holding a term of the district court of the United States at Wichita, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2997) granting a right of way to the Fremont, Elkhorn Valley and Missouri River Railroad Company across the Niobrara military reservation, in the State of Nebraska, and authorizing the sale of a portion of said reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARKANSAS SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. CRAVENS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3816) to indemnify the State of Arkansas for swamp and overflowed lands within said State held by the United States since March 3, 1857, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

M. P. JONES.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1366) for the relief of M. P. Jones; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, READING.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2622, a bill (H. R. No. 4670) for the erection of a public building at Reading, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RETIREMENT OF TRADE-DOLLARS.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 96 and 1650, a bill (H. R. No. 4671) for the retirement of trade-dollars from circulation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RATING OF INVALID PENSIONERS.

Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4269) relating to the rating of certain classes of invalid pensioners; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Territories, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1884, a bill (H. R. No. 4672) establishing the Territory of North Dakota, and providing a temporary government therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NAVAL MONUMENT AT ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. DEZENDORF, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 631, a bill (H. R. No. 4673) to provide for the erection of a monument at the naval cemetery at Annapolis, Maryland, in commemoration of the officers and others who perished by the wreck of the United States steamship Huron; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4674) to regulate the commerce between the States pertaining to commercial travelers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1594) to further regulate and define the duties and compensation of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE C. ELLISON.

Mr. MASON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4675) to provide for the reimbursement of cost and expenses in certain judicial proceedings, and for the relief of George C. Ellison; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SERVICES ACTUALLY PERFORMED.

Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of certain officers of the Army for services actually performed during the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DELAWARE INDIANS.

Mr. SPAULDING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 414) for the relief of the Delaware Indians in accordance with treaty stipulations; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES C. SYKES AND JOHN CURREY.

Mr. HAZELTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2308, a bill (H. R. No. 4677) to confirm the title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona to Charles P. Sykes and John Currey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CALKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on an amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] on which points of order were reserved by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.] The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 79 by striking out the words "of official stamps," and in line 80 by striking out the words "400," and inserting at the end of line 80 the following:

"And hereafter no official stamps shall be manufactured or supplied to any of the Departments, or to any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transmitted in penalty envelopes."

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. CASWELL. I am not certain but there is wisdom in the amendment, and I will withdraw the point of order so the House may take a vote on it.

Mr. SPRINGER. This simply provides that there shall be no more printing of what is known as official postage-stamps, and that all official correspondence that is now transmitted with such stamps shall hereafter be transmitted in the penalty envelopes, which has become the policy of the Government, and it is therefore unnecessary to keep up this third plan of sending official matter under these official stamps. All of it can be transmitted in the penalty envelopes, and it saves the cost of printing the same.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, whether this matter has been considered by a committee of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer the gentleman from Georgia by saying that there is no committee before whom the specific subject of printing official stamps has been referred, so far as I am aware.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has there been any recommendation from the Department?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not examined sufficiently to answer the gentleman's question, but as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads I have been examining the postal laws and rules with regard to the transmission of official matters, and I find that there is no necessity whatever for printing these stamps. There are few of them in use, in fact simply enough to keep up the little printing bureau for the purpose of giving out some printing contracts when there is no necessity under the sun for it. The proper manner is to send all such official correspondence in the penalty envelopes, and in general there are only enough stamps printed now to keep up the contracts with these parties who have the printing of the stamps.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 9.

So, no further count being demanded, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now revert to lines 60 and 61, which were passed over by unanimous consent, and report the amendments suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON,] which the Chair understands was accepted by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 60 strike out the words "on trunk lines."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that to be the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.] The Clerk will now report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "special" insert "mail;" so that if adopted the line will read "for necessary and special mail facilities, $500,000.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the original amendment offered by myself was withdrawn, and the amendment of the gentleman from California substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order which was made upon this proposed amendment, unless some gentleman making the point of order desires to be heard, the Chair having reached a decision adverse to the point of order. If the gentleman making the point of order desires to be heard, the Chair will be glad to hear him at this time. The rule under which the committee is operating was evidently made for the purpose of preventing any legislation on appropriation bills, unless in reduction of expenditures in the manner provided by the rule, and in that view the Chair holds that it should be strictly construed. But this clause of the bill, if the point of order had been made upon it, would have had to go out unless it could have been sustained under the general law allowing the House to make appropriations generally for the Post-Office Department. The Chair merely suggests that it might have been maintained under that.

But, be that as it may, the Chair must hold that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California, as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, should be ruled to be in order, for the reason that it does not change existing law, in that it does not necessarily make new legislation or change existing law, or increase expenditures, but simply gives direction to the clause which is now contained in the bill.

The Chair holds that, while perhaps strictly under this rule there may be some doubt as to the accuracy of the ruling, it prefers to submit the question to the committee for its decision rather than to rule it out, and so overrules the point of order. The Chair understands the gentleman from California to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I withdrew the amendment offered by myself under the impression that the Chair had already decided the point of order made upon it, and I should be very glad to have a vote in the committee upon the amendment if it would be now in order to replace it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from California as having accepted the amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I did withdraw it upon the impression that the Chair had ruled against me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of the impression when it was first submitted that it was in the nature of new legislation, but upon further thought believes the amendment of the gentleman from California as modified by the gentleman from Illinois to be in order, though it might not have been in order by itself as the gentleman first proposed it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I request permission to replace the amendment in the position it occupied when I withdrew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois now to have withdrawn the first amendment. The first proposition before the committee will be the amendment of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] then the gentleman from Illinois can renew his amendment, which will preserve all his rights. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from California as modified by the gentleman from Illinois and accepted by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 60 strike out, after the word "facilities," the words "on trunk lines;" and after the word "special" insert the word "mail;" so that it will read "for necessary and special mail facilities, $500,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I am in favor of a liberal appropriation of money for all purposes of which the House and the country have notice; but I am against the appropriation of any sum of money to any Department, in the expenditure of which that Department is to exercise its discretion, there being no notice given to the House or to the country of the direction in which it will exercise that discretion. It has been the settled policy of Congress for some four or five years to appropriate a certain sum of money for special mail facilities upon the great railroad trunk lines. To illustrate: with that sum it may be provided that a special train, at an unseasonable hour, so unseasonable that it will not take passengers, may leave the city of New York for the North, for the South, for the East, and for the West to overtake trains and place on those trains later mails. Money has been appropriated for the last four or five years to enable operations of that kind on the part of the Department.

Now, without its being asked or sought for by the Department, a proposition comes in here to strike down all of the restrictions upon the expenditure of an appropriation and vest the Department with the power of expending that money upon a broader and a different or a narrower plan perhaps. I say that the amendment does not commend itself to my judgment, and I urge upon the committee that whenever we appropriate a sum of money which is to be expended in the discretion of the Department, instead of striking down barriers, we should create barriers and limitations upon that discretion.

By the adoption of this amendment we would be establishing a dangerous precedent. Perhaps there will be no abuse of this discretion by the present administration, but it is notorious that there has been maladministration in the Post-Office Department, and we may have maladministration there again; and it is with reference to the future that we should legislate. I ask the committee, therefore, to vote down this amendment and leave the clause as reported.

Mr. BLAND. I hope this amendment will be adopted or else that the whole clause will be stricken out. Perhaps the better way would be to strike it out. It seems to me that this appropriation is contended for very zealously by our New York friends, and especially by the New York press, and whether or not the object of this $500,000 is to furnish Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Boston, and all surrounding cities with New York daily papers, that seems to be the argument of the New York press in favor of this amendment. Now, sir, I think the daily morning papers of these other cities are of some importance, and probably can furnish the news to their people as well as the New York dailies. I have noticed as to this appropriation and the disposition made of it by the Department, that never has a dollar of it been expended west and southwest of the Mississippi River.

We have heard a great deal of complaint with reference to the maladministration and misappropriation and squandering of the funds voted to the star-route service. When the late Postmaster-General came into authority—I am not speaking of the present Postmaster-General, but of his immediate predecessor—it was understood he was going to make a vigorous prosecution against the star-route thieves, and a large saving of public money was going to be made under his administration. And on the other hand the star-routers charged that he was in the interest of the railroad companies, and that all the savings which he made on the star routes by abolishing services that had been maintained, and especially on steamboat routes, were squandered by him on these lines of railroad. But I have heard it suggested—I do not know whether it is true or not—that he is now the president of a bank largely owned, if not entirely controlled, by the manager of more than one-half of the trunk lines of this country.

This $500,000, in my opinion, is nothing more nor less than a corruption fund voted year by year on the part of Congress for the railroad kings to steal and thieve from the people of this country. If this can be devoted to the star-route service instead of being given to Jay Gould or Vanderbilt, let it go to the people of this country and not to the monopolists. There is no one who demands this service, so far as I know, so much as the press in the interest of these railroad monopolies, and those who, it seems to me, make it their special mission to represent them here upon this floor.

Mr. CASWELL. I am opposed to this amendment because I think it opens a wide door for abuse. It amounts almost, if the amendment should be adopted, to appropriating $500,000 to be used as a miscellaneous fund by the Postmaster-General. As the bill now stands he is limited to the use of this money upon trunk lines.

I do not understand that this service is in the interest of railroads; it is in the interest of the people. When this service is confined to the trunk lines, the whole country receives a corresponding benefit, because the mails are transported over the trunk lines for the benefit of all parts of the country. For instance, the gentleman from Missouri says no part of this money is expended west of the Mississippi River. But it is true that this service places New York twelve hours nearer that country than it would be without this fast service. There is a saving of time of twelve hours between New York and Chicago. They lay down mails at Atlanta, and consequently the whole South, twelve hours sooner than they would without this fast service. And so it is all over the country. The entire eastern mail is transported over these lines for the benefit of people in the West.

I am told that the connections are so made at Chicago by this fast service that the Pacific coast receives an advantage of twenty-four hours from this fast line. The people all over the country have New York placed within twelve to twenty-four hours nearer to their doors than it would be without this service.

But, sir, if we should adopt this amendment the Postmaster-General might distribute this fund all over the country, on the star lines as well as the railroad lines; and there would be no limit perhaps to the squandering of the money under maladministration. While I myself have the greatest confidence in the present Postmaster-General and those around him, still the time may come when this money would not be faithfully expended, and we ought not to open a door so wide.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, more money than even that in this bill can be used in this way to great advantage for the interest of the country. It is said by the Post-Office Department in their estimate that this fast service increases the revenues. We can well understand that if our letters can be transported in twenty-four hours to Chicago, we write oftener and more letters are written.

Now while we expend a half million of dollars annually in this fast railway mail service we add to the revenues and receipts of the Department a half million of dollars, perhaps a million of dollars. This expenditure is in the interest of the service. Wherever the service is rapid the revenues are increased all over the country.

Mr. SPRINGER. A few weeks ago I submitted a resolution, which was adopted by the House, directing the Postmaster-General to transmit to the House all correspondence in his Department in reference to the reweighing of mails on the trunk lines. The response from the Department transmitting that correspondence is very instructive as bearing upon the subject now before this committee, and showing in what manner the Government uses the fund provided by this appropriation for special facilities on trunk lines. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in that correspondence.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 1, 1881.

Respectfully forwarded to Hon. Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, with information that on the 15th ultimo the honorable Postmaster-General called on Vice-President Cassatt, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and requested him to run a train from Philadelphia at 4.30 a. m. to Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, which Mr. Cassatt agreed to do, and in return the honorable Postmaster-General promised to reweigh the mails next winter between New York, New York, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and readjust the compensation to date from the day the train commenced to run. I now have to inform you that the service on that train began October 31, 1881. I inclose herewith time-card of Pennsylvania Railroad. The train is designated No. 77.

W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, October 31, 1881.

DEAR SIR: On the 15th instant Postmaster-General James called on Mr. A. J. Cassatt, our first vice-president, and requested that we should run a train from Philadelphia, at 4.30 a. m., to Harrisburgh, which Mr. Cassatt agreed to do, and in return Mr. James agreed to reweigh the mail next winter between New York and Pittsburgh, and readjust the compensation to date from the day the train should commence to run.

I beg leave to inform you that we have arranged a schedule for this train, which was put in effect to-day, leaving Philadelphia at 4.30 a. m. and arriving in Harrisburgh at 7.30 a. m.

Very respectfully,

FRANK THOMSON,
General Manager.

General W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent Railway Mail Service,
Washington, D. C.

DECEMBER 12, 1881.

DEAR SIR: In connection with our conversation to-day respecting the mail service on your system of roads, I wish to say that, in my judgment, the equipment has no superior in the world. The annual compensation on your main line from New York to Chicago is now $1,116,329.11.

The arrangement which I so much desire will not require the moving of any more cars, but only the running of one car from Buffalo to Chicago on the fast train, instead of the express which follows it. This arrangement will increase your annual compensation sixty to seventy thousand dollars. Because of the superior equipment of your road, I am anxious to increase the amount of mail forwarded thereon.

One point I failed to develop to-day. On mature reflection, I think I should say that an arrangement can be made whereby the New York morning mail will be delivered in Chicago in twenty-six hours, or less; but I desire to continue the present one by your great through line, although I am urged to accept the arrangement above referred to.

Trusting you will pardon this further intrusion,

I am, very respectfully,

THOMAS L. JAMES,
Postmaster-General.

WM. H. VANDERBILT, Esq.,
President New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, &c.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are other letters which I desire to have read.

Mr. ATKINS. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] so much of my time as may be needed to complete the reading.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK CENTRAL AND HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY,
New York, December 28, 1881.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of 12th instant, to the president of this company and of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, has been referred to the first vice-president and myself, and I have to inform you that the cars will commence to run on the 8th proximo, as you requested.

Trusting you will order the weighing, and hoping that your assurances that it will inure to the benefit of the companies will be made good,

I remain, very respectfully, yours,

J. H. RUTTER,
Third Vice-President.

Hon. THOMAS L. JAMES, Postmaster-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 31, 1881.

Respectfully forwarded to Hon. Richard A. Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, District of Columbia, and attention invited to papers herewith.

On the 12th instant, the honorable Postmaster-General called on Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, president of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, and of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, and requested him (Vanderbilt) to withdraw one postal car from the 8.50 p. m. train out of New York, and one from the 10.30 a. m. train, and send them out on the train that leaves New York at 4.35 a. m., and have the two postal cars arrive at Buffalo, New York, in advance of the fast Chicago limited express that leaves New York at 8 a. m., and one of the postal cars to go through on the limited express, and arrive at Chicago 9.40 a. m. the morning after leaving New York. In consideration of this extra fast service, the honorable Postmaster-General offered to reweigh the mail during the present winter between New York, New York, and Chicago, Illinois, and readjust the compensation, to date from the date the extra service began. At that interview Mr. Vanderbilt declined to accept the offer. Later the same day the honorable Postmaster-General wrote him a letter, the original copy of which is herewith.

I also hand you herewith a letter from Mr. J. H. Rutter, third vice-president, informing the honorable Postmaster-General that the cars would commence to run, as he requested, on the 8th proximo, January 8, A. D. 1882.

On Wednesday the 28th instant, I had a conversation with the honorable Postmaster-General, after he received the letter from Mr. Rutter, and he urged that the weighing commence without delay. I would suggest, as the day to begin weighing, Wednesday the 25th of January, 1882; also that you consider the advisability of weighing at the same time the New York and Dunkirk, New York and Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh and Chicago, and Baltimore, Parkersburgh and Wheeling routes, to avoid a possibility that mail can be unduly weighed.

In this connection I desire to invite your attention to my report of October 31, 1881, under file No. 9418, respecting the New York, New York, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, route.

This extra fast service described above will be a very advantageous one to the Post-Office Department and its patrons. Mail that now leaves New York one morning and arrives at Chicago the following day at 7.40 p. m., in time to make the night connections, by this new service will leave New York one morning and arrive at Chicago the following morning in time to make the important connections, as follows, viz: Chicago and Burlington Railroad post-office, Chicago and Cedar Rapids Railroad post-office, Chicago and Iowa City Railroad post-office, and Chicago and La Crosse Railroad post-office, which are the "overland" connections, and the La Crosse line is the important one from Chicago to the Northwest. There are several other lines out of Chicago that leave a few minutes too early to get this connection. I think they will readily change their schedule so as to get the connection when this service is in good working order.

W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has expired, and the time for debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to strike out the last word. Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that it would be well for us first to clearly and fully understand the history of the origin of the legislation that has been enacted for the past five years by this House upon the subject of "necessary and special facilities on trunk lines," and to which this item of this appropriation bill proposes to give to the extent of $500,000.

I cannot understand why any gentleman upon this floor should seek to destroy or impair the efficiency of this wonderful service, more expeditious and greater in its operations than any mail service in the civilized world. If gentlemen desire a response from the American people, let their purpose prevail, and the clamor that came up from the great business centers in 1876 (when the special mail trains of the New York Central and Pennsylvania Railroads were taken off by these corporations and the mails carried on the fast lines) will be but as a murmur to the whirlwind of indignation that should justly be visited upon us. The mail service of this country and our civilization will mark no backward step. Every facility once gained will be tenaciously held to. The man who stands in the way of its usefulness and healthy growth will be set aside and condemned by educated communities.

Every mail carried by railroad service in this country upon through-mail routes goes upon the fastest train, and, if a way mail, upon such train as can best fulfill the conditions and requirements of the service.

The act of March 3, 1879, reads:

The Postmaster-General shall in all cases decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed.

Revised Statute, paragraph 4000, reads:

Every railway company carrying the mail shall carry on any trains which may run over its road, and without extra charge therefor, all mailable matter directed to be carried thereon, with the person in charge of the same.

I make the clear and unqualified declaration that every railroad in the United States receives for the carrying of the mails a compensation under the general law of March 3, 1873, as amended by the act of July 12, 1876, and again amended by the act of June 17, 1878. They are paid for the weight carried—no more, no less.

In this connection permit me to read a telegram received from the superintendent of the railway mail service in reference to inquiry made a few days since:

Railroad companies do carry mails on fastest trains when requested to do so, and they are so requested whenever the mails will be advanced thereby. All through mails are carried on the fastest passenger trains and the special mail trains on schedule arranged by the Department. There is no trouble about the mails being carried, except on limited-express trains, as I telegraphed you. They will take closed mails on those trains but not postal cars.

W. B. THOMPSON,
Gen. Supt. R. M. S.

Permit me now to briefly trace the history of the origin of the special-facility service on trunk lines. First I will read the statutes governing payment for railway mail service. Act March 3, 1873, is as follows:

The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned.

First. That the mails shall be carried with due frequency and speed, and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture in a car or apartment, properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of two hundred pounds, $50; five hundred pounds, $75; one thousand pounds, $100; one thousand five hundred pounds, $125; two thousand pounds, $150; three thousand five hundred pounds, $175; five thousand pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional two thousand pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.—Revised Statutes, section 4002.

The act of 1873 was amended by the act of July 12, 1876, as follows:

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, for transportation of mails on railroad routes by reducing the compensation for the transportation of mails 10 per cent. per annum from the rates fixed and allowed by the first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873.

This act of July 12, 1876, was amended by the act of June 17, 1878, in the following words:

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1878, for transportation of mails on railroad routes, by reducing the compensation of all railroad companies for the transportation of mails 5 per cent. per annum from the rates for the transportation of mails on the basis of the average weight fixed and allowed by the preceding section, first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1876.

These are the only statutes now upon your book under which the railroads are paid for the carrying of the mails of the United States, and every railroad is paid in accordance with these acts, except as Congress has provided by a special paragraph in each annual appropriation since March 3, 1877, for "necessary and special facilities on trunk lines," and excepting such roads as have been furnished aid by land-grant privileges, (Revised Statutes 4001;) also act of July 12, 1876. I presume the reduction of 10 per cent. per annum, as specified in the act of 1876, was in accordance with the policy of the other side of the House, that proclaimed to the country that the budgets as made up should have a reduction of expenditure in comparison with the Republican administration. The further reduction of 5 per cent. per annum in the act of 1878 was doubtless in accordance with the same policy. But the inconvenience resulting from the reductions soon found in the business communities of the country a demand for greater and better railroad mail facilities. Petition upon petition came into Congress, and upon the files of the Post-Office Department could be found the appeals and letters of thousands and tens of thousands of our leading merchants demanding some relief.

The act of July 12, 1876, went into effect immediately, and on the 22d day of the same month the great Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central discontinued their fast mail service, and the whole country immediately felt the business loss and inconvenience, and commenced petition and appeal to Congress and the Post-Office Department. These two roads at that time, under the mail compensation of the act of 1873, were running special fast mail trains; not passenger trains, as many may suppose; not express-car trains, but mail trains pure and simple, scheduled in accordance with the wishes of the Department both as as to departure and arrival and speed. Is it any wonder that complaints poured in from the Northwest and South, and a Democratic Congress could not resist the demands of the people who claimed their old mail facilities as enjoyed prior to the legislation of 1876?

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me a question just there?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman speaks of it as having been passed by a Democratic House. Was it not an estimate sent in by the Department?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am going to give full credit to the Democratic House for that.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not ask any credit.

Mr. BINGHAM. They deserve credit, and I propose to give it where it belongs.

Mr. ATKINS. All I want to know is the fact.

Mr. BINGHAM. Recognizing the demands of the people, Congress on the 3d day of March, 1877, appropriated "$150,000 to be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities on the trunk lines;" no restrictions, no limitation; wholly under his control to make the best arrangement for the service.

In 1878 the law of 1876 was again amended, reducing the compensation 5 per cent. per annum under the act of 1876, but at the same time Congress prudently and wisely retained the paragraph for special mail facilities, so that the clamor of the country might be appeased and the business of the people protected and guarded.

The fast mail service was again inaugurated, and the great trunk routes that in 1876 had withdrawn their mail trains again placed them upon their roads, scheduled and speeded in accordance with the demands of the Department. I insert for the purpose of a full understanding of this question extracts from the reports of the Postmaster-General for several years past. In his report to Congress in 1878 he used this language, after referring to the reduction directed in the act of June 19, 1878, and the dissatisfaction of the railway companies because of the reduction of the 5 per cent. per annum, (page 9 of the report,) stating that the companies had entered formal protests and that they only continued to perform the service temporarily, lest the refusal to do so might occasion serious inconvenience to the public. The Postmaster-General goes on to say, (page 32:)

Hence I have delayed making such radical changes in the service as would be required by reason of the sum appropriated to this branch of the postal service until Congress could be consulted upon the subject. Should no additional compensation be made for the service, I shall feel it my duty under the laws to so curtail the service as to fall within the appropriation, however much I might consider the public interests injured thereby. I am satisfied it would lead justly to complaints. * * * In my opinion, it would cause a shock to our postal system from which it would not soon recover.

The appropriation of $150,000 to enable the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities for the prompt transmission of the mails by railroad companies has enabled the Department to prevent injury to the service upon the most important lines by allaying the dissatisfaction of the railroad companies at the general reduction of 10 per cent. and 5 per cent. additional upon their compensation, and has in several instances enabled the Department to secure the running of special trains of great value to the business interests of the country. I would therefore recommend that this appropriation be renewed for the next fiscal year and that the amount be increased according to the estimate submitted by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Congress appropriated for the next fiscal year $350,000.

I find in the report for 1880 these words:

An appropriation is recommended for the continuance of special mail facilities on railroads, such as extra trains with mail only, and the acceleration of regular trains carrying the mails, &c., which the people have enjoyed for several years past. It would be impossible to maintain the service at its present state of efficiency without this appropriation unless the general law governing the compensation for the transportation of mails by railroad be changed so as to afford compensation for this service, and it may be added that it is the desire of the Department to extend this service to business communities where it would be needed and would be much valued.

We come now to the present fiscal year, and at the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress there was appropriated $425,000 for the special mail facilities on trunk lines. Let me examine and exhibit to you the detailed statement of this expenditure, together with the mail service that the $425,000 specially pays for, and I am sure gentlemen from all sections of the country will change their views, and that this Republican House dare not go before the people having curtailed this now absolute necessity and the most valuable and important mail convenience that during the past six years has been enacted through legislation.

Four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for the present fiscal year. What does it produce and whom does it benefit? Not the New York Central Railroad, neither the great Pennsylvania Railroad, nor the great trunk lines of the South, for without a single exception one and all of these five lines would cancel their contracts to-day. This special service does not pay them except by indirection. They multiply by rapidity of communication the business days of the year many times over.

Let me give you in detail this service.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but will he allow me to ask him a question here?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Did I hear the gentleman correctly a moment ago as stating that the whole $425,000 was expended upon five trunk lines?

Mr. BINGHAM. Upon five trunk lines, with the possible exception of a few hundred dollars. The New York and Springfield line, which is the line north, gets $17,647.06. The New York Central and its great combinations receive $84,025.80. The Pennsylvania Railroad to Chicago and to Saint Louis receives $67,792.19. The great south line receives $90,000, and the second south line from Richmond to Charlotte and from Charlotte to Atlanta receives about $101,000. There is also a special-facility train from Alexandria to Lynchburgh, which receives $19,000, as well as a special train from New York and Quantico, Virginia, which receives $41,900. More than one-half of the amount for special facilities goes for southern mail service, and the remaining $200,000 for northern, western, northwestern, and southwestern service.

Allow me to specify in detail: each train in its departure, speed, and arrival has been placed upon the several roads I shall indicate upon the specific request of the Post-Office Department and not by demands of the traveling public:

First. A train—special, no cars but mail cars, no passenger accommodations—leaves New York City at five a. m., seven days in the week, carrying a large and heavy mail, all of the New York morning daily papers, running to Springfield, Massachusetts, and reaching that point at an early hour in order that connections may be made for Boston, giving that section of the country through which the road runs large mails which have accumulated after the evening departures. This train has connections at New Haven, Connecticut, for New London, Connecticut, and Providence, Rhode Island, and at New Haven, Connecticut, with trains for Boston, via the New York and New England road, throwing into that city large mails from the several States indicated. For this special mail train the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad receives $17,647.06. Let the gentlemen from the East and the North remember this value of this service.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that on certain of these trunk lines trains are run that do not carry passengers, that carry nothing but mails?

Mr. BINGHAM. If I can be allowed further time, I will give the gentleman the details.

Mr. CANNON obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank my friend from Illinois.

I will state for the gentleman's information that my every statement as to that service is official.

Second, from New York to Chicago, by New York Central and Lake Shore and Michigan Southern. These two roads receive $84,025.80. One train leaves New York at 4.35 a. m. seven days in the week; runs special, no passengers, only the mail, from New York to Albany, 142½ miles; carries from ten to fifteen tons of mail matter and all of the New York daily papers. At Albany this train connects with the fast express, and arrives at Chicago the following morning about ten o'clock. The mail that goes on this train is more advantageous to the State of New York, through which this great trunk road runs, than any other mail, and for the great West it gains in delivery and connection from twelve to twenty-four hours over what otherwise would be the service if the mail had been dispatched from New York on the regular passenger train that leaves at 8 a. m.

Let the gentleman from New York, as well as the gentlemen from Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Dakota, remember the value of this service, the most important for their States. In addition to this morning train, the same two great trunk roads dispatch a special evening train—no passengers, no express, only mails—leaving New York between eight and nine o'clock, seven times a week, running to Cleveland, Ohio, six hundred and twenty three miles; remember, a special mail train. At Cleveland, Ohio, this train connects for Columbus, Cincinnati, and Saint Louis. At Cleveland it merges into the regular fast train for Chicago, reaching that city the next morning at six o'clock. This train carries, handles, and distributes from ten to fifteen tons of mail matter daily. They run postal cars only. All the trains out of Chicago are enabled to receive their mails for the great States of Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Dakota, and points intermediate to the Pacific coast are supplied. From twelve to twenty-four hours are saved by this expedition. These two roads would not make this contract again for the same compensation.

Third. The Pennsylvania Railroad runs a daily train. For expedition and special service the company receives $67,772.09. This company dispatch their trains at hours almost identical with the New York Central. When the New York and New England trains reach New York City behind schedule time, the Pennsylvania company places immediately a special mail train and runs it over to Philadelphia, making connection with the train going south. From Philadelphia and to the West special fast time is made, reaching Chicago the next morning about ten o'clock, making connection with the trains for the Pacific coast and intermediate States and Territories, supplying the larger portion of Ohio, Indiana, parts of Illinois, all of Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Texas, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Kentucky, Middle and West Tennessee, and Mississippi.

The mail upon these trains is literally immense. It gains in time for the great States from fifteen to twenty-four hours. If dispatched in the passenger train which leaves New York but three hours later, it could not reach any of the States indicated by any schedule earlier than fifteen hours after the special mail. Again, a mail leaves New York City at 8 p. m., running special; no passengers, no express to Pittsburgh and Columbus, about six hundred and thirty-three miles, seven times a week, carrying tons upon tons of matter, making connection with all the lateral roads, and delivering to a vast scope of territory, connecting at Columbus with the fast trains, and reaching Saint Louis on the second morning at eight o'clock. This train handles mails for the same territory specified in my preceding paragraph, and gains for the delivery from fifteen to twenty-four hours.

Without the allowance for special facilities these trunk lines would immediately take off the mail trains, because the trains consist only of mail cars.

Mr. FLOWER obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BINGHAM.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do.

Mr. FLOWER. I renew it, and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the gentleman.

Let the gentlemen representing the States of the Northwest, Southwest, and Pacific coast remember the value of this service to the great industries and enterprises of their growing and mighty communities and States. Can you, representing your people, deprive them of this important service?

Fourth. Let us see how the South is benefited by these facilities. A special mail train is run from New York to Quantico, Virginia, seven times a week, for which service $41,900 per annum is paid. At Quantico the train connects with a special mail train for Richmond—passengers are carried on this train, as they are on all the trains in this special service in the South—but this train has been placed especially on the road by the management and can only be maintained by the special allowance for its fast service, reaching Richmond at 3 p. m., in time for a day delivery. For the section of country through which this service runs a large mail is carried. Connecting at Richmond fast trains and special service extend to Savannah, Georgia, reaching that point the next day at 10.45 a. m., and saving by the expedition an entire business day, for by any other train the mail could not reach Savannah until 10 p. m. Between Quantico, Virginia, and Savannah, Georgia, there are seven railroads, receiving an allowance of the appropriation, in all $97,000. At Savannah, Georgia, the fast train connects with the regular express for Jacksonville, Florida, arriving at that point at 5.30 p. m. same day and in time for the delivery of all the mails, which in effect is best stated by submitting that a mail train leaves New York at 4.25 a. m. and arrives at Jacksonville, Florida, at 5.30 p. m. next day. It is the great mail for that belt of country.

Fifth. From Washington to Atlanta, Georgia, there is a fast mail that departs immediately upon the arrival of the mail from the North, and arrives at Atlanta, Georgia, the next day at eleven o'clock a. m. The railroads over which this mail is carried do not desire to perform this service. It was an additional train placed upon the road at the request of the Department. The two roads from Richmond to Charlotte and from Charlotte to Savannah receive for their service $101,949.87.

Sixth. Again, a special night train is run from Washington to Alexandria, Virginia, and Lynchburgh, Virginia. The management of the road placed this train on at the request of the Department. It receives $19,067 for the service. The passenger business of the road did not justify this train. It makes the Washington connection with the train that leaves New York at 3.40 p. m., Philadelphia 6 p. m., and Baltimore 9 p. m.—a valuable and important line of connections for the State of Virginia.

Every train that is run by the several roads I have specified, doing the most rapid mail work for all sections of the country, saving in every forty-eight hours of service a business day, scheduled as to arrival and departure and speed by the Post-Office Department, is not a service contemplated by the general law of 1873, but wholly and entirely the creation of the special appropriation for mail facilities, and to my mind the most brilliant and splendid achievement in the postal service that marks the six years of Democratic administration in this House. It will not become the Republican party, the special champion of education and enterprise, to abridge, curtail, or in any manner render less efficient this service. Certainly the gentlemen representing the great central communities would be faithless to their trust if they did not in every way possible protect this one of the grandest achievements of our postal service.

I desire to give the House the further information that within a few weeks the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has asked to be allowed to take off its special mail facilities for the Post-Office Department, although it has received for this service upward of $80,000.

Mr. ROBESON. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to know whether that action of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has not been taken since this question was agitated on this bill, and whether the gentleman does not know it to be a threat to this House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I know it is not, Mr. Chairman, and I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that if he will examine the correspondence of the Post-Office Department he will find that before this bill ever came up for consideration Mr. Frank Thompson asked to be relieved of the special mail facilities.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. What amount of this fund is expended for fast mails from New York to Washington and from Washington south?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will tell the gentleman: $41,000 of this service is expended from New York to Quantico, a point below Washington about forty miles; and from that point of Quantico to Richmond, from Richmond to Petersburgh, from Petersburgh to Weldon, from Weldon to Wilmington, from Wilmington to Florence, from Florence to Ashley River junction, and from Ashley River junction to Savannah, a little over $90,000. Again, from Florence to Columbia, $300; from Richmond to Charlotte, $52,000; from Charlotte to Atlanta, $49,000, and from Alexandria to Lynchburgh, $19,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like the gentleman to answer whether——

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me finish the sentence. Of the $425,000 in the appropriation for the current year about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars goes to the southern railroads.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like the gentleman to answer whether the line to Atlanta has not been withdrawn.

Mr. BINGHAM. I stated a moment ago that that line had been withdrawn within a few days by the management of the road, and that the Post-Office Department was at this time endeavoring to have it again placed upon the road.

Four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars will be expended during the current year, as I have indicated. The Department, through your Committee on Appropriations, asks for $500,000 for the next fiscal year. Let me quote in full the report of the Postmaster-General and the superintendent of the railway service upon the proposed disposition of this money, and I think no Representative will vote against the measure. Page 33, Report Postmaster-General, 1881:

The enormous growth of railroads in 1880 and 1881, and their anticipated increase of mileage in the near future, will account for a great proportion of the augmented cost of the service. But there are other causes which must also be taken into consideration. The increase in the weight of the mail transported by the trunk lines has been unparalleled and the maximum does not appear to have been reached. The legitimate function of the postal service is undoubtedly to transmit intelligence and diffuse knowledge. If this were the sole requirement of the service now, the present cost of the railway mail service could not be justified. But it is not; Congress saw fit a few years since to make

THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT A COMMON CARRIER OF MERCHANDISE.

And, moreover, it fixed the rates of transportation so low that the mere cost of handling this class of mail matter, to say nothing of its transportation, is unremunerative. The compensation the Government receives for the reception, transportation, and delivery of second, third, and fourth class matter is far below the cost. The revenue derived from letter postage and other sources is more than consumed by the losses sustained on second, third, and fourth class matter. The transportation on trunk lines of the mail thus increased in bulk and weight is not the only problem the Department has to solve. The reception and preparation for dispatching these classes of mail matter, their transportation to the railroad depots, the loading into postal cars, and their distribution in the cars, all seriously interfere with the dispatch, distribution, and delivery of the letter mail en route. The transportation of second-class matter, which is composed of newspapers and periodicals, is, of course, legitimate postal business. They disseminate intelligence among the people, and Congress has accordingly provided by law for their distribution by mail at a low rate, without regard to the cost of transportation. Third and fourth class matter, being transient printed matter and merchandise, come under a different category. If it were probable that in the course of time their transportation would become remunerative, or at least self-sustaining, then it might perhaps be well to nurture it, but this is not possible. The more this matter grows in bulk, the greater will be the loss to the Government. The rates for third and fourth class matter are not only unremunerative but the wisdom of requiring the Government to become a carrier of merchandise is very questionable.

Pages 37 and 38, Report (1881) Postmaster-General:

SPECIAL FACILITIES.

Appropriations have been made each year since 1878 to enable the Department to secure from railroad companies facilities for the transportation of mails for which compensation could not be made under the general law. The advantages secured to the public by this expenditure are very great, and are specially valuable to the chief centers of population. The appropriation for this object for the current year is $425,000, and I recommend that $500,000 be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

ADDITIONAL POSTAL FACILITIES BETWEEN THE EAST AND WEST.

I desire to call attention to the fact that numerous petitions have been received from the Pacific coast, from the city of New York, and from the Eastern States, asking for more speedy and frequent service between the two sections. In my opinion, the service should be extended so as to accord better with the volume of business transacted. The time between New York and San Francisco has recently been reduced twenty-four hours by the action of the Pennsylvania Railway Company in establishing the Chicago Limited Express, which leaves New York at 8 a. m., and arrives at Chicago the following day at 10 a. m., in time to make the overland connection. An effort will be made to have the mail arrive in San Francisco at 6 a. m. instead of at 1.30 p. m., as at present, and to depart at 6 p. m. instead of 4 p. m. Additional facilities will also be asked from Mr. Vanderbilt, president of the northern line to Chicago, so as to give the same facilities to the Eastern States in general as are now possessed by the city of New York and the State of Pennsylvania for communication with Chicago and points west. The promptness always shown by Mr. Vanderbilt in meeting the wishes of the Department induces the belief that these negotiations will be successful, especially as it is not his habit to permit the country supplied by his lines to possess mail facilities inferior to those enjoyed by other sections.

Pages 320, 321, and 322, report of 1881 of the superintendent of the railway mail service:

FAST MAILS AND SPECIAL FACILITIES.

The appropriation for special facilities for fast mails for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1881, was $350,000. The wisdom of Congress in making this appropriation has been fully vindicated by the results of its judicious disbursement by the Postmaster-General. During the past fiscal year the fast mail service has been extended from West Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to Washington, District of Columbia; Richmond, Virginia; Atlanta, Georgia; New Orleans, Louisiana, and Charleston, South Carolina, with connections to Savannah, Georgia, and Jacksonville, Florida. In former years the service between the States northward and Florida has been slow, tedious, and very unsatisfactory, but with the improvements already made and those contemplated I am confident there can be no cause for complaint in the future.

The time has been materially shortened from New York, New York, to Atlanta, Georgia, and New Orleans, Louisiana, and the southern fast mail has, upon the whole, proved a success. Yet the immense traffic on the railroads, due to the "business boom," has required so many trains to be placed on the roads that the fast mail has frequently been delayed. I do not wish to be understood as intimating that the time of the fast mail is too short. On the contrary, I believe the speed can and will be increased with safety as the roads are improved and the employés become accustomed to fast schedules; for I hold that with a good track, motive power, and rolling-stock there is no more danger at forty miles an hour than at twenty. In fact, more accidents are reported to accommodation trains than to fast mail and express trains.

On the first day of the last fiscal year there was a fast mail established on the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York, New York, and Columbus, Ohio, leaving New York at 8.30 p. m., after the close of business, receiving all the important business mail of the day, and by fast running overtaking at Columbus, Ohio, the regular fast express that left New York two hours and a half earlier. At Columbus the postal cars attached to this train are separated, one going to Cincinnati, Ohio, on the regular fast express, and the other two going to Saint Louis, Missouri, via Indianapolis, Indiana, on the regular express and passenger train, arriving at Saint Louis in time to make connections with all morning outward trains.

There is a similar train on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad and Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway. This train leaves New York at 8.50 p. m., receives at Albany the eastern mail that left Boston at 6 p. m., and overtakes at Cleveland, Ohio, the fast passenger train that left New York at 6 p. m. At Cleveland this train makes connections for the Southwest, and at Toledo, Ohio, both northwestern and southwestern connections are made. The postal cars are transferred at Cleveland to the regular train for Chicago, where they arrive at 6 a. m. in time for early city delivery, and connect with all outward trains. This service has been very satisfactory and beneficial to business men and other patrons of the postal service.

There has also been established a fast-mail service on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, leaving the grand central depot, New York, at 4.35 a. m., making very fast time to Poughkeepsie, arriving at Albany at 9 a. m. At Albany the postal car is transferred to the regular express for Rochester. This gives an early service that was much desired and accomplished all that was expected of it.

The 5 a. m. fast-mail service from New York to Springfield, Massachusetts, has been continued.

Without the appropriation for special facilities it would have been impossible for the Postmaster-General to have established and maintained this service, or any part of it.

ESTIMATES FOR SPECIAL FACILITIES FOR 1883.

The estimate for special facilities for 1883 is $500,000, being $75,000 more than for 1882. In my opinion, certainly during five months of the year the fast-mail service should be extended to Jacksonville, Florida, and during the whole of the year to New Orleans, Louisiana. There is also need of a fast-mail service between New York, New York, and Boston, Massachusetts, leaving each city late at night, after the close of business, and arriving at the other city early in the morning, in time to have the city mail delivered by the first carriers. There should also be a later departure than 6 p. m. from Boston to connect at Albany, New York, with the fast mail. This (6 p. m.) is the latest departure that it has hitherto been possible to secure. If a train could leave at 7 p. m. a large amount of important mail could be forwarded several hours earlier.

If the postal car which leaves the Grand Central depot, New York, at 4.35 a. m., and runs to Rochester, could be run through to Chicago, arriving there the following day about 10 a. m., in time to make connections with all outward-bound railway post-office and route-agent lines, it would advance all mail for offices west of Chicago from twelve to twenty-four hours.

There are other places that are desirous of fast-mail service, and it should be provided as soon as possible. It can be demonstrated from the annual reports of the Postmaster-General, for the past twenty years, that fast mails and frequent service on railroads between important cities and through populous sections of country are a source of revenue far greater than the outlay for such service. The estimate for special facilities is below rather than above the amount actually required, and I therefore earnestly request that the full amount be appropriated.

This illustrates what your service now is and what the Department, with the generous aid of Congress, will make it. And right at this point let me inform the committee that the best answer that can be made to gentlemen who upon this floor clamor against the great railroad corporations in their rates or compensation for mail service rendered, taking the weight of mails carried out of New York City as a basis of calculation—and the figures for New York City are in proportion to the weight for the whole country—that, while the weight of mail carried out of New York has increased from ten to eighty-five tons, or more than eightfold, the average cost per mile of service is actually one cent and a third less in 1881 than it was in 1867, and only forty-eight one-hundredths of a cent more than in 1854. I will insert in my remarks that portion of the report of the superintendent of the railway mail service that gives in detail the figures covering that statement:

COST OF RAILROAD SERVICE.

The cost per mile of railroad service, including postal cars and fast mails, has not increased with the weight of mails, as will be seen by the following statement. In 1854 there were 14,440 miles of railroad routes, and 15,433,389 miles of annual service, at an average cost per mile of annual service of 9.6 cents. The weight of the mails at that time was unknown, and the rate of payment was fixed by the Postmaster-General, under the acts of 1839 and 1845. In 1867 there were 34,015 miles of railroad routes, and 32,437,900 miles of annual service, at an average cost per mile of 11.75 cents. In that year the mails were weighed for the first time, and the average daily weight of mail sent from New York City by rail was 20,031 pounds, or 10 tons. In 1873 there were 63,457 miles of railroad routes, and 50,340,420 miles of annual service, at an average cost per mile of 11.05 cents. In that year the average daily mail from New York City by rail was 109,311 pounds, or 54 tons. In 1877 there were 74,546 miles of railroad routes, and 85,358,710 miles of annual service, at an average cost of 10.5 cents per mile. In that year the average daily weight of mail from New York City by rail was 123,107 pounds, or 61 tons. In 1881 there were 91,569 miles of railroad routes and 103,521,229 miles of annual service, at an average cost of 10.44 cents per mile. In this year the daily weight of mail sent from New York City by rail was 170,356 pounds, or 85 tons. It will thus be seen that while the weight of mail carried out of New York has increased from 10 to 85 tons, or more than eightfold, the average cost per mile of service is actually one cent and a third less in 1881 than it was in 1867, and only forty-eight one-hundredths of a cent more than in 1854. The increase in the weight of mail all over the country has been in proportion to that sent from New York, and these figures have been taken only because they were more readily accessible.

I thank the gentlemen for the courtesy in yielding to me so much of their time.

Mr. ROBESON. With the permission of the gentleman, I will send a copy of a telegram to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. HATCH. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. The proposition pending before the committee, Mr. Chairman, is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON,] to add to line 60 the words "including the Mississippi River," and the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from California, to strike out the words "on trunk lines."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will allow the Chair to correct him. The pending amendment is to strike out the words "on trunk lines" and insert the word "mail" after the word "special."

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, or the substitute offered by the gentleman from California, and opposed to the appropriation of $500,000, if it is to be confined exclusively to half a dozen railroad companies in the United States, to be selected at the pleasure and discretion of the Postmaster-General. I assert here to-day that not one single trunk line west of the Mississippi River has ever received the benefit of one single cent of this appropriation since it was first put upon the Post-Office appropriation bills.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that one of the railroad combinations starting out from New York runs a special and exclusive mail train to Cleveland. That may be true; but where has a dollar been expended to send mails from Chicago or Saint Louis west or southwest from those emporiums of the western country? Gentlemen from the East forget the fact that it matters but little to about one-half of the people of the United States whether they get the New York or eastern mails within eight or ten hours of schedule time or not; but it does matter very much to more than one-half of the people of the United States inhabiting the great Mississippi Valley and the States and Territories west whether they get their Chicago and Saint Louis mails within a reasonable time.

And yet the Postmaster-General, in the distribution of this large sum of money, appropriated by the Government of the United States for the benefit of the whole people, has utterly and shamefully ignored the whole country west of the Mississippi River; not a dollar expended by him for special mail facilities on the great trunk lines starting west and southwest from Saint Louis, Hannibal, Keokuk, or the other great railroad centers between the latter-named city and Saint Paul.

I state to-day that never in the history of the Government has a similar amount of money ever been expended where so much sectional favoritism has been exhibited as has been shown by the Postmaster-General in distributing this $500,000 to a half dozen pet railroads of his east of the Alleghany Mountains.

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will excuse me, I have only five minutes under the rule.

Gentlemen upon the other side of the House admit there has been maladministration and corrupt practices in this Department of the Government in the past. Frequent allusions to this unsavory record of Republican officials have been made during this discussion. Like Banquo's ghost this specter is often visible and "will not down at their bidding." It rises before them to-day and seems to haunt them with the fear that such practices may again put in an appearance under some future administration of this Department under Republican control.

I would exorcise this ghost as far as possible by removing the temptation to such unwarranted favoritism by striking from the appropriation bill this entire sum of $500,000.

I never did believe it was right, and when the proper time comes, if the pending amendments be voted down, I now give notice I will move to strike out lines 60 and 61, so as to take from the Postmaster-General all authority to take this $500,000 and deal it out to such favorites as he may please, as it has been done in the past, without regard to the spirit of the law or a just or equitable distribution of the amount in the interest of the mail service of the whole country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if you will turn to section 4002 of the Revised Statutes you will notice the law provides for the compensation of railroads to carry the mails; that it shall be so much a mile per annum, according to weight. Now there is no distinction between fast trains and slow trains; the roads running the slow trains get as much as those running fast trains. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has well said, when the pay of those railroads was decreased 15 per cent. throughout the United States in 1876–'78, amounting every year to $1,600,000, the Postmaster-General found difficulty in getting trains run sufficiently fast to carry the mails. Chicago complained, Saint Louis complained, the West complained, the South complained, and then it was our Democratic friends, as they had made a saving of $1,600,000 per annum, said: "We will give the Postmaster-General $150,000 a year to expend for expedition of the service," which item has grown from year to year to $500,000 for fast mail trains upon the trunk lines between the great trade centers.

Now that is the history of this appropriation. The West, the East, and the South demanded faster mail trains, which they did not get because you had decreased the pay of all the railroads at the rate of $1,600,000 per annum, and that decrease still continues.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the committee that if you strike this item out of the appropriation bill, without any other amendment of the law, you practically, in my opinion, strike the fast-mail service out of existence. It is true they will carry the mail, but they will not carry it over the trunk lines on fast trains running on schedule time satisfactory to the Department. They will carry it on such trains as are most convenient to them, and my friend from Missouri, who claims that the fast-mail service does not reach Saint Louis, will find, if he examines, that there is a fast train from New York to Chicago, and from New York to Terre Haute and Saint Louis by the Pennsylvania route, by which the mails can be delivered.

Mr. HATCH. I said that there was not a dollar expended west of the Mississippi River.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAMP took the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. CANNON.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. CANNON. I have not time to yield. I have but a moment.

Mr. BLAND. I simply want to ask the gentleman whether he calls it a fast line to Saint Louis, to run from New York by way of Chicago?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly, you can get fast mail that way; and there is another fast mail train by way of the Pennsylvania system to Saint Louis.

Mr. BLAND. Again, let me ask the gentleman if he considers that a fast line from New York to Saint Louis? You might as well go round by way of the moon, and call that a fast line. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, the gentleman from Missouri has stated that there is not a dollar spent west of the Mississippi River for this service; but the gentleman does not take into consideration the fact that the great trunk lines carry the mail from the East to the West, and it is distributed west of the Mississippi by the smaller roads radiating in all directions.

This is not, Mr. Chairman, a question concerning the welfare of the New York Central, or the Pennsylvania Central, or any other railroad. It is a question of the accommodation and good service for fifty millions of people, scattered throughout the length and breadth of the country; and my constituents and those of other gentlemen will not be satisfied if for the want of this sum of money for special facilities for twelve months to come, during the next fiscal year, their mails are delayed north, south, east, or west from twelve to twenty-four hours. They want the service, they recognize its importance and convenience, and are willing to pay for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does not my colleague know that there is a fast mail passenger train running from New York, which reaches Chicago in twenty-six hours? And I wish to ask the gentleman if that is not sufficiently fast for special mail facilities? Now we have passed an amendment to this bill, requiring the mails to be carried on the fastest trains, or they are liable to a reduction of 50 per cent. on their pay——

Mr. CANNON. I hope this interruption will not be taken out of my time. The gentleman says that there is a fast passenger train running from New York which reaches Chicago in twenty-six hours. Why, does not the gentleman know that on these great trunk lines there are special fast trains made up entirely of postal cars? And you cannot take those great trains of postal cars that make up a train of themselves and hitch them on to a fast passenger train and make that distance in twenty-six hours.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him which is the faster, the mail or the passenger train?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I have explained that already; but I will try to drive it through the head of the gentleman if I can.

Mr. HORR. You cannot do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I have answered the question of the gentleman and will answer it again. The truth is, that special trains, on the schedule of the Post-Office Department, with postal cars, without express and without passengers, do run over these lines daily seven days in the week. And, in reply to the gentleman, I say, if you put all those postal cars on this fast limited express passenger train it would be more than they could haul. In other words, until further amendment of the law, if we get this fast-mail service upon trains under control of the Department we must appropriate for the payment in this way.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the service contemplated by this clause is a valuable one. I am not ready to-day to move to strike it down; not because I think it would be absolutely necessary, provided our laws were properly shaped to control and direct, as we have a right to do, the carrying of the mails of the country, but because I fear if we should strike it down to-day the great masters of this country would follow the example of those who control the lines from Richmond to Atlanta and stop the service of the people; and thus putting on the pressure would "crack the whip" over their representatives here. The remedy at our command is not to strike indiscriminately at an appropriation like this in an appropriation bill reported to fulfill the requirements of existing law, but to pass well-considered laws which shall assert the rights of this great people and declare the duties of those to whom they intrust a part of their great sovereign prerogatives.

But the case here is not exactly thus. The real point shown by the letters to which the gentleman from Illinois called attention was not this. Those letters when read will reveal just this fact, that in October and December last the then Postmaster-General made an agreement with certain great railroad companies, by which agreement he bought certain special facilities, not with the appropriation made by the appropriation bill of last year for special facilities, but with the other and different appropriation given for the ordinary carrying of the mails, and gave them increased compensation out of this last appropriation for the purpose of buying therefor certain special facilities.

We have two appropriations in this bill. The one is to be found on page 3. It is a large appropriation of $10,655,000 for the transportation of the mails on railway routes. The payment for that transportation is made by weight, and the law requires—and I hold it in my hand here—that though those mails shall be weighed as often as the Postmaster-General directs, yet that they need not be weighed oftener than once every four years. Now it is obvious to every man that with an increasing service it is to the advantage of the Government that the mails should not be weighed oftener than required by law, namely, every four years, or certainly not oftener than every two years, in order to get a just ascertainment of the average weight and to hold fast by the officers of the Government to the rights and advantages which are guaranteed to the Government by its laws.

Mr. HISCOCK obtained the floor and yielded his five minutes to Mr. ROBESON.

Mr. ROBESON. And the contracting railroads, when they make their contracts to carry the mails, do it with the knowledge and, of course, under the understanding that the Postmaster-General will not weigh oftener than once in two years at least. Three years, I believe, is the ordinary time for weighing.

Now these mails were weighed last March, less than a year ago. Eight months afterward, in October, for the purpose of obtaining certain special facilities, the Postmaster-General agreed to weigh them again; not agreeing to pay for these special facilities out of the appropriation applicable to it, for that was exhausted, but to pay for them out of the great fund for carrying the mails, which was appropriated for another purpose; and by these means, because he did not have money enough in the special facilities fund, he reweighed the mails on the great trunk lines of this country, thus creating a new contract with the companies and a new charge on the Treasury; and I am within the limit when I say that that order cost this country more than $200,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. Annually?

Mr. ROBESON. That reweighing in eight months instead of at the end of three years cost this country more than $200,000 annually exclusive of the $30,000 that it takes to weigh the mails. Now that is the position of this question. I would not, I say again, strike down these special facilities. I would not lay the weight of my finger on any interest that is fostered by them. I would not interfere with the transmission of intelligence by that means throughout the country. I would not interfere with those railroads which have not received any benefit from this weak—for it was only weak, not criminal—action of the Department. And no one can hold these great railroads responsible for accepting the benefit of it. But I propose as a remedy an amendment to this clause, while voting for the $500,000 for these special facilities, to put such a proviso in it that the Government will get back the extra money which these railroads get for this wrong and extraordinary reweighing of the mails under the other appropriation. Nobody will be really injured. The special mail facilities will go on. The whole appropriation will be given. The railroad companies cannot complain, for they will receive on the whole exactly what they would have received if they had stood by their understanding under the old ascertainment of weight of last March, instead of having it reweighed at the end of eight months. Therefore I propose as an amendment to the clause what I now send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question.

Mr. ROBESON. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. VALENTINE. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be understood as saying he will vote as an appropriation for the five lines mentioned a sum of $250,000, while he now offers an amendment which will prevent the Post-Office Department from allowing any railroad to ask a reweighing less frequently than every three years?

Mr. ROBESON. I have not offered any such amendment, as the gentleman will see if he will listen to the reading of it. I ask the Clerk to read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall deduct from the pay accruing to any railroad company under this appropriation the amount of increased pay accruing to such company from the appropriation "for transportation on railroad routes" by reason of the reweighing of the mails agreed upon in October and December last, between the then Postmaster-General and the officers of such railroad company.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that amendment now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is, by way of proviso to the clause. The vote will first be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not understand that debate is exhausted, or that any debate has been had on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.]

The CHAIRMAN. No debate has been had on that amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not understand that amendment to be offered now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey propose his amendment for action now?

Mr. ROBESON. I propose it now, but not for debate. I send it up as a notice that I will offer it at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment is not now before the committee, but will be regarded as having been read for information.

Mr. BREWER. I desire to take the floor and yield my time to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the pro forma amendment withdrawn?

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw it.

Mr. BREWER. I renew it, and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. ROBESON. My amendment provides that every railroad coming in under this special-facility clause shall be paid just what the Post-Office Department thinks it right to pay them and will agree to pay them. But it also provides that those particular roads that obtained special and particular money out of the general appropriation fund, by reason of the extraordinary reweighing last fall, shall have deducted from their compensation under this clause exactly the amount which they were paid out of that appropriation in consequence of the extraordinary reweighing. That is all.

It is only putting these railroads back where they were last October, and where they would be to-day if the then Postmaster-General had adhered to the custom of his Department and given to the country the benefit for three years of the great increase of the service instead of cutting off that benefit at the end of eight months.

I desire to say further that I do not wish to be understood as saying that there was anything intentionally wrong about this; I do not wish to say that the great railroad managers should have done anything else. If I had been at the head of one of those great corporations perhaps I would have accepted it at once.

But I think the Postmaster-General himself got into the difficulty without knowing the effect of it; that he agreed for a special purpose to reweigh the mails on one line, and, that having been done, he was obliged, in the execution of his duty and for the purpose of a due ascertainment of the amount of mail on all the lines, to reweigh them all. But I say, further, that that mistake of his cost this Government not less than $230,000 or $240,000 a year, and that now is the time to remedy it, and put these roads back where they were last October, and to do so in a manner which nobody can complain of, and which will not interfere with the facilities at all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that the Postmaster-General desired to get certain mail facilities of these companies to which he was not entitled without extra compensation. Am I not right about that?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was the claim.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And instead of paying so much extra money for the service he agreed that the mails should be reweighed, and in that way they could get the extra compensation?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now is it apparent that the extra compensation which they received in this way is more than commensurate with the increased mail facilities secured?

Mr. ROBESON. I will answer the gentleman in one word.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Answer my question categorically.

Mr. ROBESON. It is just this: desiring to have one of the special facilities for which we are now asked to appropriate $500,000 under the special-facility clause, the Postmaster-General, not then having the money to pay for it, agreed to reweigh the mails, and in consequence of that reweighing the railroads became entitled to receive additional compensation from the other appropriation, thereby not taking it out of the special appropriation fund but out of the general appropriation fund.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That does not answer my question.

Mr. ROBESON. I will say this: if you will read carefully these letters from the Department you will see that Mr. James wrote Mr. Vanderbilt that the reweighing of the mails would increase the compensation he received, which was then over $1,100,000, to the amount of $60,000 or $70,000 more. The other facility was simply a train from Philadelphia to Harrisburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is not correct.

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, from Philadelphia to Harrisburgh.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBESON. The letter shows it to be so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire——

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] allow me to answer the question which he put to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON?]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It can be answered in two words. With a view to satisfy the House and the country of all the facts of the case, I desire to say that I understand that the Post-Office Department demanded certain mail facilities which they were not authorized to demand as a matter of right under the law. The Department came to an arrangement and understanding with the railroads, and adopted this means to provide for increased facilities. Now what I desire to know of the gentleman from New Jersey—and I have not had an answer yet—was the pay more than adequate——

Mr. ROBESON. I will say to you——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One moment.

Mr. ROBESON. You want an answer.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. When I get through my question. Was the pay more than adequate, and, if the compensation was more than commensurate with the service, what provision does the gentleman now make for adjusting that matter? Or does he simply take the sum of $200,000 arbitrarily from these railroads, whether it was in excess or not? The House ought to know that in order that we may vote intelligently.

Mr. ROBESON. My answer to the gentleman is this: the reweighing was not a matter of right to be demanded by the contractors, but it was a matter of option given to the Postmaster-General for the good of the country, which he used to its cost.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well; that is the first answer. The second answer is, that I say that cost will be at least $230,000. And the extra facilities obtained, according to the statement of the Postmaster-General, could be given for less than one-third that sum.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH Then what provision have you made?

Mr. ROBESON. I have provided just this: that payment for special facilities shall be made to all railroads which had nothing to do with this reweighing, and that when you come to pay the railroads where the mails were reweighed, which received this extra money, you shall take out of their compensation that so received; that is all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand the gentleman from Ohio will yield me the remainder of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute left.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all I desire. In order to give an answer to his question as to whether we have value received for this increased compensation, I call attention to this paragraph in the letter of Postmaster-General James to Mr. Vanderbilt:

> The arrangement which I so much desire will not require the moving of any more cars, but only the running of one car from Buffalo to Chicago on the fast train, instead of the express which follows it. This arrangement will increase your annual compensation from sixty to seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. ATKINS. A mere transfer of cars.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, a mere transfer of cars from one train to another has cost the Government $70,000 a year—not out of this appropriation, but, as the gentleman from New Jersey has said, out of the general appropriation for transporting the mails.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BREWER] withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. BREWER. I do.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the committee now rise, my object being to ask the House to limit debate.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 79, noes 11.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to make it thirty minutes. Many gentlemen may want to ask me questions; and I am ready to answer them all.

Mr. CASWELL. I think that twenty minutes would be sufficient; but I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and modify my motion by striking out "twenty" and inserting "thirty."

The motion of Mr. CASWELL as modified was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. CASWELL that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Post-Office appropriation bill, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole (Mr. CALKINS in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate on the pending clause and amendments thereto is limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have only a word to say in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey, and in opposition to that amendment. It will be conceded that discretionary power is vested in the Postmaster-General to authorize the weighing which is complained of; and I suppose it can hardly be argued that he has done a wrong until it is established that these railroad companies under the order for reweighing will receive more compensation than they are entitled to. I understand how difficult it is here or elsewhere to stand up against the eloquence of gentlemen directed to exciting prejudice against railroad companies; but I beg this Committee of the Whole to scrutinize carefully the amendment which has been offered, and say whether if adopted its effect will not be to take away just so much money from the appropriation for special mail facilities as will be deducted from the sum which is to be paid to the railroad companies under the reweighing.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fact of which we are all advised that the Postmaster-General reduced the cost of the service for carrying the mails $1,691,264; that he increased the service upon certain routes to the amount of $543,507, leaving a balance of reduction of $1,147,757, and it has seemed to me in the progress of this debate as if some gentlemen on this floor were seeking if possible to find some ground of complaint against the Postmaster-General. He has been criticised because he abandoned the steamboat routes; and, last of all, he is arraigned here because he has been guilty, as is said, of favoritism toward railroad companies. I shall not attempt to enter into any discussion of the question whether this order for reweighing was right or wrong; but I desire to call the attention of the committee to the one fact, that whenever he sought to make a contract with a railroad company for special facilities the amount of compensation which that company was to receive under the statute was to be taken into consideration in determining the gross sum which was to be paid to the company in addition for special service. Take as an illustration one of the trains which leaves the city of New York carrying no passengers whatever. It depends for compensation entirely upon the sum of money which it is to receive for special facilities, and the sum which it is to receive under the statute for space and for weight.

Mr. ROBESON obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. HISCOCK. As all the mail matter, or substantially all, (as I am informed by the superintendent of the railway mail service,) is taken from the other trains of the New York Central Railroad and deposited for transportation on this special train, I ask how the Postmaster-General could determine the amount he should pay to that company for special facilities until he and the company knew the amount which it was to receive under the statute. Reweighing was an absolute necessity.

It has been complained here that the Postmaster-General proffered this reweighing to the railroad companies. The railroad companies did not seek to put these fast trains on. The Postmaster-General was directed substantially by the terms of the appropriation to do all in his power to facilitate the carrying of the mails. He was compelled to make his bargain with the companies; and at the outset they had a right to say "the volume of mail will be increased; and we must know how much we are to be paid for this train before we can determine whether it will be put on or not." What was true with reference to the New York Central Railroad Company was true with reference to all of them. In order to determine the sum to be paid to them under the clause appropriating for special facilities, it was necessary they should know the amount they were to receive as a statutory compensation.

I say this much, Mr. Chairman, in defense of the Postmaster-General, if he needs any defense. I say it as bearing on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey; that the moment he deducts from the sum which is to be paid to the railroad companies the amount they are to receive under this new weighing, he is taking from them part of the compensation which they are to be paid for special facilities; and, if it is true they are not receiving enough to make it remunerative, these trains will be taken off the roads and we will be deprived of this service.

Mr. ROBESON. You can go to other railroads.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from New Jersey says we can go to other railroads for service. There are no other trunk lines to go to; and I say to the committee, if you adopt that amendment you may as well strike out the clause entirely, as is proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH.] Or at least reduce the amount from $500,000 to $300,000, for the amendment the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] offers is practically a proposition to reduce the fund to be devoted to this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is exhausted.

Mr. ROBESON. I withdraw it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I renew it. Now, Mr. Chairman, the $500,000 proposed to be appropriated in this bill for special mail facilities, as I understand it, simply provides for the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Boston——

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; for those three cities, and not for the West at all. A train leaves New York at four o'clock a. m. and runs to Albany; but that does not help the Chicago mail.

Mr. HISCOCK. It gives you a mail twelve hours earlier.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not. The mail running from New York to Springfield, Massachusetts, does not affect the western mail. The early mail from Philadelphia that runs to Harrisburgh does not assist the West. This $500,000 is appropriated singly and solely for those three great cities and to send forward to the West the mails from those cities, but the service is not extended through to Chicago. The question I raise here is this: why has not the Postmaster-General, why has not the Appropriation Committee thought of some other center in this country?

The city of Chicago is the second postal station in this country. Second only to New York in revenue, in profits, and in the weight of its mails. Second only to New York in net revenue, amounting to $932,259 in Chicago as against $800,000 in Boston, and less in Philadelphia. Second only to New York in its money-order business, the value of orders issued in Chicago exceeding those of Philadelphia or Boston by upwards of $700,000, and value of orders paid in excess of either city by upwards of $4,500,000. Second only to New York in weight of second-class matter and postage collected thereon; New York collecting 27 per cent., Chicago 10 per cent., and Philadelphia and Boston 5 per cent. each of all mail of this class. Second only to New York in registered letters and parcels upon which fees are collected, and yet there has never been a dollar expended for special mail facilities from that city. The earliest mail train leaving Chicago is at seven o'clock in the morning, and that goes east, while the business interests of the city lie to the north and west more than to the east. The earliest train going west leaves at eight or nine o'clock in the morning. The Chicago mail reaches Burlington, just across the State, at about six o'clock p. m.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does the gentleman from Illinois deny that the train leaving at four o'clock in the morning from the city of New York does not assist Chicago in taking the mail to that city twelve hours earlier?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The train leaving at four o'clock in the morning from the city of New York is for the purpose of distributing the New York papers.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does not the limited express which leaves Albany take up the mail brought from New York by the four o'clock train in the morning and take it to Chicago, so as to get it there some twelve to twenty-four hours earlier than it otherwise would be received?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The early trains from New York and Philadelphia are for the purpose of distributing the New York and Philadelphia papers to the country immediately around, and to deliver such mail as has accumulated in the office after night trains have been dispatched to lines connecting west, and to that extent we are benefited.

This appropriation, so far as it extends to send a fast mail across the continent, is all right. I am in favor of special mail facilities, but I wish these same facilities to be applied to the city of Chicago, and not to be confined to Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. I will offer an amendment that $100,000 of this sum shall be used in affording special mail facilities on trains leaving Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is intended with this sum of money to extend the operation of the scheme as fast as possible.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I called upon the Postmaster-General and the superintendent of railway mail service, and they said this money was to be confined to the East and the short lines south, and that not one dollar was to be appropriated for special mail facilities for Chicago, Saint Louis, or Cincinnati. I submit that the money received at these three great offices, which are not only self-sustaining but contribute a large revenue to the Post-Office Department beside, ought to have some of the money appropriated for special mail facilities expended in forwarding an early mail from those points.

I have a list showing the increase of business in the sale of stamps ("the profits department") in the eleven largest post-offices in the United States, which I request may be printed with my remarks.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1882.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request of this date, I have the honor to submit the following statement of stamp sales for the fourth quarter, 1880; first quarter, 1881; second quarter, 1881; third quarter, 1881; and fourth quarter, 1881, at the eleven largest post-offices in the United States.

Respectfully,

J. H. ELA, Auditor,

Hon. GEORGE R. DAVIS, House of Representatives.

*Per cent. increase of fourth quarter, 1881, over fourth quarter, 1880.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say a word or two. I am not opposed to the fast mail. I have heretofore sustained an appropriation for special mail facilities, and I did so because I believed it was in the interest of the people they should get their mails twelve or twenty-four hours earlier than they were formerly in the habit of doing, by reason of these special mail facilities. But, sir, since the announcement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] to-day, since the developments which have been made in regard to this matter, I shall from this time forward, until there is reform, until there are works mete for repentance, vote against any further special mail facilities.

Now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] has stated some facts to-day which have not been denied. First, that the late Postmaster-General, instigated by what he supposed was a laudable object—the object, however, he did not mention—gave certain special mail facilities by reason of reweighing, extraordinary reweighing, between New York and Harrisburgh, and there being parallel lines it was necessary for him to reweigh on all lines, and hence he fell into this trap of reweighing.

Now, I want to ask if any gentleman can tell what was that laudable object? What would have been the laudable object for Postmaster-General James to select one particular road, and give it special facilities? What could have been his motive? Does any gentleman know?

Now, it seems that the Postmaster-General has done this too: that instead of giving to the country and to the Government the benefit of his large experience as Postmaster-General he gave it to the railroad company. It has been alleged that he enabled the company to realize an extra profit from this source of $70,000. And, Mr. Chairman, a singular fact comes to light in this connection, which has been hinted upon this floor, that the man who owned this railroad company, or a majority of its stock, that that same individual has started a large national bank; and it is also stated that ex-Postmaster-General James is to-day the president of that bank with a large salary.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ATKINS. No, sir; not now. I cannot yield in the short time allowed me. I want to ask, Mr. Chairman, if there is any connection between these facts? It is a singular circumstance indeed that the Postmaster-General should himself have suggested to this company that by the transfer of one car from one train to another, that it would increase their profit $70,000. Soon, sir, he resigns his office and is appointed president of the bank of which this man is the largest owner.

Now, these are very singular, very remarkable circumstances. A great reformer this gentleman seems to have been. He reformed the postal service throughout the country. He cut down the service largely, the star service, extending from village to village and hamlet to hamlet throughout the country. He cut that service down on a claim of economy, and yet he puts a suggestion into such shape that a railroad company is enabled to avail itself of it to increase their earnings $70,000. He makes the suggestion himself and they operate under that suggestion, simply transferring one car from one train to another to accomplish that result.

Sir, I only rose for the purpose of emphasizing the conclusions and deductions which logically flow from the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey.

And now a word in regard to the complaints of the gentleman who last addressed the House. He has complained of the Committee on Appropriations. Allow me to say to him that that committee has nothing whatever to do with the administration of this fund. It is the Post-Office Department of which you should complain, and not the Committee on Appropriations. That committee does not say what road shall have the money or what road shall not have it. The Department has it to say, and that Department alone controls the disposition of the money.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Department ought not to have the control of it; it should be with Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in my mind in reference to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey lies here: the Postmaster-General may direct the reweighing of the mails on any line whenever in his discretion he shall determine that it is a proper thing to be done. The Postmaster-General, in the exercise of that discretion, and in reference to the road which we are now discussing, did direct the reweighing of the mail, and having authority under the law to make this contract with this company, I doubt whether or not it is competent for this House by this amendment to undertake to say that this solemn engagement, entered into under the sanction of the law, with the railroad company by the Postmaster-General, can be set aside by a single amendment like this.

I am further troubled, Mr. Chairman, because I am not so sure that the gentleman is correct in his arraignment of the former Postmaster-General. I am as loyal to my party, I trust, as any gentleman is; but I hope I am still more loyal in the matter of attempting to do justice to all men at all times.

It is alleged that the Postmaster-General said to this railroad company, "if you will put on an extra train I will agree to reweigh these mails." Now, it may be, sir, and it is a matter worthy of consideration, that the very fact of an extra train having been put upon that line may have drawn to it, as a more expeditious mode for their transmission, large numbers of newspapers and mail-matter of various sorts from other lines of road. And the railroad company may have stated to the Department: we are willing to put on that extra train and do all that we can for the public service; but the difficulty lies here, that if we do put on this fast mail of necessity you will double the amount of mail matter we are required to transport. It may also have been that the Postmaster-General, exercising the discretion which the law gives him, responded—and I have no doubt that it will be shown that this increased mail was carried over the road: you are paid by weight, and I am willing to reweigh the mail in order to establish the fact of the increase of service you do for the Government and give you the full benefit of it.

I simply make these suggestions. I do not intend to say that these are the facts; but I am not willing, in hot haste, to allege that there has been a corrupt transaction here, or any thing unusual so far as the weighing of the mail is concerned. Why, on all these trunk lines it is a constant habit to weigh along in February of each year. There is no obligation on the part of the Department, under the law, to reweigh the mail more than once in four years, but it is a discretion which we have given the Department.

I think, sir, if what gentlemen seem to believe about this matter be true, we ought to investigate it. There ought to be a resolution of investigation. But, Mr. Chairman, if I had my own way, if I could have my own will, I would strike down the appropriation for special facilities, not only on trunk lines but in every direction, for the reason that it gives to the Post-Office Department absolute control of a vast sum of money. Now on a few lines half a million is necessary. Gentlemen propose to strike that out and give it to other lines. And it will be but a few years before the great bulk of the money paid to railroads for carrying your mails, instead of being regulated by law, will be absolutely at the disposal of the Postmaster-General. And if, Mr. Chairman, what is alleged on this floor be true, as I believe, that there was a fraudulent use of the fund for the star-route service, who shall undertake to say that the same thing shall not occur with reference to this, and that this sum and every other sum used by that Department should not be as much regulated by law as possible.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD. I desire to see the mail facilities of this country increased in every particular. The people desire wise arrangements and honest and prudent management, and with these essentials they are ready to make liberal appropriations. The fast railway mails, the steamboat routes, the star routes, and the free delivery are interwoven, and one part of the system cannot be stricken down without serious detriment to the other.

I am in favor of increasing the compensation of the letter-carriers as a measure of justice and also of wise economy. When a former post-office appropriation was before the House I took occasion to say in the debate thereon what I shall now read:

I believe as a class the letter-carriers are not paid an amount equivalent to the character of the men employed, the qualifications they require, and the services they perform. I believe there is no class of men as intelligent, as well disciplined, as courteous, who are required to perform such responsible duties, and suffer the exposure in all weathers during the long hours, providing at their own expense a prescribed uniform, that are paid any thing like the low wages they receive. Fair wages to the men who do the work is both simple justice and wise legislation.

I desire also upon this point to repeat those expressions and to say that I believe the policy therein indicated would be sanctioned by the voice of the people at large in this country.

I should desire also, Mr. Chairman, to offer an amendment to the clause of this bill which relates to free delivery, so as to effect a modification of the rule by which free delivery is now established.

As I understand it, the system as extended to cities is based upon and regulated solely by the arbitrary rule of population, without regard to any other incident or surrounding of the locality. I take issue with that system. I say that there are other elements that should enter into the question of the extension of the free-delivery system besides the item of population alone. I take the ground that it ought to be regulated by the geographical and topographical conditions of the country, by the proximity of the people to the post-office, and the convenience of access. I say, also, that it ought to be regulated to some extent by the profits to the postal revenues of the country of the particular post-office.

To illustrate what I mean I will allude to the city of Chester, which I have the honor to represent and in which I reside. The city of Chester produces a net profit to the postal revenues of this country of $5,241.15. That city has no free-delivery system now, and under existing laws cannot get it. In looking over the list I find that there are six other places which contribute less to the postal revenues of the country and which yet enjoy these accommodations. Now, I say that system is inequitable and unjust. If the city of Chester would be accommodated, as she would be, and if her people would be greatly convenienced by the extension of this system to them, she ought to have it.

The city of Oswego, in New York State, has a free delivery and pays $5,134.23 of net revenue; the city of Elizabeth, in New Jersey, pays $4,809.49; the city of Hoboken pays $3,319.60; the city of Easton, $2,275.26; the city of Lafayette, $4,589.32.

Now, to bring about what I think a very equitable system, I design to propose an amendment which will give the Postmaster-General power to extend this system to cities where he believes the public accommodation would be increased thereby, and where a small proportion, let it be one-third or one-fourth, if you please, of the net revenue, of the net profits of the particular post-office to the postal revenues shall be devoted to that purpose. I think a regulation of that kind, based upon the fact of whether the post-office is a paying one or not, would be one of the best ways of regulating this free-delivery system.

Mr. CANNON. Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, a debate is founded on a mistake of fact; sometimes it is founded on a mistake of law. Very largely, I undertake to say, this debate is so founded. Section 4002 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned:

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed, and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely, on routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of two hundred pounds, $50; five hundred pounds, $75; one thousand pounds, $100; one thousand five hundred pounds, $125; two thousand pounds, $150; three thousand five hundred pounds, $175; five thousand pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional two thousand pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working-days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

The statute thus provides that the railroads shall be paid by weight and according to the exact amount of weight they carry of mails. Now, sir, if we could get every day the amount carried, then we would get the exact amount they are entitled to under the law; but the law says, as that cannot be done, the weighing shall be as often as once in four years for thirty days. It may be oftener; practically it is more frequently made. In some parts of the country it is once in two years, and sometimes more frequently. They weigh for thirty days, and say that for the year, or for the time to come until you weigh again, we can settle upon the basis of that weight.

This discretion was given to the Postmaster-General so that in the event there was a great increase in the mails he could weigh oftener than once in four years. It was also given him that if in his opinion there was a decrease in the mails he could weigh oftener than once in four years and decrease the pay. Now, what is the fact? Over a year ago the Postmaster-General did weigh on those roads in the northeastern section of the country. What is the further fact? That in about a year he concluded to weigh again on four trunk lines leading from New York west and leading from Boston west. What is the further fact?

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CANNON. In my five minutes I cannot yield. If the committee will extend my time I will yield in a minute after I have completed this point.

What is the further fact? That in the weighing from New York to New Haven this year, within a year from the time the mail was weighed, the pay is decreased in round numbers, say, $20,000 to $25,000. What is the further fact? This weighing talked about on these four roads will not be completed for thirty or forty days yet to come. It is presumed it will increase the pay, and I suspect it will. I am frank to say that, from the lights I have now, if I had been Postmaster-General I am inclined to believe I would not have reweighed; but after the weighing is done I ask gentlemen will those roads be paid for carrying one pound of mail that they do not carry? The answer is no; not a pound. But the point made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] is that if the Postmaster-General had waited four years he would have got service from these railroad companies at the rate, as they fix it, of $240,000 for nothing. Now, I am not defending or accusing anybody, but I want to say to the committee before you strike down this clause of the appropriation for "special facilities," because, as you say, the discretion has been misused in weighing, investigate and censure, if censure is deserved, but do not deprive the whole people of the fast-mail service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman from Illinois promised to yield to me one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired, and the time for debate by order of the House is also exhausted.

Mr. PAGE. I would like unanimous consent to speak a minute or two. I desire to be heard for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot ask that unanimous consent, debate being closed under the order of the House.

Mr. PAGE. I was unfortunately absent during the debate, and being the introducer of the amendment I hope I may be allowed a moment.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope that privilege may be granted to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot ask unanimous consent for that purpose, because it would extend debate beyond the order of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. When the committee rose for the purpose of obtaining an order of the House limiting debate, there was pending but one amendment, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Substantially but one amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That offered by the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. As modified by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. As modified by myself. Now I do not understand that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] had at the time offered his proviso. It certainly was not offered as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from California or my own.

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair understands.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It was not pending then, and it is not pending now.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And the debate which has been had under the order of the House has not been upon the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The order of the House was that there should be debate for a certain time, not upon the pending amendment, but upon the pending clause and all amendments thereto.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And it has been confined to the proviso which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] gave notice he would propose. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] has not been heard at all upon his amendment, nor have I been permitted to say a word upon the amendment which I offered to the pending clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not responsible for that.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I hope unanimous consent will be given the gentleman from California to be heard.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the Committee of the Whole cannot give unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Where the House has made an order limiting debate, the Committee of the Whole cannot extend the time by unanimous consent; otherwise it might nullify the order entirely.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to move that the committee now rise for the purpose of extending the time for debate five or ten minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. It is always in order for the committee to rise.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the time for debate upon the pending clause of the bill and all amendments thereto has been exhausted. The question is first upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] as modified at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON.] The Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "special" insert the word "mail," and strike out the words "on trunk lines;" so that the clause will read "for necessary and special mail facilities, $500,000."

Mr. ROBESON. I now offer my amendment, and ask that it be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the pending paragraph the following:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall deduct from the pay accruing to any railroad company under this appropriation the amount of increased pay accruing to such company from the appropriation for transportation on railroad routes by reason of the reweighing of the mails agreed upon in October and December last between the then Postmaster-General and the officers of such railroad company."

Mr. ROBESON. I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is then upon the amendment of the gentleman from California as modified.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask for a division of that amendment. One part is to insert the word "mail" and the other part is to strike out certain words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the question is divisible. The question will first be taken upon that branch of the amendment proposing to strike out certain words.

Mr. PAGE. My motion was to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair would hold that the amendment is not divisible.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think that was not the motion.

Mr. PAGE. Allow me to explain. My motion first was to strike out certain words. Then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] asked me to modify my motion by including in it the inserting of the word "mail" after the word "special," which I agreed to do. My motion, therefore, is to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the motion is clearly divisible, because it is not a simple motion to strike out and insert; it is a motion to strike out of one part of the clause certain words and to insert a word in another portion of the clause. Therefore it is clearly divisible. If it was a motion to strike out certain words and to insert certain other words in lieu of those stricken out, then it would not be divisible. The first question is upon striking out the words "on trunk lines."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. How will it read if the amendment is adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities, $500,000.

The question was taken upon the motion to strike out the words "on trunk lines," and it was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 56, noes 88.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is upon the portion of the amendment proposing to insert the word "mail" after the word "special," so that the clause will read "for necessary and special mail facilities on trunk lines, $500,000."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBESON. I now move my amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order at this time to move to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order but cannot be voted upon until all amendments proposed to the paragraph have been disposed of. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall deduct from the pay accruing to any railroad company under this appropriation the amount of increased pay accruing to such company from the appropriation "for transportation on railroad routes," by reason of the reweighing of the mails agreed upon in October and December last, between the then Postmaster-General and the officers of such railroad company."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to amend that amendment by adding a clause which was originally a part of the amendment. The desire is to do full justice, I suppose.

The amendment of Mr. BUTTERWORTH was read, as follows:

Add to the proposed amendment the following:

"Less the true amount to which such company is justly entitled at the average rate of pay then existing for the increased facilities actually afforded by them in consideration of such reweighing."

Mr. ROBESON. I accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then is upon the amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 75, noes 92.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SPRINGER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, there being thirty in the affirmative, (one-fifth of a quorum;) and Mr. CASWELL and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 60, noes 90.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 69, noes 91.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. CASWELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 57, noes 87.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

The tellers resumed the count, and reported—ayes 59, noes 90.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out lines 60 and 61 and inserting the following:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $500,000, $100,000 of which shall be expended for special facilities on trunk lines leading from Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati.

Mr. CASWELL. I make the point of order that this amendment changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is clearly obnoxious to the prohibition of the rule. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Is there any rule that prevents Congress from directing where the money which it appropriates shall be expended?

The CHAIRMAN. On a measure of legislation coming from the appropriate committee such a provision would be in order, but on appropriation bills legislation of this kind is obnoxious to the inhibition of the rule.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then I change the amendment so as to say "$499,000, $99,000 of which shall be expended," &c.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not avoid the point of order.

Mr. CASWELL. I make the point of order on the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word on the point of order. As I understand, the amendment of my colleague [Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois] provides simply that a portion of this fund shall be devoted to special mail facilities on lines leading from Chicago.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now the point of order is made that the amendment changes existing law. But, as I understand, this branch of the service is maintained entirely under the provisions of appropriation bills; is not provided for by any general statute; is kept in existence only by whatever appropriations may be made from year to year for this service. Under this view of the law, which I understand to be correct, it is competent for each Congress to determine what shall be done with the money appropriated for special mail facilities, without coming within the prohibition of the rule in regard to new legislation on appropriation bills. We have no general law providing that a certain amount shall be appropriated annually for special mail facilities on railroads; this service is kept in existence entirely by annual appropriations; it has no place in the general statutes of the United States. Therefore, I submit that the amendment of my colleague is entirely in order. It is competent for this House to determine whether it will authorize special mail facilities and where those special facilities shall be placed. Not only is the amendment perfectly germane and in order but (if I may go beyond the merits of the point of order) it is just to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. With the last statement of the gentleman the Chair entirely agrees; but he thinks the point of order well taken. The Chair feels bound to adhere very strictly to the terms of the rule, to exclude which excludes upon an appropriation bill anything in the nature of new legislation that does not retrench expenditures. With great deference to the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend this clause by striking out $500,000 and inserting $425,000, the amount we appropriated last year. We began with an appropriation of $150,000, which has now run up to $500,000. I think it is time to stop.

The amendment of Mr. BLAND was not agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

Mr. ATKINS. Before the gentleman makes that motion, I wish to ask him whether he will not allow a yea-and-nay vote on this last clause.

Mr. CASWELL. We do not want any yea-and-nay vote.

The motion of Mr. CASWELL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments.

Mr. CASWELL. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 33 and 34 strike out "$2,900,000" and insert "$3,000,000," and strike out "50" and insert "100;" so that the clause will read:

"For payment to letter-carriers and the incidental expenses of the free-delivery system $3,000,000; $100,000 of which may be used, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the establishment of the free-delivery system in cities where it is not now established."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 45 to 53, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For inland mail transportation, namely, for transportation on railroad routes, $10,655,000. And hereafter when any railroad company fails or refuses to transport the mails when required by the Post-Office Department upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of the amount now provided by law. And the Postmaster-General is authorized to pay out of the appropriation for transportation on railroad routes for special railroad service between the union depot in East Saint Louis, Illinois, and the union depot in Saint Louis, Missouri, a sum not exceeding the lowest rate which private individuals, express companies, or others may pay for transportation between said points, but not to exceed for the fiscal year $25,000, including allowance for depot room and transfer service at each terminal. And the act passed June 9, 1880, entitled 'An act providing for the transportation of the mails between East Saint Louis, in the State of Illinois, and Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the next amendment, as follows:

In line 57 add the following:

"Provided, however, That whenever any contractor or sub-contractor shall sublet his contract for the transportation of the mail on any route for a less sum than that at which he contracted to perform the service, the Postmaster-General may declare the original contract at an end and enter into a contract with the last sub-contractor, without advertising, to perform the service on the terms at which the last sub-contractor agreed with the original contractor or former sub-contractor to perform the same, provided that such last sub-contractor shall enter into a good and sufficient bond, and the original contractor shall not be released from his contract until a good and sufficient bond has been made by such last sub-contractor and accepted by the Post-Office Department: Provided further, That when a contract hereafter made is declared void on account of its having been sublet, the contractor shall not be entitled to one month's extra pay as provided for by law."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 67.

Mr. CASWELL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 79, not voting 101; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BARR.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. DUNNELL with Mr. DIBBLE.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. KENNA.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. HAZELTON.

Mr. KASSON with Mr. ROSECRANS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. O'NEILL with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. SPAULDING with Mr. HOGE.

Mr. SCALES with Mr. ERRETT.

Mr. YOUNG. I am paired with Mr. KENNA on political questions, but not regarding this as such, I have voted.

On motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the next amendment, as follows:

In line 79 strike out "of official stamps," and in line 80 strike out "400," and add "and hereafter no official stamps shall be supplied to any of the Departments, or any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transmitted in penalty envelopes."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 25.

Mr. VALENTINE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HISCOCK, and Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois, tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 70.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 61, after the word "special," insert the word "mail;" so it will read "for necessary and special mail facilities on trunk lines, $500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I move, in section 2, to strike out "787,577.95" and insert in lieu thereof "887,177.90;" so it will read:

SEC. 2. That if the revenue of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $887,177.90, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1883.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to amend by adding a new section, as follows:

Steamboat mail service on the Mississippi River, or any part thereof between the city of Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, and the city of Saint Paul, in the State of Minnesota, shall not be discontinued so long as navigation of said river remains open and unobstructed and the mails can be safely transported thereon by steamboats and the laws of the United States applicable thereto maintained and the revenues therefrom collected.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. It is an independent motion; and a motion to recommit with instructions is in order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Upon the motion to recommit with instructions I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, seventeen members only voting therefor.

The motion to recommit the bill with instructions was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the passage of the bill. Under the rule the yeas and nays must be taken. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 11, not voting 101; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KLOTZ. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for the purpose of introducing a bill for reference, as we will have no session on Monday.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn the Chair desires to submit certain requests of members.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. LORD to withdraw all papers filed in connection with report No. 684, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, there being no adverse report.

Also, to Mr. HARDENBERGH, to withdraw from the files of the House the bill H. R. No. 1038, to amend an act entitled "An act for the construction of a public building for use by the United States Government in the city of New York," approved June 15, 1878, there being no adverse report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CASWELL for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX ON STILLS, ETC.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, recommending the amendment of sections 3244 and 3689 of the Revised Statutes, so as to provide for the payment of drawback of internal-revenue tax on stills and distilling-worms exported to foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion for the present.

Mr. KLOTZ. Very well, I withdraw the motion.

JACOB BOGERT.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4678) for the relief of Jacob Bogert; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EULOGIES ON PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is requested to announce to members that the Sergeant-at-Arms, in order to execute the order of the Senate and House of Representatives in connection with the proceedings on Monday, will be required to remove the three rows of seats in front for that day, which will be restored to their places by the following Tuesday.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCOOK. Before the gentleman presses that motion, I wish to ask if we are to understand that members who have seats in those rows will have their seats reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to know whether the request for the removal of three rows of seats includes the entire circle of seats.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it includes the entire circle.

The Chair will also submit to the House that for the purpose of carrying out the order of proceedings on Monday it will be necessary to omit the reading of the Journal of this day's proceedings. The Chair desires, therefore, unanimous consent, if it can be obtained, of the House that the reading of the Journal of this day's proceedings be dispensed with on Monday, and that it be allowed to be read on Tuesday instead.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not wish to appear to attach any importance to what may seem to be a very unimportant matter; but inasmuch as it is personal to myself, and I speak only for myself, I would like to know, if the Sergeant-at-Arms is permitted to remove the three rows of seats specified by the Speaker, what provision is to be made for seating those members who will be thereby displaced. I wish to know if he will give me another seat, so that I will be placed upon an equality with other members in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very frank to state that he is not fully advised as to the arrangements. The Chair understands, however, that all persons admitted to the Hall by tickets, whether members or others, will be provided with seats.

Mr. ATKINS. But members will not be required to have tickets.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that every person admitted, with or without tickets, will be provided with a seat. The Chair wishes to state that he has very little to do in this matter. It is done under the order of the two Houses.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to know what has been the order about the seats?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the gentleman's question further than it has already stated.

Mr. ROBESON. I want to know whether the Representatives here in the front rows are to be ruled out or not?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] which is that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCOOK. I call for a division.

Mr. ROBESON. We want to know about this thing. Let us have this settled before we adjourn.

The question being taken on Mr. KNOTT's motion, there were—ayes 42, noes 62.

So the House refused to adjourn.

MERCHANT VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. VAN HORN, by unanimous consent, submitted a concurrent resolution, providing for the printing of extra copies of the authentic list of the merchant vessels of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT ON ORANGE INSECTS.

Mr. VAN HORN also, by unanimous consent, submitted a concurrent resolution to print 10,000 copies of a special report on orange insects; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ECONOMIC ENTOMOLOGY.

Mr. VAN HORN also, by unanimous consent, submitted a concurrent resolution to print 1,000 copies of a special report entitled Bibliography of Economic Entomology; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

INSECTS AFFECTING TREES.

Mr. VAN HORN also, by unanimous consent, submitted a concurrent resolution to print 2,000 copies of a special report on insects affecting trees; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. ROBESON. We desire to know what it is that is said to have been ordered by the House. We have not heard it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the two Houses made an order in reference to the memorial services on the 27th of this month, and each member is as able to learn the effect of that order as the Chair is. The Chair has simply made an announcement that in order to execute the order the Sergeant-at-Arms has intimated it would be necessary to remove three rows of seats in front. The Chair has no other information about it.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to have a vote of the House, to see if they agree with the Sergeant-at-Arms or not.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I hope there will be a vote of the House on that subject.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on a division by sound the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 39.

Mr. McCOOK. I call for tellers.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope gentlemen will allow us to adjourn. It has always been usual on such occasions to make arrangements of this character about the seats.

On the question of ordering tellers, there were ayes 36, more than one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are ordered; and the Chair appoints the gentleman from New York, Mr. McCOOK, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BRAGG, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 24.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 27, 1882.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we desire to look up to Thee for Thy blessing to rest upon the services of this day. Sanctify to us the memorial services upon which we are about to attend. Deeply impress upon our minds a sense of our mortality and the importance of being ever ready for our departure, for we know not the day nor the hour when we may be called hence.

Bless, we pray Thee, our rulers, the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and all others in authority. Give them grace and wisdom for the right discharge of their important duties.

God, be merciful unto us and bless us. Cause His face to shine upon us, and give us peace in our day and generation, and finally save us all in Heaven. We ask for Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now as a body proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives in pursuance of the programme of arrangements for the memorial services in honor of the late President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, that order will be executed now.

The Senate, preceded by their Sergeant-at-Arms, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At one o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber, and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 27, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

MEMORIAL OF JAMES A. GARFIELD.

The SPEAKER. This day has been dedicated by the action of the two Houses of Congress to services in commemoration of the life and death of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States. This action was taken through the adoption of concurrent resolutions by the unanimous vote of the two Houses, presented by a select joint committee appointed "to consider and report by what token of respect, esteem, and affection it may be proper for Congress to express its and the nation's deep sensibility over the event of the decease of our late President."

This House is now assembled and ready to perform its part in the solemn duty. The Clerk will read the concurrent resolutions.

The Clerk read the following concurrent resolutions adopted by both Houses of Congress December 21, 1881:

Whereas the melancholy event of the violent and tragic death of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States, having occurred during the recess of Congress, and the two Houses sharing in the general grief and desiring to manifest their sensibility upon the occasion of the public bereavement: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the two Houses of Congress will assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on a day and hour to be fixed and announced by the joint committee, and that in the presence of the two Houses there assembled an address upon the life and character of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States, be pronounced by Hon. James G. Blaine, and that the President of the Senate pro tempore and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to invite the President and ex-Presidents of the United States, the heads of the several Departments, the judges of the Supreme Court, the representatives of the foreign governments near this Government, the governors of the several States, the General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy, and such officers of the Army and Navy as have received the thanks of Congress, who may then be at the seat of Government, to be present on the occasion.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to Mrs. Lucretia R. Garfield, and to assure her of the profound sympathy of the two Houses of Congress for her deep personal affliction, and of their sincere condolence for the late national bereavement.

The Clerk also read the following concurrent resolution adopted by both Houses of Congress February 1, 1882:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That Monday, the 27th day of February, 1882, be set apart for the memorial services upon the late President, James A. Garfield.

The following programme of arrangements prepared by the joint committee of both Houses was carried out:

PROGRAMME OF ARRANGEMENTS.

The Capitol will be closed on the morning of the 27th to all except the members and officers of Congress.

At ten o'clock the east door leading to the Rotunda will be opened to those to whom invitations have been extended under the joint resolution of Congress by the presiding officers of the two Houses, and to those holding tickets of admission to the galleries.

The Hall of the House of Representatives will be opened for the admission of Representatives and to those who have invitations, who will be conducted to the seats assigned to them, as follows:

The President and ex-Presidents of the United States and special guests will be seated in front of the Speaker.

The Chief-Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court will occupy seats next to the President and ex-Presidents and special guests, on the right of the Speaker.

The Cabinet officers, the General of the Army and Admiral of the Navy, and the officers of the Army and Navy who, by name, have received the thanks of Congress, will occupy seats on the left of the Speaker.

The chief-justice and judges of the Court of Claims and the chief-justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia will occupy seats directly in the rear of the Supreme Court.

The diplomatic corps will occupy the front row of seats.

Ex-Vice-Presidents, Senators, and ex-Senators will occupy seats in the second, third, fourth, and fifth rows, on east side of main aisle.

Representatives will occupy seats on west side of main aisle and in rear of the Senators on east side.

Commissioners of the District, governors of States and Territories, assistant heads of Departments, and invited guests will occupy seats in rear of Representatives.

The Executive gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the Supreme Court and the families of the Cabinet and the invited guests of the President. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the Private Secretary of the President.

The diplomatic gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the members of the diplomatic corps. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the Secretary of State.

The reporters' gallery will be reserved exclusively for the use of the reporters for the press. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the press committee.

The official reporters of the Senate and of the House will occupy the reporters' desk in front of the Clerk's table.

The House of Representatives will be called to order by the Speaker at twelve o'clock.

The Marine Band will be in attendance.

The Senate will assemble at twelve o'clock, and immediately after prayer will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The diplomatic corps will meet at half past eleven o'clock in Representatives' lobby, and be conducted by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to the seats assigned them.

The President of the Senate will occupy the Speaker's chair.

The Speaker of the House will occupy a seat at the left of the President of the Senate.

The Chaplains of the Senate and of the House will occupy seats next to the presiding officers of their respective Houses.

The chairmen of the joint committee of arrangements will occupy seats at the right and left of the orator, and next to them will be seated the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House.

The other officers of the Senate and of the House will occupy seats on the floor at the right and the left of the Speaker's platform.

Prayer will be offered by the Rev. F. D. POWER, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The presiding officer will then present the orator of the day.

The benediction will be pronounced by the Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, Chaplain of the Senate.

By reason of the limited capacity of the galleries the number of tickets is necessarily restricted, and will be distributed as follows:

To each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, 3 tickets.

No person will be admitted to the Capitol except on presentation of a ticket, which will be good only for the place indicated.

The Architect of the Capitol and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House are charged with the execution of these arrangements.

JOHN SHERMAN,
WM. MCKINLEY, JR.,
Chairmen Joint Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate called the two Houses to order.

Rev. F. D. POWER, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered prayer, as follows:

O Lord, our God, we thank Thee for this hour and for this service. We thank Thee for a great life given to this nation; for its genius and potencies; for its example and memories; for its immortality and eternity. May this Republic never forget its dead.

As we come together this day to recall the wisdom, the integrity, the statesmanship, the loyalty, the reverence for Thee and Thy word, the unselfish love for country and for all mankind, wherewith Thou didst endow Thy servant and fit him for the administration of the affairs of the Government; as we meditate upon the patience, the sweetness, the fortitude, the faith, the quiet resignation to Thy will wherewith Thou didst fit him for his sore trial; as we remember his triumph and our sorrow, grant us Thy gracious benediction.

We bear, during this memorial service, our Father, before Thee, on our hearts, his loved ones with whom we weep. Sustain, we beseech Thee, the mother who bore him. May the peace of God that passeth all understanding be the strength and the crown of her spirit. Be very merciful to the wife in her present separation from the husband of her youth. May she rest in God, and may she find such sympathy and joy in her Saviour as the world can not give nor take away. Be a father to the children now fatherless, and may they imitate the virtues of their illustrious parent, and like him be useful in living and mourned in dying. May the youth of this land and of all lands feel the power of his example and follow in his footsteps. May those who rule among us and among men everywhere by the study of his virtues be incited to like patriotism and piety.

Now we ask Thy blessing on this assembly. May the remembrance of this great life be a genuine help to all those present and that greater audience waiting without. Give grace and utterance to Thy servant who shall speak to us. May his words be wise and worthy and fitly chosen, like apples of gold in pictures of silver.

Remember Thy servant before Thee, the President of the United States. Preserve him from evil influences and evil men. May truth rest upon his brow, wisdom upon his lips, justice in his hands, and grace in his heart. Bless his counselors, this Congress assembled, our magistrates and judges, our Army and Navy, our schools and churches, our whole land and all the inhabitants thereof.

May we keep alive in us the faith and virtue of those who have passed before. Give peace in our time. Make religion and righteousness, truth and justice, knowledge and freedom to abound everywhere. May Thy name be glorified and Thy kingdom rule over us from sea to sea.

We ask it all reverently, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. Senators and Representatives, this day is dedicated by Congress for memorial services upon the late President, James A. Garfield. I present to you Hon. James G. Blaine, who has been fitly chosen as the orator for this historical occasion.

Mr. BLAINE (who was greeted with hearty applause) delivered the following

ORATION.

Mr. PRESIDENT: For the second time in this generation the great departments of the Government of the United States are assembled in the Hall of Representatives to do honor to the memory of a murdered President. Lincoln fell at the close of a mighty struggle in which the passions of men had been deeply stirred. The tragical termination of his great life added but another to the lengthened succession of horrors which had marked so many lintels with the blood of the first born. Garfield was slain in a day of peace, when brother had been reconciled to brother, and when anger and hate had been banished from the land. "Whoever shall hereafter draw the portrait of murder, if he will show it as it has been exhibited where such example was last to have been looked for, let him not give it the grim visage of Moloch, the brow knitted by revenge, the face black with settled hate. Let him draw, rather, a decorous smooth-faced, bloodless demon; not so much an example of human nature in its depravity and in its paroxysms of crime, as an infernal being, a fiend in the ordinary display and development of his character."

From the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth till the uprising against Charles I, about twenty thousand emigrants came from old England to New England. As they came in pursuit of intellectual freedom and ecclesiastical independence rather than for worldly honor and profit, the emigration naturally ceased when the contest for religious liberty began in earnest at home. The man who struck his most effective blow for freedom of conscience by sailing for the colonies in 1620 would have been accounted a deserter to leave after 1640. The opportunity had then come on the soil of England for that great contest which established the authority of Parliament, gave religious freedom to the people, sent Charles to the block, and committed to the hands of Oliver Cromwell the supreme executive authority of England. The English emigration was never renewed, and from these twenty thousand men, with a small emigration from Scotland and from France, are descended the vast numbers who have New England blood in their veins.

In 1685 the revocation of the edict of Nantes by Louis XIV scattered to other countries four hundred thousand Protestants, who were among the most intelligent and enterprising of French subjects—merchants of capital, skilled manufacturers, and handicraftsmen, superior at the time to all others in Europe. A considerable number of these Huguenot French came to America; a few landed in New England and became honorably prominent in its history. Their names have in large part become anglicized, or have disappeared, but their blood is traceable in many of the most reputable families, and their fame is perpetuated in honorable memorials and useful institutions.

From these two sources, the English-Puritan and the French-Huguenot, came the late President—his father, Abram Garfield, being descended from the one, and his mother, Eliza Ballou, from the other.

It was good stock on both sides—none better, none braver, none truer. There was in it an inheritance of courage, of manliness, of imperishable love of liberty, of undying adherence to principle. Garfield was proud of his blood; and, with as much satisfaction as if he were a British nobleman reading his stately ancestral record in Burke's Peerage, he spoke of himself as ninth in descent from those who would not endure the oppression of the Stuarts, and seventh in descent from the brave French Protestants who refused to submit to tyranny even from the Grand Monarque.

General Garfield delighted to dwell on these traits, and, during his only visit to England, he busied himself in discovering every trace of his forefathers in parish registries and on ancient army rolls. Sitting with a friend in the gallery of the House of Commons, one night, after a long day's labor in this field of research, he said, with evident elation, that in every war in which for three centuries patriots of English blood had struck sturdy blows for constitutional government and human liberty, his family had been represented. They were at Marston Moor, at Naseby, and at Preston; they were at Bunker Hill, at Saratoga, and at Monmouth, and in his own person had battled for the same great cause in the war which preserved the Union of the States.

Losing his father before he was two years old, the early life of Garfield was one of privation, but its poverty has been made indelicately and unjustly prominent. Thousands of readers have imagined him as the ragged, starving child, whose reality too often greets the eye in the squalid sections of our large cities. General Garfield's infancy and youth had none of their destitution, none of their pitiful features appealing to the tender heart and to the open hand of charity. He was a poor boy in the same sense in which Henry Clay was a poor boy; in which Andrew Jackson was a poor boy; in which Daniel Webster was a poor boy; in the sense in which a large majority of the eminent men of America in all generations have been poor boys. Before a great multitude of men, in a public speech, Mr. Webster bore this testimony:

> It did not happen to me to be born in a log cabin, but my elder brothers and sisters were born in a log cabin raised amid the snow-drifts of New Hampshire, at a period so early that when the smoke rose first from its rude chimney and curled over the frozen hills there was no similar evidence of a white man's habitation between it and the settlements on the rivers of Canada. Its remains still exist. I make to it an annual visit. I carry my children to it to teach them the hardships endured by the generations which have gone before them. I love to dwell on the tender recollections, the kindred ties, the early affections, and the touching narratives and incidents which mingle with all I know of this primitive family abode.

With the requisite change of scene the same words would aptly portray the early days of Garfield. The poverty of the frontier, where all are engaged in a common struggle and where a common sympathy and hearty co-operation lighten the burdens of each, is a very different poverty, different in kind, different in influence and effect from that conscious and humiliating indigence which is every day forced to contrast itself with neighboring wealth on which it feels a sense of grinding dependence. The poverty of the frontier is indeed no poverty. It is but the beginning of wealth, and has the boundless possibilities of the future always opening before it. No man ever grew up in the agricultural regions of the West where a house-raising, or even a corn-husking, is matter of common interest and helpfulness, with any other feeling than that of broad-minded, generous independence. This honorable independence marked the youth of Garfield as it marks the youth of millions of the best blood and brain now training for the future citizenship and future government of the Republic. Garfield was born heir to land, to the title of freeholder, which has been the patent and passport of self-respect with the Anglo-Saxon race ever since Hengist and Horsa landed on the shores of England. His adventure on the canal—an alternative between that and the deck of a Lake Erie schooner—was a farmer boy's device for earning money, just as the New England lad begins a possibly great career by sailing before the mast on a coasting vessel or on a merchantman bound to the farther India or to the China seas.

No manly man feels anything of shame in looking back to early struggles with adverse circumstances, and no man feels a worthier pride than when he has conquered the obstacles to his progress. But no one of noble mould desires to be looked upon as having occupied a menial position, as having been repressed by a feeling of inferiority, or as having suffered the evils of poverty until relief was found at the hand of charity. General Garfield's youth presented no hardships which family love and family energy did not overcome, subjected him to no privations which he did not cheerfully accept, and left no memories save those which were recalled with delight, and transmitted with profit and with pride.

Garfield's early opportunities for securing an education were extremely limited, and yet were sufficient to develop in him an intense desire to learn. He could read at three years of age, and each winter he had the advantage of the district school. He read all the books to be found within the circle of his acquaintance; some of them he got by heart. While yet in childhood he was a constant student of the Bible, and became familiar with its literature. The dignity and earnestness of his speech in his maturer life gave evidence of this early training. At eighteen years of age he was able to teach school, and thenceforward his ambition was to obtain a college education. To this end he bent all his efforts, working in the harvest field, at the carpenter's bench, and, in the winter season, teaching the common schools of the neighborhood. While thus laboriously occupied he found time to prosecute his studies, and was so successful that at twenty-two years of age he was able to enter the junior class at Williams College, then under the presidency of the venerable and honored Mark Hopkins, who, in the fullness of his powers, survives the eminent pupil to whom he was of inestimable service.

The history of Garfield's life to this period presents no novel features. He had undoubtedly shown perseverance, self-reliance, self-sacrifice, and ambition—qualities which, be it said for the honor of our country, are everywhere to be found among the young men of America. But from his graduation at Williams onward, to the hour of his tragical death, Garfield's career was eminent and exceptional. Slowly working through his educational period, receiving his diploma when twenty-four years of age, he seemed at one bound to spring into conspicuous and brilliant success. Within six years he was successively president of a college, State senator of Ohio, major-general of the Army of the United States, and Representative-elect to the National Congress. A combination of honors so varied, so elevated, within a period so brief and to a man so young, is without precedent or parallel in the history of the country.

Garfield's army life was begun with no other military knowledge than such as he had hastily gained from books in the few months preceding his march to the field. Stepping from civil life to the head of a regiment, the first order he received when ready to cross the Ohio was to assume command of a brigade, and to operate as an independent force in Eastern Kentucky. His immediate duty was to check the advance of Humphrey Marshall, who was marching down the Big Sandy with the intention of occupying, in connection with other confederate forces, the entire territory of Kentucky, and of precipitating the State into secession. This was at the close of the year 1861. Seldom, if ever, has a young college professor been thrown into a more embarrassing and discouraging position. He knew just enough of military science, as he expressed it himself, to measure the extent of his ignorance, and with a handful of men he was marching, in rough winter weather, into a strange country, among a hostile population, to confront a largely superior force under the command of a distinguished graduate of West Point, who had seen active and important service in two preceding wars.

The result of the campaign is matter of history. The skill, the endurance, the extraordinary energy shown by Garfield, the courage he imparted to his men, raw and untried as himself, the measures he adopted to increase his force and to create in the enemy's mind exaggerated estimates of his numbers, bore perfect fruit in the routing of Marshall, the capture of his camp, the dispersion of his force, and the emancipation of an important territory from the control of the rebellion. Coming at the close of a long series of disasters to the Union arms, Garfield's victory had an unusual and extraneous importance, and in the popular judgment elevated the young commander to the rank of a military hero. With less than two thousand men in his entire command, with a mobilized force of only eleven hundred, without cannon, he had met an army of five thousand and defeated them—driving Marshall's forces successively from two strongholds of their own selection, fortified with abundant artillery. Major-General Buell, commanding the Department of the Ohio, an experienced and able soldier of the regular Army, published an order of thanks and congratulation on the brilliant result of the Big Sandy campaign, which would have turned the head of a less cool and sensible man than Garfield. Buell declared that his services had called into action the highest qualities of a soldier, and President Lincoln supplemented these words of praise by the more substantial reward of a brigadier-general's commission, to bear date from the day of his decisive victory over Marshall.

The subsequent military career of Garfield fully sustained its brilliant beginning. With his new commission he was assigned to the command of a brigade in the Army of the Ohio, and took part in the second and decisive day's fight in the great battle of Shiloh. The remainder of the year 1862 was not especially eventful to Garfield, as it was not to the armies with which he was serving. His practical sense was called into exercise in completing the task, assigned him by General Buell, of reconstructing bridges and re-establishing lines of railway communication for the Army. His occupation in this useful but not brilliant field was varied by service on courts-martial of importance, in which department of duty he won a valuable reputation, attracting the notice and securing the approval of the able and eminent Judge-Advocate-General of the Army. That of itself was warrant to honorable fame; for among the great men who in those trying days gave themselves, with entire devotion, to the service of their country, one who brought to that service the ripest learning, the most fervid eloquence, the most varied attainments, who labored with modesty and shunned applause, who in the day of triumph sat reserved and silent and grateful—as Francis Deak in the hour of Hungary's deliverance—was Joseph Holt, of Kentucky, who in his honorable retirement enjoys the respect and veneration of all who love the Union of the States.

Early in 1863 Garfield was assigned to the highly important and responsible post of chief of staff to General Rosecrans, then at the head of the Army of the Cumberland. Perhaps in a great military campaign no subordinate officer requires sounder judgment and quicker knowledge of men than the chief of staff to the commanding general. An indiscreet man in such a position can sow more discord, breed more jealousy and disseminate more strife than any other officer in the entire organization. When General Garfield assumed his new duties he found various troubles already well developed and seriously affecting the value and efficiency of the Army of the Cumberland. The energy, the impartiality, and the tact with which he sought to allay these dissensions, and to discharge the duties of his new and trying position will always remain one of the most striking proofs of his great versatility. His military duties closed on the memorable field of Chickamauga, a field which, however disastrous to the Union arms, gave to him the occasion of winning imperishable laurels. The very rare distinction was accorded him of a great promotion for his bravery on a field that was lost. President Lincoln appointed him a major-general in the Army of the United States for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Chickamauga.

The Army of the Cumberland was reorganized under the command of General Thomas, who promptly offered Garfield one of its divisions. He was extremely desirous to accept the position, but was embarrassed by the fact that he had, a year before, been elected to Congress, and the time when he must take his seat was drawing near. He preferred to remain in the military service, and had within his own breast the largest confidence of success in the wider field which his new rank opened to him. Balancing the arguments on the one side and the other, anxious to determine what was for the best, desirous above all things to do his patriotic duty, he was decisively influenced by the advice of President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton, both of whom assured him that he could, at that time, be of especial value in the House of Representatives. He resigned his commission of major-general on the 5th day of December, 1863, and took his seat in the House of Representatives on the 7th. He had served two years and four months in the Army, and had just completed his thirty-second year.

The Thirty-eighth Congress is pre-eminently entitled in history to the designation of the War Congress. It was elected while the war was flagrant, and every member was chosen upon the issues involved in the continuance of the struggle. The Thirty-seventh Congress had, indeed, legislated to a large extent on war measures, but it was chosen before any one believed that secession of the States would be actually attempted. The magnitude of the work which fell upon its successor was unprecedented, both in respect to the vast sums of money raised for the support of the Army and Navy, and of the new and extraordinary powers of legislation which it was forced to exercise. Only twenty-four States were represented, and one hundred and eighty-two members were upon its roll. Among these were many distinguished party leaders on both sides, veterans in the public service, with established reputations for ability, and with that skill which comes only from parliamentary experience. Into this assemblage of men Garfield entered without special preparation, and it might almost be said unexpectedly. The question of taking command of a division of troops under General Thomas, or taking his seat in Congress, was kept open till the last moment, so late, indeed, that the resignation of his military commission and his appearance in the House were almost contemporaneous. He wore the uniform of a major-general of the United States Army on Saturday, and on Monday, in civilian's dress, he answered to the roll-call as a Representative in Congress from the State of Ohio.

He was especially fortunate in the constituency which elected him. Descended almost entirely from New England stock, the men of the Ashtabula district were intensely radical on all questions relating to human rights. Well-educated, thrifty, thoroughly intelligent in affairs, acutely discerning of character, not quick to bestow confidence, and slow to withdraw it, they were at once the most helpful and most exacting of supporters. Their tenacious trust in men in whom they have once confided is illustrated by the unparalleled fact that Elisha Whittlesey, Joshua R. Giddings, and James A. Garfield represented the district for fifty-four years.

There is no test of a man's ability in any department of public life more severe than service in the House of Representatives; there is no place where so little deference is paid to reputation previously acquired, or to eminence won outside; no place where so little consideration is shown for the feelings or the failures of beginners. What a man gains in the House he gains by sheer force of his own character, and if he loses and falls back he must expect no mercy, and will receive no sympathy. It is a field in which the survival of the strongest is the recognized rule, and where no pretense can deceive and no glamour can mislead. The real man is discovered, his worth is impartially weighed, his rank is irreversibly decreed.

With possibly a single exception Garfield was the youngest member in the House when he entered, and was but seven years from his college graduation. But he had not been in his seat sixty days before his ability was recognized and his place conceded. He stepped to the front with the confidence of one who belonged there. The House was crowded with strong men of both parties; nineteen of them have since been transferred to the Senate, and many of them have served with distinction in the gubernatorial chairs of their respective States, and on foreign missions of great consequence; but among them all none grew so rapidly, none so firmly as Garfield. As is said by Trevelyan of his parliamentary hero, Garfield succeeded "because all the world in concert could not have kept him in the background, and because when once in the front he played his part with a prompt intrepidity and a commanding ease that were but the outward symptoms of the immense reserves of energy, on which it was in his power to draw." Indeed the apparently reserved force which Garfield possessed was one of his great characteristics. He never did so well but that it seemed he could easily have done better. He never expended so much strength but that he seemed to be holding additional power at call. This is one of the happiest and rarest distinctions of an effective debater, and often counts for as much in persuading an assembly as the eloquent and elaborate argument.

The great measure of Garfield's fame was filled by his service in the House of Representatives. His military life, illustrated by honorable performance, and rich in promise, was, as he himself felt, prematurely terminated, and necessarily incomplete. Speculation as to what he might have done in a field, where the great prizes are so few, cannot be profitable. It is sufficient to say that as a soldier he did his duty bravely; he did it intelligently; he won an enviable fame, and he retired from the service without blot or breath against him. As a lawyer, though admirably equipped for the profession, he can scarcely be said to have entered on its practice. The few efforts he made at the bar were distinguished by the same high order of talent which he exhibited on every field where he was put to the test, and if a man may be accepted as a competent judge of his own capacities and adaptations, the law was the profession to which Garfield should have devoted himself. But fate ordained otherwise, and his reputation in history will rest largely upon his service in the House of Representatives. That service was exceptionally long. He was nine times consecutively chosen to the House, an honor enjoyed probably by not twenty other Representatives of the more than five thousand who have been elected from the organization of the Government to this hour.

As a parliamentary orator, as a debater on an issue squarely joined, where the position had been chosen and the ground laid out, Garfield must be assigned a very high rank. More, perhaps, than any man with whom he was associated in public life, he gave careful and systematic study to public questions and he came to every discussion in which he took part with elaborate and complete preparation. He was a steady and indefatigable worker. Those who imagine that talent or genius can supply the place or achieve the results of labor will find no encouragement in Garfield's life. In preliminary work he was apt, rapid, and skillful. He possessed in a high degree the power of readily absorbing ideas and facts, and like Dr. Johnson, had the art of getting from a book all that was of value in it by a reading apparently so quick and cursory that it seemed like a mere glance at the table of contents. He was a pre-eminently fair and candid man in debate, took no petty advantage, stooped to no unworthy methods, avoided personal allusions, rarely appealed to prejudice, did not seek to inflame passion. He had a quicker eye for the strong point of his adversary than for his weak point, and on his own side he so marshaled his weighty arguments as to make his hearers forget any possible lack in the complete strength of his position. He had a habit of stating his opponent's side with such amplitude of fairness and such liberality of concession that his followers often complained that he was giving his case away. But never in his prolonged participation in the proceedings of the House did he give his case away, or fail in the judgment of competent and impartial listeners to gain the mastery.

These characteristics, which marked Garfield as a great debater, did not, however, make him a great parliamentary leader. A parliamentary leader, as that term is understood wherever free representative government exists, is necessarily and very strictly the organ of his party. An ardent American defined the instinctive warmth of patriotism when he offered the toast, "Our country, always right; but right or wrong, our country." The parliamentary leader who has a body of followers that will do and dare and die for the cause, is one who believes his party always right, but right or wrong, is for his party. No more important or exacting duty devolves upon him than the selection of the field and the time for contest. He must know not merely how to strike, but where to strike and when to strike. He often skillfully avoids the strength of his opponent's position and scatters confusion in his ranks by attacking an exposed point when really the righteousness of the cause and the strength of logical intrenchment are against him. He conquers often both against the right and the heavy battalions; as when young Charles Fox, in the days of his Toryism, carried the House of Commons against justice, against its immemorial rights, against his own convictions, if, indeed, at that period Fox had convictions, and, in the interest of a corrupt administration, in obedience to a tyrannical sovereign, drove Wilkes from the seat to which the electors of Middlesex had chosen him and installed Luttrell, in defiance not merely of law but of public decency. For an achievement of that kind Garfield was disqualified—disqualified by the texture of his mind, by the honesty of his heart, by his conscience, and by every instinct and aspiration of his nature.

The three most distinguished parliamentary leaders hitherto developed in this country are Mr. Clay, Mr. Douglas, and Mr. Thaddeus Stevens. Each was a man of consummate ability, of great earnestness, of intense personality, differing widely, each from the other, and yet with a signal trait in common—the power to command. In the give-and-take of daily discussion, in the art of controlling and consolidating reluctant and refractory followers; in the skill to overcome all forms of opposition, and to meet with competency and courage the varying phases of unlooked-for assault or unsuspected defection, it would be difficult to rank with these a fourth name in all our Congressional history. But of these Mr. Clay was the greatest. It would, perhaps, be impossible to find in the parliamentary annals of the world a parallel to Mr. Clay, in 1841, when at sixty-four years of age he took the control of the Whig party from the President who had received their suffrages, against the power of Webster in the Cabinet, against the eloquence of Choate in the Senate, against the herculean efforts of Caleb Cushing and Henry A. Wise in the House. In unshared leadership, in the pride and plenitude of power, he hurled against John Tyler with deepest scorn the mass of that conquering column which had swept over the land in 1840, and drove his administration to seek shelter behind the lines of his political foes. Mr. Douglas achieved a victory scarcely less wonderful when, in 1854, against the secret desires of a strong administration, against the wise counsel of the older chiefs, against the conservative instincts and even the moral sense of the country, he forced a reluctant Congress into a repeal of the Missouri compromise. Mr. Thaddeus Stevens in his contests from 1865 to 1868 actually advanced his parliamentary leadership until Congress tied the hands of the President and governed the country by its own will, leaving only perfunctory duties to be discharged by the Executive. With two hundred millions of patronage in his hands at the opening of the contest, aided by the active force of Seward in the Cabinet and the moral power of Chase on the bench, Andrew Johnson could not command the support of one-third in either House against the parliamentary uprising of which Thaddeus Stevens was the animating spirit and the unquestioned leader.

From these three great men Garfield differed radically, differed in the quality of his mind, in temperament, in the form and phase of ambition. He could not do what they did, but he could do what they could not, and in the breadth of his Congressional work he left that which will longer exert a potential influence among men, and which, measured by the severe test of posthumous criticism, will secure a more enduring and more enviable fame.

Those unfamiliar with Garfield's industry, and ignorant of the details of his work, may, in some degree, measure them by the annals of Congress. No one of the generation of public men to which he belonged has contributed so much that will be valuable for future reference. His speeches are numerous, many of them brilliant, all of them well studied, carefully phrased, and exhaustive of the subject under consideration. Collected from the scattered pages of ninety royal octavo volumes of Congressional record, they would present an invaluable compendium of the political history of the most important era through which the National Government has ever passed. When the history of this period shall be impartially written, when war legislation, measures of reconstruction, protection of human rights, amendments to the Constitution, maintenance of public credit, steps toward specie resumption, true theories of revenue may be reviewed, unsurrounded by prejudice and disconnected from partisanism, the speeches of Garfield will be estimated at their true value, and will be found to comprise a vast magazine of fact and argument, of clear analysis and sound conclusion. Indeed, if no other authority were accessible, his speeches in the House of Representatives from December, 1863, to June, 1880, would give a well-connected history and complete defense of the important legislation of the seventeen eventful years that constitute his parliamentary life. Far beyond that, his speeches would be found to forecast many great measures yet to be completed—measures which he knew were beyond the public opinion of the hour, but which he confidently believed would secure popular approval within the period of his own lifetime and by the aid of his own efforts.

Differing, as Garfield does, from the brilliant parliamentary leaders, it is not easy to find his counterpart anywhere in the record of American public life. He perhaps more nearly resembles Mr. Seward in his supreme faith in the all-conquering power of a principle. He had the love of learning, and the patient industry of investigation, to which John Quincy Adams owes his prominence and his Presidency. He had some of those ponderous elements of mind which distinguished Mr. Webster, and which, indeed, in all our public life have left the great Massachusetts Senator without an intellectual peer.

In English parliamentary history, as in our own, the leaders in the House of Commons present points of essential difference from Garfield. But some of his methods recall the best features in the strong, independent course of Sir Robert Peel, and striking resemblances are discernible in that most promising of modern conservatives, who died too early for his country and his fame, the Lord George Bentinck. He had all of Burke's love for the Sublime and the Beautiful, with, possibly, something of his superabundance; and in his faith and his magnanimity, in his power of statement, in his subtle analysis, in his faultless logic, in his love of literature, in his wealth and world of illustration, one is reminded of that great English statesman of to-day, who, confronted with obstacles that would daunt any but the dauntless, reviled by those whom he would relieve as bitterly as by those whose supposed rights he is forced to invade, still labors with serene courage for the amelioration of Ireland and for the honor of the English name.

Garfield's nomination to the Presidency, while not predicted or anticipated, was not a surprise to the country. His prominence in Congress, his solid qualities, his wide reputation, strengthened by his then recent election as Senator from Ohio, kept him in the public eye as a man occupying the very highest rank among those entitled to be called statesmen. It was not mere chance that brought him this high honor. "We must," says Mr. Emerson, "reckon success a constitutional trait. If Eric is in robust health and has slept well and is at the top of his condition, and thirty years old at his departure from Greenland, he will steer west and his ships will reach Newfoundland. But take Eric out and put in a stronger and bolder man and the ships will sail six hundred, one thousand, fifteen hundred miles farther and reach Labrador and New England. There is no chance in results."

As a candidate, Garfield steadily grew in popular favor. He was met with a storm of detraction at the very hour of his nomination, and it continued with increasing volume and momentum until the close of his victorious campaign:

> No might nor greatness in mortality
> Can censure 'scape; backwounding calumny
> The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
> Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue!

Under it all he was calm, and strong, and confident; never lost his self-possession, did no unwise act, spoke no hasty, or ill-considered word. Indeed nothing in his whole life is more remarkable or more creditable than his bearing through those five full months of vituperation—a prolonged agony of trial to a sensitive man, a constant and cruel draft upon the powers of moral endurance. The great mass of these unjust imputations passed unnoticed, and with the general débris of the campaign fell into oblivion. But in a few instances the iron entered his soul and he died with the injury unforgotten if not unforgiven.

One aspect of Garfield's candidacy was unprecedented. Never before, in the history of partisan contests in this country, had a successful Presidential candidate spoken freely on passing events and current issues. To attempt anything of the kind seemed novel, rash, and even desperate. The older class of voters recalled the unfortunate Alabama letter, in which Mr. Clay was supposed to have signed his political death-warrant. They remembered also the hot-tempered effusion by which General Scott lost a large share of his popularity before his nomination, and the unfortunate speeches which rapidly consumed the remainder. The younger voters had seen Mr. Greeley in a series of vigorous and original addresses preparing the pathway for his own defeat. Unmindful of these warnings, unheeding the advice of friends, Garfield spoke to large crowds as he journeyed to and from New York in August, to a great multitude in that city, to delegations and deputations of every kind that called at Mentor during the summer and autumn. With innumerable critics, watchful and eager to catch a phrase that might be turned into odium or ridicule, or a sentence that might be distorted to his own or his party's injury, Garfield did not trip or halt in any one of his seventy speeches. This seems all the more remarkable when it is remembered that he did not write what he said, and yet spoke with such logical consecutiveness of thought and such admirable precision of phrase as to defy the accident of misreport and the malignity of misrepresentation.

In the beginning of his Presidential life Garfield's experience did not yield him pleasure or satisfaction. The duties that engross so large a portion of the President's time were distasteful to him, and were unfavorably contrasted with his legislative work. "I have been dealing all these years with ideas," he impatiently exclaimed one day, "and here I am dealing only with persons. I have been heretofore treating of the fundamental principles of government, and here I am considering all day whether A or B shall be appointed to this or that office." He was earnestly seeking some practical way of correcting the evils arising from the distribution of overgrown and unwieldy patronage—evils always appreciated and often discussed by him, but whose magnitude had been more deeply impressed upon his mind since his accession to the Presidency. Had he lived, a comprehensive improvement in the mode of appointment and in the tenure of office would have been proposed by him, and with the aid of Congress no doubt perfected.

But, while many of the Executive duties were not grateful to him, he was assiduous and conscientious in their discharge. From the very outset he exhibited administrative talent of a high order. He grasped the helm of office with the hand of a master. In this respect indeed he constantly surprised many who were most intimately associated with him in the Government, and especially those who had feared that he might be lacking in the executive faculty. His disposition of business was orderly and rapid. His power of analysis, and his skill in classification, enabled him to dispatch a vast mass of detail with singular promptness and ease. His Cabinet meetings were admirably conducted. His clear presentation of official subjects, his well-considered suggestion of topics on which discussion was invited, his quick decision when all had been heard, combined to show a thoroughness of mental training as rare as his natural ability and his facile adaptation to a new and enlarged field of labor.

With perfect comprehension of all the inheritances of the war, with a cool calculation of the obstacles in his way, impelled always by a generous enthusiasm, Garfield conceived that much might be done by his administration towards restoring harmony between the different sections of the Union. He was anxious to go South and speak to the people. As early as April he had ineffectually endeavored to arrange for a trip to Nashville, whither he had been cordially invited, and he was again disappointed a few weeks later to find that he could not go to South Carolina to attend the centennial celebration of the victory of the Cowpens. But for the autumn he definitely counted on being present at three memorable assemblies in the South, the celebration at Yorktown, the opening of the Cotton Exposition at Atlanta, and the meeting of the Army of the Cumberland at Chattanooga. He was already turning over in his mind his address for each occasion, and the three taken together, he said to a friend, gave him the exact scope and verge which he needed. At Yorktown he would have before him the associations of a hundred years that bound the South and the North in the sacred memory of a common danger and a common victory. At Atlanta he would present the material interests and the industrial development which appealed to the thrift and independence of every household, and which should unite the two sections by the instinct of self-interest and self-defense. At Chattanooga he would revive memories of the war only to show that after all its disaster and all its suffering, the country was stronger and greater, the Union rendered indissoluble, and the future, through the agony and blood of one generation, made brighter and better for all.

Garfield's ambition for the success of his administration was high. With strong caution and conservatism in his nature, he was in no danger of attempting rash experiments or of resorting to the empiricism of statesmanship. But he believed that renewed and closer attention should be given to questions affecting the material interests and commercial prospects of fifty millions of people. He believed that our continental relations, extensive and undeveloped as they are, involved responsibility, and could be cultivated into profitable friendship or be abandoned to harmful indifference or lasting enmity. He believed with equal confidence that an essential forerunner to a new era of national progress must be a feeling of contentment in every section of the Union, and a generous belief that the benefits and burdens of government would be common to all. Himself a conspicuous illustration of what ability and ambition may do under republican institutions, he loved his country with a passion of patriotic devotion, and every waking thought was given to her advancement. He was an American in all his aspirations, and he looked to the destiny and influence of the United States with the philosophic composure of Jefferson and the demonstrative confidence of John Adams.

The political events which disturbed the President's serenity for many weeks before that fateful day in July form an important chapter in his career, and, in his own judgment, involved questions of principle and of right which are vitally essential to the constitutional administration of the Federal Government. It would be out of place here and now to speak the language of controversy; but the events referred to, however they may continue to be source of contention with others, have become, so far as Garfield is concerned, as much a matter of history as his heroism at Chickamauga or his illustrious service in the House. Detail is not needful, and personal antagonism shall not be rekindled by any word uttered to-day. The motives of those opposing him are not to be here adversely interpreted nor their course harshly characterized. But of the dead President this is to be said, and said because his own speech is forever silenced and he can be no more heard except through the fidelity and the love of surviving friends: from the beginning to the end of the controversy he so much deplored, the President was never for one moment actuated by any motive of gain to himself or of loss to others. Least of all men did he harbor revenge, rarely did he even show resentment, and malice was not in his nature. He was congenially employed only in the exchange of good offices and the doing of kindly deeds.

There was not an hour, from the beginning of the trouble till the fatal shot entered his body, when the President would not gladly, for the sake of restoring harmony, have retraced any step he had taken if such retracing had merely involved consequences personal to himself. The pride of consistency, or any supposed sense of humiliation that might result from surrendering his position, had not a feather's weight with him. No man was ever less subject to such influences from within or from without. But after most anxious deliberation and the coolest survey of all the circumstances, he solemnly believed that the true prerogatives of the Executive were involved in the issue which had been raised, and that he would be unfaithful to his supreme obligation if he failed to maintain, in all their vigor, the constitutional rights and dignities of his great office. He believed this in all the convictions of conscience when in sound and vigorous health, and he believed it in his suffering and prostration in the last conscious thought which his wearied mind bestowed on the transitory struggles of life.

More than this need not be said. Less than this could not be said. Justice to the dead, the highest obligation that devolves upon the living, demands the declaration that in all the bearings of the subject, actual or possible, the President was content in his mind, justified in his conscience, immovable in his conclusions.

The religious element in Garfield's character was deep and earnest. In his early youth he espoused the faith of the Disciples, a sect of that great Baptist Communion, which in different ecclesiastical establishments is so numerous and so influential throughout all parts of the United States. But the broadening tendency of his mind and his active spirit of inquiry were early apparent and carried him beyond the dogmas of sect and the restraints of association. In selecting a college in which to continue his education he rejected Bethany, though presided over by Alexander Campbell, the greatest preacher of his church. His reasons were characteristic: first, that Bethany leaned too heavily toward slavery; and, second, that being himself a Disciple and the son of Disciple parents, he had little acquaintance with people of other beliefs, and he thought it would make him more liberal, quoting his own words, both in his religious and general views, to go into a new circle and be under new influences.

The liberal tendency which he anticipated as the result of wider culture was fully realized. He was emancipated from mere sectarian belief, and with eager interest pushed his investigations in the direction of modern progressive thought. He followed with quickening step in the paths of exploration and speculation so fearlessly trodden by Darwin, by Huxley, by Tyndall, and by other living scientists of the radical and advanced type. His own church, binding its disciples by no formulated creed, but accepting the Old and New Testaments as the word of God with unbiased liberality of private interpretation, favored, if it did not stimulate, the spirit of investigation. Its members profess with sincerity, and profess only, to be of one mind and one faith with those who immediately followed the Master, and who were first called Christians at Antioch.

But however high Garfield reasoned of "fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute," he was never separated from the Church of the Disciples in his affections and in his associations. For him it held the ark of the covenant. To him it was the gate of Heaven. The world of religious belief is full of solecisms and contradictions. A philosophic observer declares that men by the thousand will die in defense of a creed whose doctrines they do not comprehend and whose tenets they habitually violate. It is equally true that men by the thousand will cling to church organizations with instinctive and undying fidelity when their belief in maturer years is radically different from that which inspired them as neophytes.

But after this range of speculation, and this latitude of doubt, Garfield came back always with freshness and delight to the simpler instincts of religious faith, which, earliest implanted, longest survive. Not many weeks before his assassination, walking on the banks of the Potomac with a friend, and conversing on those topics of personal religion, concerning which noble natures have an unconquerable reserve, he said that he found the Lord's Prayer and the simple petitions learned in infancy infinitely restful to him, not merely in their stated repetition, but in their casual and frequent recall as he went about the daily duties of life. Certain texts of scripture had a very strong hold on his memory and his heart. He heard, while in Edinburgh some years ago, an eminent Scotch preacher who prefaced his sermon with reading the eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, which book had been the subject of careful study with Garfield during all his religious life. He was greatly impressed by the elocution of the preacher and declared that it had imparted a new and deeper meaning to the majestic utterances of St. Paul. He referred often in after years to that memorable service, and dwelt with exaltation of feeling upon the radiant promise and the assured hope with which the great apostle of the Gentiles was "persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

The crowning characteristic of General Garfield's religious opinions, as, indeed, of all his opinions, was his liberality. In all things he had charity. Tolerance was of his nature. He respected in others the qualities which he possessed himself—sincerity of conviction and frankness of expression. With him the inquiry was not so much what a man believes, but does he believe it? The lines of his friendship and his confidence encircled men of every creed, and men of no creed, and to the end of his life, on his ever-lengthening list of friends, were to be found the names of a pious Catholic priest and of an honest-minded and generous-hearted free-thinker.

On the morning of Saturday, July second, the President was a contented and happy man—not in an ordinary degree, but joyfully, almost boyishly happy. On his way to the railroad station to which he drove slowly, in conscious enjoyment of the beautiful morning, with an unwonted sense of leisure and a keen anticipation of pleasure, his talk was all in the grateful and gratulatory vein. He felt that after four months of trial his administration was strong in its grasp of affairs, strong in popular favor, and destined to grow stronger; that grave difficulties confronting him at his inauguration had been safely passed; that trouble lay behind him and not before him; that he was soon to meet the wife whom he loved, now recovering from an illness which had but lately disquieted and at times almost unnerved him; that he was going to his Alma Mater to renew the most cherished associations of his young manhood, and to exchange greetings with those whose deepening interest had followed every step of his upward progress from the day he entered upon his college course until he had attained the loftiest elevation in the gift of his countrymen.

Surely, if happiness can ever come from the honors or triumphs of this world, on that quiet July morning James A. Garfield may well have been a happy man. No foreboding of evil haunted him; no slightest premonition of danger clouded his sky. His terrible fate was upon him in an instant. One moment he stood erect, strong, confident in the years stretching peacefully out before him. The next he lay wounded, bleeding, helpless, doomed to weary weeks of torture, to silence, and the grave.

Great in life, he was surpassingly great in death. For no cause, in the very frenzy of wantonness and wickedness, by the red hand of murder, he was thrust from the full tide of this world's interest, from its hopes, its aspirations, its victories, into the visible presence of death—and he did not quail. Not alone for the one short moment in which, stunned and dazed, he could give up life, hardly aware of its relinquishment, but through days of deadly languor, through weeks of agony, that was not less agony because silently borne, with clear sight and calm courage, he looked into his open grave. What blight and ruin met his anguished eyes, whose lips may tell—what brilliant, broken plans, what baffled, high ambitions, what sundering of strong, warm, manhood's friendships, what bitter rending of sweet household ties! Behind him a proud, expectant nation, a great host of sustaining friends, a cherished and happy mother, wearing the full, rich honors of her early toil and tears; the wife of his youth, whose whole life lay in his; the little boys not yet emerged from childhood's day of frolic; the fair young daughter; the sturdy sons just springing into closest companionship, claiming every day and every day rewarding a father's love and care; and in his heart the eager, rejoicing power to meet all demand. Before him, desolation and great darkness! And his soul was not shaken. His countrymen were thrilled with instant, profound, and universal sympathy. Masterful in his mortal weakness, he became the center of a nation's love, enshrined in the prayers of a world. But all the love and all the sympathy could not share with him his suffering. He trod the wine-press alone. With unfaltering front he faced death. With unfailing tenderness he took leave of life. Above the demoniac hiss of the assassin's bullet he heard the voice of God. With simple resignation he bowed to the divine decree.

As the end drew near, his early craving for the sea returned. The stately mansion of power had been to him the wearisome hospital of pain, and he begged to be taken from its prison walls, from its oppressive, stifling air, from its homelessness and its hopelessness. Gently, silently, the love of a great people bore the pale sufferer to the longed-for healing of the sea, to live or to die, as God should will, within sight of its heaving billows, within sound of its manifold voices. With wan, fevered face tenderly lifted to the cooling breeze, he looked out wistfully upon the ocean's changing wonders; on its far sails, whitening in the morning light; on its restless waves, rolling shoreward to break and die beneath the noonday sun; on the red clouds of evening, arching low to the horizon; on the serene and shining pathway of the stars. Let us think that his dying eyes read a mystic meaning which only the rapt and parting soul may know. Let us believe that in the silence of the receding world he heard the great waves breaking on a further shore, and felt already upon his wasted brow the breath of the eternal morning.

[The orator on concluding was greeted with most hearty applause, in which the whole audience joined.]

Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, the Chaplain of the Senate, pronounced the benediction, as follows:

May the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your minds and hearts in the knowledge and love of God and His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. And the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, rest upon and remain with you, now and forevermore. Amen.

The President and his Cabinet, the Chief-Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, and other invited guests then retired from the Hall; after which the Senate returned to their Chamber.

The House having been called to order,

Mr. MCKINLEY submitted the following resolutions; which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. James G. Blaine, for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States, in the Representatives Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1882; and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairmen of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of James Abram Garfield be requested to communicate to Mr. Blaine the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I now offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further testimonial of respect to the deceased President of the United States, the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was adopted; and thereupon (at one o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 28, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last and of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, California, in favor of the incorporation of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of the Chicago Historical Society in favor of the purchase of the Franklin manuscripts offered for sale by Henry Stephens of London; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present the memorial of the city council of the city of Providence, Rhode Island, calling the attention of Congress to the importance and necessity of improving the harbor of that city. I had the honor to present some resolutions upon this subject the other day when I asked the attention of the Committee on Commerce to the importance of the subject, and I wish now again to call their attention to it. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCDILL presented the petition of John Kennedy, late a private in Company H, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry, praying to be relieved from the effects of an entry on the muster-out rolls charging him with desertion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FERRY presented resolutions of the Western Andersonville Survivors' Association of Chicago, Illinois, in favor of the passage of the bill (S. No. 1012) granting pensions to Union soldiers confined in so-called confederate prisons; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of California in favor of the passage of the bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of California praying for an increase of compensation to keepers of life-saving stations on the Pacific coast; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the petition of Edwin S. Gorham and 2,100 others, citizens of New York, praying for a reform in the method of appointment to the civil service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers, citizens of New York, praying for the passage of a bill to increase the pensions of all soldiers having lost an arm or a leg; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for such a modification and amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent purchasers of patented articles from the imposition and collection of royalties on infringements made by others; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of citizens of Missouri, praying for the erection of a suitable public building at Jefferson City, Missouri; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of the passage of a bill to increase the efficiency of the signal service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of the Saint Louis Medical Society in favor of the proposal of the Surgeon-General of the United States

Army for the erection of a fire-proof building for the National Medical Museum and Library; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRIS. I present recommendations of the bar of Memphis, Tennessee, for the relief of the Federal courts from the pressure upon their business. Believing, as I do, that the recommendations are eminently worthy of serious consideration, I move to refer the paper to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented a memorial of citizens of Bennington, New Hampshire, assembled on the birthday of Washington, in favor of legislation for the extirpation of polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Amherst, New Hampshire, praying for the passage of a law for the suppression and extirpation of polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of R. F. Carter and others, citizens of Lancaster, New Hampshire, praying for such legislation as will regulate charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, in favor of the passage of a bill for the reorganization of the Marine Corps; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GEORGE presented a petition of citizens of Mississippi, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER presented additional papers furnished by S. W. Melton, district attorney for South Carolina, to accompany the bill (S. No. 815) to amend section 572 of the Revised Statutes; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Joseph W. Fisher, late colonel One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Infantry Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying to be allowed compensation claimed to be due to him; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions in relation to the pension claim of Anna Maria Young, widow of Jacob Young; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of the Philadelphia Conference of Baptist ministers, protesting against the passage of the bill providing for the application of the unclaimed bounty money due colored soldiers for the establishment of an educational fund to be divided among the five schools named in the bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of Thomas Hicks, executor of Captain Isaac Hicks, deceased, praying that said Captain Isaac Hicks be allowed half pay as an officer in the Revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize the appointment of V. McNally as an ordnance store-keeper in the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4439) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district and circuit courts in the northern district of New York.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 58) for the relief of William H. Gill.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Hon. James G. Blaine for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 874) to adopt a device for the purpose of preventing a reuse of revenue stamps placed upon malt and spirituous liquor barrels and kegs, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MCDILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1191) to provide for greater economy in the public expenditure of gas, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back the joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigsbee, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the Emperor of Germany, without amendment, and to recommend its passage. I also desire to say, and am requested to say, that the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is a member of that committee, does not agree to the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1210) for the relief of the trustees of Isaac R. Trimble, of the city of Baltimore, Maryland, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to ask leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

PERUVIAN, CHILIAN, AND BOLIVIAN COMPLICATIONS.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report the following resolutions, and ask for their present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire into all the circumstances concerning the alleged loss or abstraction from the office of the Secretary of State of certain papers and documents mentioned in the message of the President sent to the Senate on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1882, and report thereon, with such recommendations as may appear to it proper in the premises; and that it inquire into all the circumstances of the alleged action of the diplomatic representatives of the United States at the Republics of France and Peru in being personally concerned in any contracts or arrangements of a public or private nature with the governments of either of said countries, or with corporations or associations having relations with, or asserting claims against, or grants derived from, either of the same, and also whether any member of Congress or any other officer of the United States has had any personal interest or concern in any of the matters before mentioned, and report thereon, with such recommendations as may appear to it proper in the premises.

Resolved, That for the purposes named in the foregoing resolutions, any three members of said committee shall constitute a quorum.

Resolved, That said committee have power to send for persons and papers in regard to the before-mentioned inquiries, and that it have leave to sit during the sittings of the Senate.

Resolved, That the expenses incurred in the execution of the foregoing resolutions be paid on the certificate of the chairman of said committee out of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. These resolutions reported by the committee cover the resolution referred to it on the motion of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and also the statement made by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who desired on Friday to enlarge the scope of the investigation.

Mr. BAYARD. Will these resolutions be printed now?

Mr. WINDOM. I propose to put them on their passage if there is no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. Do I understand that these resolutions are to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. WINDOM. No; this is a report from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present consideration of the resolutions is asked for.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say that the resolution referred to by the Senator from Delaware remains before the committee. These are original resolutions covering what was asked for by his resolution, and also the statement made by the Senator from Vermont, who desired on Friday to enlarge the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I understand, the Senate having heard this read but once, that it virtually includes the subject-matter referred to in the resolution I offered which went to his committee, and amplifies the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. WINDOM. These resolutions include that subject-matter and other matters referred to by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the matter will be considered.

Mr. INGALLS. This is a very important subject, and I think the resolutions, as they are not fully understood, had better go over and be printed so that we can all read them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will go over and be printed.

MERCHANT VESSELS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 1,000 additional copies of the list of merchant vessels, published under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for 1881, be printed for the use of the Department of State.

PRINTING OF MEMORIAL CARD.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following, which was read:

Resolved, That there be printed from the engraved plate of the memorial card prepared in honor of the late President James Abram Garfield, 5,000 copies for distribution by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose that under the rule this will have to go to the Committee on Printing, although if there is no objection to it, I should like to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot do it by unanimous consent under the statute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, let it go to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1326) for the relief of Edward Corning; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1327) for the relief of John Little and Hobart

Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FRYE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1328) for the relief of the estate of Henry K. Sanger, late United States designated depositary at Detroit, Michigan, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1329) to provide for the construction of the Maryland and Delaware free ship canal as a means of military and naval defense and for commercial purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1330) to provide for dower in equities of redemption in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1331) for the relief of H. H. Kidder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLATER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1332) for the relief of the Delaware Indians in accordance with treaty stipulations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1333) to authorize the payment to the Delaware Indians of the amount awarded to them under the provisions of the treaty of July 4, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FARLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1334) for the relief of Jesse D. Carr; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1335) to establish a railway bridge across the Mississippi River, extending from a point between Wabasha and Reed's Landing, in Minnesota, to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River, in Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1336) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1337) for the relief of Alfred Pleasonton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1338) to establish a free kindergarten training school, with model kindergarten, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1339) for the relief of Joseph W. Fisher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1340) for the relief of the heirs-at-law of William Downing, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1341) granting a pension to Anna Maria Young; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1342) authorizing the trustees of the Isherwood estate to amend a certain plan of subdivision of said estate, recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 43) fixing the head of navigation of the Minnesota River, in the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. McMILLAN. This joint resolution is introduced in pursuance of a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which I have the honor here in part to represent. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, it was Ordered, That permission be given to withdraw from the files of the Senate, under the rules, the papers relating to the claim of Mattie S. Whitney.

On motion of Mr. HAMPTON, it was Ordered, That the papers of Beverley Kennon, relating to erection of a "counterpoise battery," now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That the papers in the cases of Lieutenant Stephen O'Connor, W. H. Morgan, and the Fort Hayes military reservation be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of S. Annie Easterbrook be taken from the files of the Senate and be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Frances H. Plummer, now in the Senate files, be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MILEAGE OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. BECK submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Whereas the Secretary of War has officially advised Congress in the estimates for deficiencies that the $200,000 appropriated for "mileage to officers of the Army" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, "will be exhausted before the end of February," and that "much inconvenience may be caused by the inability of the (this) Department to reimburse officers for expenses incurred while traveling under orders after that date," and asks an appropriation of $52,000 to meet the deficiency: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate forthwith an itemized statement of how, by whom, and under what exigency or orders the $200,000 aforesaid has been expended in eight months, and whether the estimate of $52,000 will be sufficient for the remaining four months, stating his reasons for assuming that $52,000 will suffice to complete the service for the fiscal year.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator to strike out the word "forthwith." I have no doubt the information will be furnished.

Mr. BECK. I will say "as soon as possible."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "As soon as practicable."

Mr. BECK. That will do; "as soon as practicable."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified so as to read "as soon as practicable." The question is on the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

THE BEAUBIEN GRANT.

Mr. TELLER. I present a resolution of inquiry, but I do not desire that its introduction shall be inferred as any expression of opinion on my part as to the cause of complaint made. The people in the southern section of Colorado complain that there has been great injustice done to some of them by the survey of an old Mexican grant. The information seems to be unobtainable, except by a resolution, and therefore I ask for the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to inform the Senate what were the original boundaries of the tract of land lying in the State of Colorado on the river Trenchera, patented to Charles Beaubien, said to have been surveyed by Mr. Oakes as surveyor, with Edwin D. Kellogg as assistant.

Also how much land is covered by said original patent.

And that the Secretary be further required to inform the Senate whether any subsequent or second survey of said tract of land, being an old Spanish or Mexican grant, has been made, and by whom, and why said subsequent survey was made, and whether the original boundaries of the tract of land granted or patented have been extended, and how much territory has been included within the tract under the second survey which was not included in the first; and upon what evidence the second survey was ordered, and how many acres are included within the entire survey or tract last patented.

And that the Secretary annex to his response to this resolution a copy of all documentary evidence in the Department pertaining to the survey and the patent or patents of said tract of land, and whether the mineral interest is granted or is passed to the patentee under this patent; and if so, under what act of Congress said patent was issued.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

THE GREENE PAPERS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the papers of Major-General Nathaniel Greene, of the Revolutionary war.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to give notice that on Friday next, at half past one o'clock, I shall call up the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal revenue laws for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent and other resolutions" the morning hour is declared ended, and the Anthony rule takes effect. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, and the first bill in order will be called.

Mr. McPHERSON. The bill (S. No. 12) to establish and equalize the grades and regulate appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps I believe was passed on the Calendar without prejudice. Perhaps we shall have time to consider it this morning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hardly think we ought to go back on the Calendar. We ought to go right straight along.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill was not passed without prejudice. It was objected to, and the Senate does not go back to it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. ROLLINS. I suggest that it will hardly be possible to consider that bill this morning.

PERMANENT AND INDEFINITE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill to be taken up in order is the bill (S. No. 403) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a bill of such general public importance that it ought not to be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator from Vermont hear me a moment before he objects? This is a bill from the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand it perfectly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I want to say one word. The bill, Senators will recollect, passed the Senate at the last Congress after an amendment had been adopted which was offered by my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] The Committee on Appropriations again considered the bill at this session, and were unanimous in their report of it to the Senate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] understands the bill very well, having recommended it while he was Secretary of the Treasury.

I will say to my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that it is important we should pass the bill at an early day, so that it may go to the House and be acted on there at this session. As the Senator from Vermont probably knows, it repeals perhaps a hundred acts that have grown up since the formation of the Government, under which money now goes from the Treasury without Congress passing upon the expenditure. Between five and six million of customs duties that are collected annually are expended by a general appropriation which Congress has no means of supervising or looking over. It is thought best to have the supervision of Congress in all such cases. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not object to the bill, and that it may pass the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order if there is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel it to be a duty to object to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. I will vote with the Senator to take it up, and to take it up now, if he likes, and proceed with it in the same way that we proceed with other bills of general public importance and of considerable difficulty in regard to the details. My only point is that we ought not to be hampered by any five-minute rule about it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then, at the suggestion of the Senator, at a very early day, in behalf of the public Treasury, this being a general bill and for general purposes and not an individual bill, I shall move to take it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am in favor of the general bill, so far as that is concerned.

WILLIAM L. NANCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 5) for the relief of William L. Nance, which will be passed over because reported adversely from the Committee on Claims. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. FRYE. Why was Senate bill No. 5 passed over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because it was reported adversely.

Mr. FRYE. But is it not necessary to dispose of those cases when reached?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is subject to an objection, and such bills are not usually called. The Chair can have the bill called.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest to the Chair that while the adverse report placed on the Calendar indicates that there is a difference of opinion about the acceptance of the report (otherwise it would be accepted when first submitted) it does not necessarily indicate that there is a desire of any Senator that it should not be discussed and explained under the five-minute rule. It would be much more convenient to the Committee on Claims certainly, of which I am a member, to have the cases taken up where there are adverse reports, if no Senator objects. I desire to make that suggestion to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state, from information, that an adverse report is considered as an objection, and that bills reported adversely have always gone over when reached; that they have never been considered under the Anthony rule.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will see that an adverse report is not an objection, if I may be permitted to differ the with Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be called.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (S. No. 5) for the relief of William L. Nance.

Mr. INGALLS. As an adverse report from the committee has always been considered equivalent to an objection, I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposed it would be objected to. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

THOMAS F. RILEY.

The bill (S. No. 453) for the relief of Thomas F. Riley was announced as next in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is one of those disputable cases. It had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over on objection.

FRANK P. GROSS.

The bill (S. No. 83) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to ascertain the value of the property lost by First Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, United States Army, by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Texas, on or about the 19th of April, 1869, without fault or neglect on his part, and appropriates the amount so ascertained for that purpose; but no allowance shall be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while in quarters engaged in the public service, or exceeding in amount $2,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to ask the attention of the Senator who reported the bill to its wording. I think it does not cover the point that he perhaps had in view. The bill seems to decide that the loss of clothing had been without the fault of Lieutenant Gross, and leaves only to the Secretary of War the determination of the amount of that loss. I suppose it must have been intended that the Secretary of War should determine the two questions, First, whether the loss was without the fault of Lieutenant Gross; and, second, the amount of loss. I suggest that the bill should be amended in that particular so as to give the Secretary authority to investigate both questions, because no investigation, in the very nature of things, could have been had satisfactorily before the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read at the request of the Senator from Vermont. The Chair would inform the Senator from Vermont, however, that this is a long report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just the reason why I wish to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL January 17, 1882, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 83) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, has carefully considered the same, and submits the following report:

A bill was introduced in the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress for the relief of First Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which committee on March 30, 1880, submitted the following report thereon, to wit:

"This bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to First Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, United States Army, $2,000, in full for all losses sustained by him by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Texas, about April 19, 1869. Your committee referred the bill to the Secretary of War for information, and received from him the following communication:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, May 16, 1879.

"SIR: I have the honor to return Senate bill 74, for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, Ninth Cavalry, inclosed in your letter of the 1st ultimo, and to invite your attention to the inclosed report of the Adjutant-General, furnishing all the information in the case in possession of this Department.

"As it appears this officer lost all his personal effects by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, it would seem that the bill should receive favorable consideration.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"G. W. McCRARY,
"Secretary of War.

"Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
"Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

"ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, May 15, 1879.

"SIR: I have the honor to return, herewith, communication from Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, of the Senate Military Committee, dated April 1, 1879, covering Senate bill 74, for the relief of Lieutenant F. P. Gross, and to report as follows:

"No information as to the fire at Fort Clark, Texas, on or about April 19, 1869, by which the quarters of Lieutenant Gross were destroyed, has been found, upon examination, in this office or that of the Quartermaster-General, or at post or department headquarters.

"It having been reported by the present post commander that Captain John M. Bacon, Ninth Cavalry, was commanding the post, and Lieutenant F. P. Gross, Ninth Cavalry, post adjutant, at the date in question, the matter was referred to Colonel Bacon, (now aid-de-camp to the General of the Army,) who reports as follows, under date of May 14, 1879:

"'Respectfully returned to the Adjutant-General, with the information that I was present and commanding the post at Fort Clark, Texas, on or about April 19, 1869, at which time the quarters occupied by Lieutenant F. P. Gross, Ninth United States Cavalry, were destroyed by fire.

"'Lieutenant Gross had been regularly assigned for quarters to a log house of two rooms, with thatched roof; the fire originated in the roof, composed of dry grass or straw, by sparks from his cooking-stove, and burned with such rapidity that the occupants (Lietenant Gross, wife, and daughter) only escaped with their lives, losing their household goods and personal effects.

"'The efforts of the garrison were directed (to?), and succeeded in, saving the valuable hospital, the nearest building.

"'Lieutenant Gross and family were the only sufferers by the fire.'

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"E. D. TOWNSEND,
"Adjutant-General.

"The Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

"The claimant, Gross, filed with his bill the affidavit of Colonel John M. Bacon, dated January 1, 1870, who testifies that Lieutenant Gross was regularly assigned to the quarters, and that they were destroyed by fire on or about April 19, 1869, and that nearly all the personal effects of Lieutenant Gross and family were destroyed at the same time, and that the fire was purely the result of accident, caused by the combustible material composing the roof of the building; also, the affidavit of F. S. Davidson, first lieutenant Ninth Cavalry, and late acting assistant quartermaster, Fort Clark, Texas, who testifies that the quarters of Lieutenant Gross at Fort Clark, Texas, were burned on or about April 19, 1869, and, with the building nearly all his personal effects, together with the wardrobe of his wife and child, and that the fire was the result of accident, and entirely unavoidable on account of the inflammable material used in roofing the building, and that the building was old and almost entirely unserviceable as officers' quarters, having been used by troops of the Fourth Cavalry and others as barracks. Also, the affidavits of Orville Burke, late captain Company C, Forty-first United States Infantry, and of Jennie Burke, his wife, each dated March 25, 1879. Captain Burke testifies that he was stationed at Fort Clark, Texas, and that on or about April 19, 1869, the quarters at that post regularly assigned to and occupied by Lieutenant Gross were destroyed by fire, and that, his quarters being contiguous, he was the first to discover the fire in the thatching composing the roof, and rushed into the quarters and found the ceiling of the quarters already on fire, being composed of muslin or canvas, and that burning pieces were falling, so that, although every effort was made, only a trunk containing a few articles was saved; and that, in his opinion, the fire occurred from sparks blown from the kitchen chimney of the hospital building adjacent, and that when he first discovered the blaze it was near the comb of the roof at the end next to the hospital; and that a strong wind was blowing at the time; and that he was well acquainted with Lieutenant Gross and his family and household affairs, and knows that Gross 'was well supplied with all articles necessary to the comfort of his family, and that he was especially well supplied with clothing, military and otherwise, and that his wife and daughter were still more abundantly provided for, all of which, with trifling exceptions, were consumed with the quarters,' and that he is satisfied that Gross's loss could not have been less than $2,000, and that it was not the result of carelessness or negligence on the part of any member of his family; and that, from the knowledge of the facts, the said fire was the immediate result of neglect on the part of the Government—on the part of its officers—in assigning Lieutenant Gross to quarters which were so peculiarly liable to be destroyed by fire, owing to their proximity to the hospital kitchen flue already mentioned, and the thatching of grass or straw of which the roof was composed. Mrs. Jennie Burke testifies that she was intimate with the family of Lieutenant Gross, and had personal knowledge of the affairs of his family, and 'that in household effects they were abundantly supplied for a long residence on the frontier, and that in the matter of clothing the family was particularly well supplied, especially so in the case of Mrs. Gross, who had many valuable dresses, and in other matters of dress making up a lady's wardrobe she was equally well supplied; so that from her knowledge of the expense attending the purchase of such an outfit as they had, the loss of the family by fire must have been considerably above $2,000;' and 'that a very small quantity of all they possessed was saved from the flames;' and that the quarters were old and dilapidated, roofed with a thatching of grass and ceiled with muslin, and had low chimney-flues, barely extending two feet above the thatching, and she believes the fire originated from a spark being blown into the thatching; and that Lieutenant Gross and family were very careful about fire, and that 'it occurred through no want of care on their part, but was liable to be burned at any time by flying sparks from the flues of the hospital kitchen, over which Lieutenant Gross had no control.'

"Lieutenant Gross furnishes the following schedule of property lost by said fire, to-wit:

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the list of property lost need not be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no need of that being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part of the report will be omitted.

The Principal Legislative Clerk continued the reading of the report, as follows:

"I certify on honor that the foregoing enumerated articles were burned with my quarters at Fort Clark, Texas, at the time above mentioned, and that the prices set opposite each item are correct and just to the best of my recollection and belief. I further certify that my loss was considerably greater than this paper shows, as, after the lapse of so many years, neither my wife nor myself can recall every article destroyed, and many will not admit of being inventoried, so I confidently believe that $200 in addition to the above would not cover our entire loss.

"FRANK P. GROSS,

"First Lieutenant, United States Army. (Retired.)

"Your committee find that the said fire occurred without any fault or negligence on the part of said Gross or family, and could not have been prevented by the exercise of reasonable care and attention and due diligence on the part of said Gross, and that he can in no wise be chargeable with any responsibility therefor.

"The quarters occupied by him were old and of exceedingly inflammable material, very easily ignited, and were set on fire by sparks from the hospital chimneys, which was liable to occur at any time when the wind was blowing in the direction from the hospital toward the quarters.

"Your committee further find that Lieutenant Gross was assigned to these quarters, and they were the only shelter, protection, or quarters furnished him, and under his orders he had no discretion but to occupy them.

"Your committee gave due consideration to this case and made as thorough examination as time and opportunities would afford as to the policy and precedents of the Government in similar cases. Your committee find that by 'An act for the relief of sundry persons in the service of the United States in consequence of the destruction of their tools by fire at the navy-yard, approved March 3, 1815,' (6 Statutes at Large, page 155,) a sum not to exceed $5,000 was appropriated to pay 'all claims for losses that have been sustained by artificers, mechanics, and other workmen in the employ or service of the United States for tools and other articles essential to and connected with their trade and occupation which have been destroyed by fire in consequence of burning the buildings of the navy-yard in the city of Washington;' and that by 'An act for the relief of John Crosby and John Crosby, jr., approved April 26, 1816,' (6 Statutes at Large, pages 167 and 168,) 'the proper accounting officers of the Navy Department were directed to settle the claim of John Crosby and John Crosby, jr., on account of the destruction by fire of their store-house, goods, and wharf in the town of Hampden, in the State of Massachusetts, and to allow them in settlement thereof the value of said property destroyed as aforesaid.'

"Your committee further find that the following acts were passed by Congress in 1832, to wit:

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not ask the Secretary to read the acts of Congress that are supposed to be similar to this. He can pass those over, as far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be passed over.

The Principal Legislative Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

"With this long list of precedents, your committee does not feel willing to make Lieutenant Gross an exception. Your committee holds that no allowance should be made for any property not necessary and proper for Lieutenant Gross while in the service, in the line of duty; and not being able to determine from the evidence what articles claimed and destroyed were useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while in the public service, or the exact value thereof, your committee recommend a substitute, by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following, to wit: 'That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required to ascertain the value of the property lost by First Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, United States Army, by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Texas, on or about the 19th day of April, 1869, without fault or neglect on his part, and the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for that purpose: Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while in quarters, engaged in the public service, or exceeding in amount the sum of $2,000.

"Your committee recommend the passage of said substitute."

It will be seen that the bill now under consideration is an exact copy of the substitute recommended and adopted by the committee in its report to the Forty-sixth Congress, which substitute passed the Senate on the 5th day of June, 1880.

The committee has again carefully considered the question, and sees no reason why it should not adhere to the report and findings of the former committee.

The bill is therefore reported back to the Senate without amendment, and with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 7, after the words "1869," the words:

Without fault or neglect on his part; and the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And whether the same was on account of the fault or neglect of the Government, and if with or on account of the neglect of the Government, the amount of said loss is hereby appropriated for.

I have glanced cursorily over the acts which are cited as precedents for this measure, and I do not think that they sustain the view of the committee on this bill. None of them assumes that the appropriation is made on account of the lack of neglect merely on the part of the person who suffered the loss, but they stand on the ground of direct neglect on the part of the Government.

The report in this case goes on to say, among other things tending to establish the liability of the Government, that this officer was quartered in a building which had a thatched roof. That would be one degree of neglect probably on the part of the Government, and another would be having a building for officers' quarters that could be burned at all. It would not be a neglect on the part of the officer that he was quartered in a building which could be burned. It might not be neglect on the part of the Government to furnish an officer that kind of a building as his quarters.

I do not understand that the Government becomes an insurer against all contingencies of the service which may result in the loss of property to an officer or to a private soldier. It would seem to be going a great way to say that the Government should be liable on the sole condition that the officer himself has been guilty of no neglect. The neglect might have been that of a servant; it might have been that of a brother officer; it might have been that of some person entirely disconnected with the military service; and yet if it could be shown that in his case it was not the neglect of the officer who suffered the loss the Government would be liable, although it might be any one of a dozen persons over whom the Government had no responsibility whatever.

This principle if once conceded would go a great way. A man may have his mess kit, his clothing, his camp and garrison equipage piled up in a wagon, and it may be lost through the neglect or fault of the teamster, or of some other person; it may be stolen; and in that event you would have established a rule which would relieve an officer from any possible care that he would have for his own effects. He would have no inducement whatever to exercise any kind of diligence or care in regard to the loss of his property, because the Government would be an insurer against everything except his own positive acts of neglect, and thus the Government would be paying for second-hand clothing, for the various articles broken or destroyed upon the frontier posts, and would become the proprietor in that way, as insurance companies become the proprietors in their way, of all the articles which might be destroyed or which had ceased to be of any use to the various officers who had bought them and who did not care any longer to be responsible for them or to have them in use.

I think that if the Government is to be under any liability at all, it ought to be on account of the affirmative act or the actual positive neglect of the Government of a kind and description which the officer himself could not avoid by the exercise of a reasonable diligence and care on his part; and beyond that certainly there ought to be no liability whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs simply paraded a long line of precedents, beginning in 1815 and continuing uninterruptedly and unbrokenly up to this time, and they do not establish the principle that the Government is an insurer of the property of its officers. In this case the question was investigated by the committee as to whether Captain Gross was at fault, whether this fire occurred by reason of fault or neglect on his part, and found as a fact that it did not so occur. If it had occurred by reason of any fault or neglect on the part of his family or his servants or employés, it would have been his own act in the estimation of the committee, and they would not, therefore, have exculpated him from fault or neglect.

I have no objection individually that the question of default or neglect should be submitted to the Secretary of War, but the committee has already passed upon that question with the evidence before it, and this bill is better guarded than almost any such bill that has been passed. Most of the bills that have heretofore been passed did not restrict the Secretary of War as to the character of articles to be paid for. This bill does restrict him:

Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while in quarters, engaged in the public service, or exceeding in amount the sum of $2,000.

The Senator from Kansas seems to misunderstand the position of the committee in regard to the question of fault or neglect. If there had been fault or neglect on the part of Captain Gross's family, or any employé of his, it would have been considered by the committee as his fault and neglect; and therefore I do not see any necessity for the broad amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Kansas. At his suggestion I had proposed individually, not as representing the Military Committee, to offer this amendment myself which would meet, I think, more fully than the Senator's amendment does, any question in regard to negligence. After "1869," in line 7, insert:

And whether such burning occurred without fault or neglect on his part; and if so, the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

I suggest to the Senator that that amendment will fully cover the question.

Mr. PLUMB. That does cover one branch of the question, but does not cover the point which is raised as to whether it may not have been the neglect of somebody else for whom the Government was not responsible at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Kansas state his amendment again?

Mr. PLUMB. After "1869," in line 7, I move to insert:

And whether the same was on account of the fault or neglect of the Government, and if with or on account of the neglect of the Government, the amount of said loss is hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 11, noes 22; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. PLUMB called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. I think if we have another standing vote there will be a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we had better have the yeas and nays; it is an important question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bayard,	Edmunds,	McDill,	Sawyer,
Blair,	George,	Morrill,	Slater,
Brown,	Groome,	Plumb,	Teller,
Butler,	Ingalls,	Pugh,	Vance,
Camden,	Jackson,	Rollins,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,	Vest.

NAYS—35.

Aldrich,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,
Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Anthony,	Ferry,	Johnston,	Platt,
Beck,	Frye,	Jonas,	Sewell,
Call,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	Lapham,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Walker,
Conger,	Harris,	Maxey,	Windom.
Davis of Illinois,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,

ABSENT—17.

Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	McPherson,	Saunders,
Fair,	Hill of Georgia,	Mahone,	Williams.
Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Morgan,
Gorman,	Lamar,	Pendleton,
Hale,	Logan,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I offer, not as the representative of the Military Committee, but simply as an individual, and in deference to the wishes of the Senator from Kansas, this amendment, which I have no doubt will result in finding just what the committee has found. That committee has found that there was no fault or neglect; still, individually, I am willing to have that question hereafter left to the Secretary of War. After "1869" I would insert "and whether such burning occurred," and after the word "and" in line 8, to insert "if so;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required to ascertain the value of the property lost by First Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, United States Army, by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Texas, on or about the 19th day of April, 1869, and whether such burning occurred without fault or neglect on his part; and, if so, the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. MAXEY. That question was thoroughly examined by the committee and it is a question for judicial settlement. It was settled by the committee with all the facts before them. I as one member of that committee do not care to submit my judgment on that question to the revision of the Secretary of War or anybody else in the nature of a court of appeal. The question was settled and properly and wisely, as I believe, by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Texas will permit me in his time to say that I stated that fact heretofore that it was fully investigated by the committee and that the committee found as a fact that there was no fault or neglect on the part of the officer. I do not insist on the amendment, but I suggest it.

Mr. MAXEY. The point I make is that that question having undergone judicial investigation by the committee, it is not proper to submit their conclusion for revision to any Secretary as an appellate court; and I am opposed to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know on what ground it is that the United States is called upon to be the insurer of every officer's property in all the quarters over the whole of this Republic? I should be glad to get some information upon that point. Here it appears on the report of the committee, that this officer with his wife and children was occupying quarters at a military post. By a mere accident the quarters took fire because the roof was thatched with straw or some kind of thatch. We all know that quarters take fire when roofs are not thatched with straw; we know that quarters take fire when they are covered with slate; we know that accidents by fire will continually happen. Now what I wish to know is upon what ground it is that the United States on the principle of this bill is to become an insurer of the property of every person engaged in its service?

Mr. HAWLEY. I with great deference say anything in reply to a question from such a lawyer as the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] but I think that I might suggest this as one reason: that the officer is at no liberty whatever to choose his quarters. It strikes me that that is an equitable reason. If he were at liberty to say "I will go and take an adobe house with a slate roof out there, a good fire-proof building and take good care of my family," it would be quite another question; but he goes exactly where he is assigned.

Mr. PLUMB. Similarly everybody in that country is obliged to take the best hotel and the only hotel he can get; for there is but one hotel, and consequently the hotel keeper ought to be liable for the same reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD P. VOLLUM.

The bill (S. No. 293) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Secretary of War to ascertain the value of the property lost by Assistant Surgeon Edward P. Vollum, of the Army, who, while under orders of the War Department, was on board the brig Fawn, bound for Fort Umpqua, Oregon Territory, when she was wrecked, on the 21st of November, 1856; and the amount so ascertained is to be paid; but no allowance is to be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while on the voyage and engaged in the public service, and the aggregate amount allowed is not to exceed $700.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL on the 17th of January:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 293) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

In the Forty-sixth Congress a similar bill was before your committee, and the following report was made, to wit:

"In the Forty-fifth Congress a similar bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the following report was then made by said committee to the Senate:

"'This bill requires the Secretary of War to ascertain the value of the property lost by Assistant Surgeon Edward P. Vollum, who, while under orders of the War Department, was on board the brig Fawn, bound for Fort Umpqua, Washington Territory, when she was wrecked, on the 21st day of November, 1856, and provides for the payment of such sum: Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while on the voyage and engaged in the public service.

"'Your committee referred the bill to the Secretary of War, and received full information touching the premises, and through him the following report of the Adjutant-General, to wit:

"Dr. Vollum duly presented his petition for relief in 1857, 1858, 1861, 1864, and then in 1878, and at one time a favorable report was made in the Senate, but no final action had. No action seems to have been had at other times. Dr. Vollum has therefore not been negligent in presenting his claim.

"Dr. Vollum was on board this vessel under orders to go from California to Umpqua, Oregon, the only mode of conveyance at that time, and was in the discharge of official duty; and without fault or neglect on his part, and unavoidably, the vessel was wrecked and his necessary property—personal effects—was wholly lost.

"There is a long line of precedents giving relief in similar cases.

"Your committee believe Dr. Vollum is fairly entitled to relief, and report back the bill without amendment and recommend its passage.

"Your committee have again given due consideration to this claim, and find the foregoing report correct.

"Surgeon Vollum, in his letter of December 16, 1856, to the Adjutant-General, states the amount of his loss at $700, and asks the presentation of a claim for that amount. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported back to the Senate with an amendment added to the bill in the following words, 'and that the aggregate amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $700.'"

The bill so reported passed the Senate, and was favorably reported in the House. (See Report No. 1723, H. R., made June 9, 1880.)

Your committee adopt said report, and recommend the passage of said bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize the appointment of V. McNally as an ordnance storekeeper in the Army, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4439) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district and circuit courts in the northern district of New York, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THANKS TO MR. BLAINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. James G. Blaine, for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States, in the Representatives Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1882; and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairmen of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolution of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of James Abram Garfield be requested to communicate to Mr. Blaine the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolutions of the House.

The resolutions were concurred in unanimously.

PERMANENT AND INDEFINITE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PLUMB. I submit an amendment to the bill (S. No. 403) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations, passed over this morning, and I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to announce the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 71.

Mr. FERRY. I gave notice last week that I would this morning as soon as I could get the floor, call up the House post-route bill with the Senate amendments. It is very important that this bill be passed if these routes are to be included in this spring's lettings. I ask the Senator from California to yield to me for a moment for the purpose of calling up the bill, and I think it will not take over fifteen minutes to adopt the amendments and pass the bill. There is no need of reading the bill as it came from the House. It has not been the practice of the Senate to read such bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will have to be read.

Mr. FERRY. Unless by unanimous consent. It is simply a post-route bill. The amendments can be read. Every Senator's State is interested in having these routes included in the spring lettings, and unless the bill is passed soon they will not be.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to the bill being taken up, but I shall object to any bill being passed in the Senate without being once read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, of course.

Mr. FERRY. The practice heretofore has been frequently not to read the bill; but there is no use antagonizing the Senator from Kansas when he objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from California consent to having the special order temporarily laid aside?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I would consent with the understanding that the post-route bill is not to take more than fifteen or twenty minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot be a party to such an understanding; but it probably will not take over an hour.

Mr. FERRY. If it takes over half an hour, then the Senator from California may interrupt it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. With that understanding, I give way.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am not advised of the exact condition of the post-route bill or what the arrangements are that have been agreed upon. If there are certain amendments that I have heard spoken of recently in the bill, I shall antagonize it and will call for a full hearing.

Mr. FERRY. I would answer the Senator from Indiana by saying that there is no appropriation in this bill; it is strictly the establishment of post-routes.

Mr. VOORHEES. Nothing about the mail service?

Mr. FERRY. Nothing pertaining to the mail service.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection, then, of course.

Mr. FERRY. If the bill takes up more than half an hour, I hope the Senator from California will interrupt its further consideration.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there anything in the bill except the establishment of post-routes?

Mr. FERRY. None at all; it is simply the semi-session post-route bill. We generally pass two such bills, one about the middle of the long session and the other at the close. This is the usual bill passed, including all the new routes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I gave notice last week that at this hour I should ask the Senate to hear some remarks on the subject of the proposed construction of a new library building; but I will not antagonize the Senator from California with them now. I wish to say, however, that when he concludes this afternoon, unless he occupies more time than I expect he will, and unless somebody very much desires to go on with that discussion, I shall take the floor then on the subject indicated if it be the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I suggest that the post-route bill be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill indicated by the Senator from Michigan will be taken up.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that in the reading the Secretary when he comes to an amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads will so state, and that the amendments may be concurred in as we pass along in the reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. And let any amendments be offered.

Mr. FERRY. After the close of the regular amendments of the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them follow each State as its routes are read.

Mr. FERRY. Certainly; they are classified under each State.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the head of "Alabama," to insert, after line 18:

From Coltonville to Honey.
From Dowty to Herndon.
From Gadsden to Masingale.
From Gainestown to Choctaw Bluff.
From Mobile to Spring Hill.
From Somerville to Bluff City.
From Southern to Bean Rock.
From Estill's Fork, Alabama, to Winchester, Tennessee.
From Cuba Station, in Sumter County, to Kinterbish, in the same county.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 28, to insert:

ARIZONA.

From Fort Apache to Show Low.
From Greaterville to Crittenden.
From Clifton, Arizona, to Lordsburgh, New Mexico.
From York's Range to Camp Lee, both in Graham County.
From Tucson, via Oracle, American Flag, and Stratton's Ranche (N. O.) to San Catarina, (N. O.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Arkansas," to insert after line 51:

From Watalula Springs to Ozark.
From Marshall, Searcy County, via Emerson's Mills, to Liberty Springs, Van Buren County.
From Lead Hill, Boone County, via Cottonwood, to Omaha, Boone County.
From Limestone Valley, Newton County, via Boston Mountain, Casville, and Beech Woods, to Dry Fork, Carroll County.
From Hico, Benton County, via Cincinnati, to Dutch Mills, Washington County.
From Hope, Hempstead County, via Spring Hill and Dooley's Ferry, to Texarkana, Miller County.
From Texarkana, via Booker's Plantation, to Bright Star, in Miller County.
From Linwood, via Garretson's Landing, Swan Lake, Greenbank, Bankhead, and New Gascony, to Linwood, in Jefferson County.
From Witherspoon, Clarke County, via Round Hill, Tulip, and Leas Ferry, to Pine Bluff, in Jefferson County.
From Locksburgh, Sevier County, via Chapel Hill, to Ultima Thule.
From Yellville, via Lone Rock, to Sylamore.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "California," to insert after line 76:

From Upper Lake to Gravelly Valley.
From Princeton to Norman.
From Anaheim to Westminster.
From Leesville to Sulphur Creek, Colusa County.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. The committee offer the following amendment to come in after line 80, which is in the State of California:

From Tehema, via Riceville, to Orland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was under the head of "Colorado," after line 85, to insert:

From Villa Grove to Oriental.
From Teller to Michigan.
From Hayden to Lay, Routt County.
From Dillon to Troublesome, Summit County.

Mr. TELLER. That should be "from Dillon to Troublesome, Grand County," and not "Summit County;" and I move that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move to insert, after line 89, the following:

From Los Pinos to the Grand River Junction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, after line 89, to insert:

CONNECTICUT.

From Ivoryton to Centre Brook.
From Silver Mine to Norwalk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in line 93, after "Dakota," to strike out "Territory."

Mr. COCKRELL. Why is that stricken out?

Mr. FERRY. That has been the custom. There is no more need of designating Arizona and Dakota as Territories than California and Missouri as States. It is well understood that some are States, the others Territories. I suppose the Senate is always well informed, especially the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply wanted to know the idea the Senator from Michigan had.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "Florida," in line 120, to strike out "Cove's" and insert "Cove."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Florida," to insert after line 125:

From Acron to Altoona.
From Tampa to Palmetto.
From Welaka to Crescent City.
From South Lake Wier, in Marion County, via Lady Lake, to Leesburgh, in Sumter County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Georgia," after line 141, to insert:

From Thomaston to Waynmansville, Upson County.
From Perry to Henderson, Houston County.
From Excelsior, Bullock County, to Swainesborough, Emanuel County.
From Mill Haven, via Mitchellton, to Sylvania, all in Scriven County.
From Eden to Hinely, both in Effingham County.
From Egypt, in Effingham County, via Moore's Mills, to Crumley's, in Bullock County,
From Fleming to Dorchester, Liberty County.
From Scarborough to L. F. Pfeiffer's, in Scriven County.
From Scarborough, in Scriven County, to Dr. E. W. Lane's, in Emanuel County.
From Herndon, in Burke County, to Garfield, in Emanuel County.
From Byron, Houston County, to Taylor's Store, Crawford County.
From Cooley's Station, on the Macon and Brunswick Railroad, to Jeffersonville.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. After line 161 I move to insert, under the head of "Georgia:"

From Fairburn to Flat Creek, Fayette County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the committee was, in line 162, after "Idaho" to strike out "Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Idaho," after line 175, to insert:

From Salmon City to Leesburgh.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Illinois," after line 179, to insert:

From Belle Prairie to Wayne City.
From Fountain Green to Weakley's Store.
From Broadlands to Homer.
From Osage to Elkville.
From Exeter to Neelyville.
From Hecker to Red Bud.
From Jewett to Wheeler.
From Woodworth to Milford.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Indiana," after line 223, to insert:

From Holton to Dupont.
From New Middleton to Elizabeth, in Harrison County.
From Washington to Cumback, in Davis County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Iowa," after line 232, to insert:

From Alpha (N. O.) to Waucoma.
From Maloy to Delphos.
From Parma to Big Grove.
From Felix to Milo.
From Farley to Cascade.
From Muchachinock to Given.
From Princeton to Cordova.
From What Cheer to Delta.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Louisiana," to insert, after line 350:

From Clinton to Live Oak Store, Livingston Parish.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 351, to insert:

MAINE.

From Arnold to South Etna.
From North Haven post-office, in Knox County, northerly to Pulpit Harbor.
From Southwest Harbor post-office, in the town of Tremont, around said Southwest Harbor to East Tremont, near Henry E. Newman's dwelling-house.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads if he will not accept the following amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish such mail facilities on any public highway within the limits of the United States as the good of the public service requires.

That is all he does anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The amendment is not in order now.

Mr. FERRY. That question is being considered by the committee, and I hope the proposition will be referred to the committee and come up for consideration there.

Mr. BECK. I did not know the committee were considering it. Let it take that direction.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator will not urge it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices was, under the head of "Maryland," to insert, after line 367:

From Pleasantville to High Point, Harford County.
From Snow Hill to Box Iron, Worcester County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 369, to insert:

MASSACHUSETTS.

From Littleton to Littleton Common.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," after line 379, to insert:

From Bay's River, via Nahma and Garden Bay, to Fayette.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," to insert, after line 394:

From Waconia to Helvetia, in Carver County.
From Carver, via East Union, to J. P. Farrows's, in the county of Carver.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Mississippi," after line 401, to insert:

From Green Hill to Campbellsville.
From Johnsonville to Pennwood.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Missouri," in line 408, after "Rensaud," to insert "and;" so as to read:

From Eaudevie, via Rensaud and Walnut Shade, to Forsythe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 417, to insert, under the head of "Missouri:"

From Williamsburgh to Calwood.
From Lake Creek to Edward Bahner's residence, in Pettis County.
From Salem, via Nova Scotia Iron Works, to West Fork.
From Pittsville to Elm Spring Baptist Church.
From Calwood to Williamsburgh.
From Mounds to Igo.
From Winfield, Missouri, to Batchtown, Illinois.
From Intha, via Igo and Verdella, to Mounds.
From Longwood, via Woodson, to Marshall.
From Gooch's Mill to Boonville.
From Excelsior Springs, Viginti post-office, to Vibbard.

Mr. FERRY. I offer the following amendment to that amendment, to come in after line 431:

From Trenton, via Shanklin, to Alpha.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that two of those routes are the same. We want to strike out line 424, "from Calwood to Williamsburgh," because it is embraced in another route. I wish to strike out also line 425:

From Mounds to Igo.

They are both included in other routes.

Mr. FERRY. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then line 426,

From Winfield, Missouri, to Batchtown, Illinois,

should be stricken out. That has already been established as a route and there is service on it. I thought it was not established, but it was.

Mr. FERRY. It might be that the route between the terminal points might be wanted to run a different way. Would it not be well for it to remain? It does not hurt it even if service is existing.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is daily service already.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator is satisfied, as it is in his own State, I make no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the service was about to be suspended, and I introduced a bill and then referred it to the Department, and received information that the route was established and a daily service existed.

Mr. FERRY. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment as I have indicated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the head of "Nebraska," after line 479, to insert:

From Neligh, in Antelope County, via West Cedar Valley, Clay Ridge, Cumminsville, Clear Creek, Cedar City, late Harrington Post-Office, and little Cedar Valley, to Willow Springs, in Wheeler County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nevada," after line 497, to insert:

From Lida to Montezuma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Hampshire," after line 500, to insert:

From Milan to Errol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 501, to insert:

NEW MEXICO.

From Vermejo to Elkins.

From Colton, via West Parishville, to Potsdam.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 515, under the head of "New York," to insert:

From Altona to Alderbend.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to offer an amendment. In the routes for the State of North Carolina I find a word misspelled in line 520, again in line 521, and again in line 523. I am familiar with the locality, and there is evidently a clerical error. The word "Joy," where it occurs in each of those lines, should be "Ivy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The corrections will be made if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the head of "North Carolina," after line 533, to insert:

From Columbia Factory, Randolph County, via Brown's Store, to Troy.
From Randleman's Factory, Randolph County, to Greensborough.

From Rome to Choppee.
From Irvington, Chesterfield County, to Hornsborough.
From Mayesville to Kingstree.
From Columbia, across Broad River, via Pellwood, (N. O.,) in Lexington County, Countsville, and Pine Ridge, in Lexington County, to Wessinger's store, in Newberry County.
From Mullin's, via D. D. McDuffie's, Elly Hay's, Hazy Swamp, and J. H. Stafford's, to Alfordsville, North Carolina.
From Mullin's, via D. D. McDuffie's and Elly Hay's, to Kentyre's.
From Pickens Court-House to Burroughs' Mill.
From Monterey, via Dry Grove, to Enright's store, Abbeville County.
From Martin's Depot, via Mountville and Milton, to Martin's Depot.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I move to add, after line 696, under the head of "South Carolina:"

From Nine Times, in South Carolina, via McKinney, Cane Creek, Fly Top, and Horse Pasture, to Taxaway, in North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the head of "Tennessee," after line 717, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 745, under the head of "Texas," to strike out "Bremend" and insert "Bremond;" so as to read:

From Bremond, via Beck's Prairie, to Franklin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 747, under the head of "Texas," to strike out "and" and insert "to;" so as to read:

From San Angelo to Colorado City.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 760, under the head "Texas," after the word "Newton," to strike out "to" and insert "via," and after the word "Creek" to insert "to Belgrade;" so as to read:

From Newton, via Caney Creek, to Belgrade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 763, under the head "Texas," to strike out "Pecon" and insert "Pecan;" so as to read:

From Plaquemine to Soulouque.
From Raphael to Soulouque.
From Raphael to Plaquemine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. That completes the amendments of the committee. The striking out of a large part of the bill is simply the result of transpositions.

Mr. BROWN. On page 6, line 132, I find:

From Corcoran's Station to Allen's Cross-Roads.

It should be "from Cochran's Station," instead of "Corcoran's."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4679) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of the cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 25th instant, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 937) to enable the Postmaster-General to delegate authority to sign warrants;

An act (S. No. 977) making an appropriation for the base and pedestal of a monument to the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, United States Navy; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing the Secretary of War to use rations for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed by the Mississippi River.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a petition of Mr. P. W. Norris, for compensation for services rendered and expenses incurred by him as superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park from the 18th of April, 1877, to the 1st of July, 1878.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with a copy of a letter from the superintendent of the United States Naval Observatory, accompanied by a draft of a bill, with estimates for an observation of the transit of Venus, on the 6th of December, 1882.

The matter is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of the Interior of the 23d instant, with accompanying papers, furnished in obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 30th ultimo, calling for certain information in relation to the Malheur Indian reservation in the State of Oregon.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a memorial and papers from the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, embodying resolution and remonstrance against the passage of Senate bill No. 19 to provide for allotment of lands in severalty to Indians upon various reservations, &c., together with report thereon of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommending an amendment to the seventh section thereof, excluding the lands of said Indians.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. BECK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The unfinished business will now be considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese.

Mr. GROVER. I should like to offer an amendment which I propose to submit to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and read for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed at the end of the bill to add:

The words "Chinese laborers" wherever used in this act shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment will lie on the table until that portion of the bill is reached. The Committee on Foreign Relations report an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute. The Secretary will proceed to read the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee.

The Acting Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Whereas in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of twenty years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended; and during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any Chinese laborer to come, or, having so come after the expiration of said sixty days, to remain within the United States.

SEC. 2. That any master of any vessel of whatever nationality, who shall on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States any Chinese laborer from any foreign port or place, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $500 for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought, and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 3. That the two foregoing sections shall not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and who shall produce to such master before going on board such vessel, and shall produce to the collector of the port in the United States at which such vessel shall arrive, the evidence hereinafter in this act required of his being one of the laborers in this section mentioned; nor shall the two foregoing sections apply to the case of any master whose vessel, being bound to a port not within the United States, shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or in stress of weather.

SEC. 4. That in order to the faithful execution of articles one and two of the treaty between the United States and the Empire of China, ratified July 19, 1881, in case any Chinese residing in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, shall depart therefrom, they shall, before such departure, cause themselves to be duly registered at a custom-house in the United States, and produce to the collector of the district at which they shall seek to re-enter the United States the certificate of such registration and the consular certificate in this act provided for.

SEC. 5. That in order to the faithful execution of articles 1 and 2 of the treaty before in this act mentioned, every Chinese of any class or occupation whatever who may be entitled by said treaty and this act to come within the United States, except such as resided in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come within the United States within sixty days next after the passage of this act, shall obtain the permission of the Chinese Government in each case, to be evidenced by a passport issued by said government, which passport shall be in the English language or accompanied by a translation into English, showing such permission, with the name of the permitted person in his proper signature, and which passport shall state the name, title, or official rank, if any, the age, height, and all physical peculiarities, former and present occupation or profession, and place of residence in China of the person to whom the passport is issued, and that such person is entitled by the treaty in this act mentioned to come within the United States. This passport and the identity of the person named in it shall, before such person goes on board any vessel to proceed to the United States, be vised by the indorsement of the diplomatic representative of the United States in the Empire of China, or of the consular representative of the United States at the port or place from which the person named in the passport is about to depart. Such passport shall be prima facie evidence of the facts set forth therein, and shall be produced to the collector of customs of the port in the district in the United States at which the person named therein shall arrive, and afterward produced to the proper authorities of the United States whenever lawfully demanded.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith cause to be prepared and kept at the custom-houses of the United States proper books, in such form as he shall prescribe, for the registration of Chinese who shall be entitled under the provisions of this act to the privilege of entering and residing in the United States. Entry shall be made in such books of the name of every such Chinese, and his proper signature, his place of birth, (giving town or district,) date of birth, last place of residence before coming to the United States, place of residence in the United States, if any, names and residences of his parents, if any, date and place of arrival in the United States, employment or business, height, and physical marks or peculiarities by which he may be identified. Every applicant for registration shall make oath to the facts stated in his registry, which oath shall be recorded in the book of registry. Collectors of customs and their deputies shall have power to administer and certify to all oaths under this act.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the collector of customs to issue to every Chinese entitled to registry, and registered by him, at the time of registration, a certificate, in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, setting forth all the facts contained in such registration, and the data of identification prescribed in section 6 of this act, which certificate shall be signed by the collector of customs of the district, or his deputy, and attested by his seal of office, dated the day of its issue, and upon which shall be written the proper signature of the person registered. A minute of the issuance of such certificate and date of issue shall be made in the book of registry on the margin of the registration. The certificate so issued to a Chinese shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.

SEC. 8. That any person who shall knowingly make a false statement under oath in the registration of any Chinese under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and any person who shall register at more than one custom-house in the United States, or procure more than one certificate of registration, or alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge any such certificate, or utter any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and upon conviction of any offense mentioned in this section the guilty person shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term not more than five years.

SEC. 9. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign place shall, at the same time he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if there be no cargo, then at the time of making a report of the entry of the vessel pursuant to law, in addition to the other matter required to be reported, and before landing, or permitting to land, any Chinese passengers, deliver and report to the collector of customs of the district in which such vessel shall have arrived a separate list of all Chinese passengers taken on board his vessel at any foreign port or place, and all such passengers on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall show the names of such passengers, (and if accredited officers of the Chinese Government traveling on the business of that government, with a note of such fact,) and the names and other particulars, as shown by the respective passports and certificates, as the case may be, of other Chinese passengers; and such list shall be sworn to by the master in the manner required by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo. Any refusal or neglect of the master to comply with the provisions of this section shall incur the same penalties and forfeiture as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo.

SEC. 10. That before any Chinese passengers are landed from any such vessel, the collector, or his deputy, shall proceed to examine such passengers, comparing the passports and certificates, as the case may be, with the list and with the passengers, and no passenger shall be allowed to land in the United States from such vessel in violation of law.

SEC. 11. That every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any district of the United States into which such vessel may enter or in which she may be found.

SEC. 12. That if any consular officer, on examination of the claims and identity of any Chinese proposing to depart to the United States, shall be satisfied that such person seeks so to do in violation of this act, he shall refuse to certify to the right of such person to so depart; and every collector of customs shall refuse to allow any Chinese to enter the United States if he shall discover that such entry is unlawful under this act.

SEC. 13. That any person who shall knowingly bring into, or cause to be brought into, or shall aid or abet the bringing or coming into the United States by land, or who shall land or aid or abet the landing in the United States from any vessel of any Chinese not authorized by law to enter the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each person so brought or aided to come into the United States, or so landed, be fined in the sum of $100, and imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 14. That no Chinese shall be permitted to enter the United States by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate herein required of Chinese seeking to land from a vessel; and any Chinese who shall knowingly come into the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court; and any Chinese unlawfully entering within the United States, or who shall have unlawfully entered the United States in any way, either by land or by water, shall be removed therefrom by the collector of customs of any collection district in which such Chinese may be found, at the cost of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 15. That this act shall not apply to diplomatic and other officers of the Chinese Government traveling upon the business of that government, whose credentials in the usual form shall be taken as equivalent to the passport in this act mentioned and shall exempt them and their body and household servants from the provisions of this act as to other Chinese.

Mr. FARLEY. My colleague [Mr. MILLER, of California] will address the Senate on the bill to-day, but I desire to offer an amendment at this time that it may be printed and lie on the table until such time as the Senate may act upon it. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SECTION —. That hereafter no State court, or court of the United States, shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations has been read for information, and as the bill now stands, with this amendment, it is as reported by the full Committee on Foreign Relations, a unanimous report. The changes made by the amendment have been thought necessary by the committee in order to make the bill conform more strictly to the treaty commonly known as the immigration treaty, which was ratified by the Senate at its special session during the last spring. Many of the changes made by the amendment are of phraseology merely. I believe that the bill as reported does conform in every particular to, and does not contravene in any way, the treaty referred to. I shall now, by the courtesy of the Senate, proceed to submit some remarks upon the bill as reported by the committee.

This measure is not a surprise to the Senate, nor a new revelation to the country. It has been before Congress more than once, if not in the precise form in which it is now presented, in substance the same; and it has passed the ordeal of analytical debate and received the affirmative vote of both Houses. Except for the Executive veto it would have been long ago the law of the land. It is again presented, not only under circumstances as imperative in their demands for its enactment, but with every objection of the veto removed and every argument made against its approval swept away. It is an interesting fact in the history of this measure, that the action which has cleared its way of the impediments which were made the reasons for the veto, was inaugurated and consummated with splendid persistence and energy by the same administration whose Executive interposed the veto against it. Without stopping to inquire into the motive of the Hayes administration in this proceeding, whether its action was in obedience to a conviction that the measure was in itself right and expedient, or to a public sentiment, so strong and universal as to demand the utmost vigor in the diplomacy necessary for the removal of all impediments to its progress, it must be apparent that the result of this diplomatic action has been to add a new phase to the question in respect of the adoption of the measure itself.

In order to fully appreciate this fact it may be proper to indulge in historical reminiscence for a moment. For many years complaints had been made against the introduction into the United States of the peculiar people who come from China, and the Congress, after careful consideration of the subject, so far appreciated the evil complained of as to pass a bill to interdict it.

The executive department had, prior to that action, with diplomatic finesse, approached the imperial throne of China with intent, as was said, to ascertain whether such an interdiction of cooly importation, or immigration so called, into the United States would be regarded as a breach of friendly relations with China, and had been informed by the diplomate to whom the delicate task had been committed that such interdiction would not be favorably regarded by the Chinese Government. Hence, when Congress, with surprising audacity, passed the bill of interdiction the Executive, believing in the truth of the information given him, thought it prudent and expedient to veto the bill, but immediately, in pursuance of authority granted by Congress, he appointed three commissioners to negotiate a treaty by which the consent of China should be given to the interdiction proposed by Congress. These commissioners appeared before the Government of China upon this special mission, and presented the request of the Government of the United States affirmatively, positively, and authoritatively made, and after the usual diplomatic ceremonies, representations, misrepresentations, avowals, and concealments, the treaty was made, the concession granted, and the interdiction agreed upon. This treaty was presented here and ratified by the Senate, with what unanimity Senators know, and which the rules of the Senate forbid me to describe.

The new phase of this question, which we may as well consider in the outset, suggests the spectacle which this nation should present if Congress were to vote this or a similar measure down. A great nation cannot afford inconsistency in action, nor betray a vacillating, staggering, inconstant policy in its intercourse with other nations. No really great people will present themselves before the world through their government as a nation irresolute, fickle, feeble, or petulant; one day eagerly demanding of its neighbor an agreement or concession, which on the next it nervously repudiates or casts aside. Can we make a solemn request of China, through the pomp of an extraordinary embassy and the ceremonial of diplomatic negotiation, and with prudent dispatch exchange ratifications of the treaty granting our request, and within less than half a year after such exchange is made cast aside the concession and, with childish irresolution, ignore the whole proceeding? Can we afford to make such a confession of American imbecility to any oriental power? The adoption of this or some such measure becomes necessary, it seems to me, to the intelligent and consistent execution of a policy adopted by this Government under the sanction of a treaty with another great nation.

If the executive department, the Senate, and the House of Representatives have all understood and appreciated their own action in respect of this measure; if in the negotiation and ratification of the new treaty with China the Executive and the Senate did not act without thought, in blind, inconsiderate recklessness—and we know they did not; if the Congress of the United States in the passage of the fifteen-passenger bill had the faintest conception of what it was doing—and we know it had—then the policy of this Government in respect of so-called Chinese immigration has been authoritatively settled.

This proposition is submitted with the greater confidence because the action I have described was in obedience to and in harmony with a public sentiment which seems to have permeated the whole country. For the evidence of the existence of such a sentiment, it is only necessary to produce the declarations upon this subject of the two great historical parties of the country, deliberately made by their national conventions of 1880. One of these (the Democratic convention) declared that there shall be—

No more Chinese immigration except for travel, education, and foreign commerce, and therein carefully guarded.

The other (the Republican) convention declared that—

Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with Congress, or with the United States and its treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese as an evil of great magnitude, invokes the exercise of these powers to restrain and limit the immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable provisions as will produce that result.

These are the declarations of the two great political parties, in whose ranks are enrolled nearly all the voters of the United States; and whoever voted at the last Presidential election voted for the adoption of the principles and policy expressed by those declarations, whether he voted with the one or the other of the two great parties. Both candidates for the Presidency were pledged to the adoption and execution of the policy of restriction thus declared by their respective parties, and the candidate who was successful at the polls, in his letter of acceptance, not only gave expression to the sentiment of his party and the country, but, with a clearness and conciseness which distinguished all his utterances upon great public questions, gave the reasons for that public sentiment. He said:

The recent movement of the Chinese to our Pacific coast partakes but little of the qualities of an immigration, either in its purposes or results. It is too much like an importation to be welcomed without restriction; too much like an invasion to be looked upon without solicitude. We cannot consent to allow any form of servile labor to be introduced among us under the guise of immigration.

Further on, in speaking of the probable results of the labors of the commission then in China, he said:

Should these efforts fail it will be the duty of Congress to mitigate the evils already felt, and prevent their increase by such restrictions as, without violence or injustice, will place on a sure foundation the peace of our communities and the freedom and dignity of labor.

With these words James A. Garfield—now of blessed memory—submitted his name for the suffrages of his countrymen; and when we remember the fact that by the publication of a clever forgery, which was intended to create a suspicion as to the sincerity of his expressions just quoted, he came near a defeat for the high office of President, the strength and universality of the public opinion he so forcibly expressed becomes all the more manifest.

The political history of this country may be searched in vain for an example of such perfect unanimity of expression by the parties at any time contending for political power upon a question of governmental policy. It would seem that the question of Chinese restriction has passed the stage of argument. To such a policy both political parties are equally pledged, bound, and committed by the most solemn and deliberate acts and declarations, and if these declarations were made in earnest, this or a like measure will pass both Houses nearly unanimously. The vote upon this bill will determine, I think, whether the leaders of the two great political parties of this country were in earnest in making these declarations, or whether they were made merely to deceive the people and to catch votes.

In this connection it is proper also to consider the probable effect of a failure or refusal of Congress to pass this bill upon the introduction of Chinese coolies into the United States in the future. An adverse vote upon such a measure is an invitation to the Chinese to come. It would be interpreted to mean that the Government of the United States had reversed its policy, and is now in favor of the unrestricted importation of Chinese; that it looks with favor upon the Chinese invasion now in progress. It is a fact well known that the hostility to the influx of Chinese upon the Pacific coast displayed by the people of California has operated as a restriction, and has discouraged the importation of Chinese to such a degree that it is probable that there are not a tenth part the number of Chinese in the country there would have been had this determined hostility never been shown. Despite the inhospitality, not to say resistance, of the California people to the Chinese, sometimes while waiting for the action of the General Government difficult to restrain within the bounds of peaceable assertion, they have poured through the Golden Gate in constantly increased numbers during the past year, the total number of arrivals at San Francisco alone during 1881 being 18,561. Nearly two months have elapsed since the 1st of January, and there have arrived, as the newspapers show, about four thousand more.

The defeat of this measure now is a shout of welcome across the Pacific Ocean to a myriad host of these strange people to come and occupy the land, and it is a rebuke to the American citizens, who have so long stood guard upon the western shore of this continent, and who, seeing the danger, have with a fortitude and forbearance most admirable, raised and maintained the only barrier against a stealthy, strategic, but peaceful invasion as destructive in its results and more potent for evil than an invasion by an army with banners. An adverse vote now is to commission under the broad seal of the United States, all the speculators in human labor, all the importers of human muscle, all the traffickers in human flesh, to ply their infamous trade without impediment under the protection of the American flag, and empty the teeming, seething slave pens of China upon the soil of California! I forbear further speculation upon the results likely to flow from such a vote, for it presents pictures to the mind which one would not willingly contemplate.

These considerations which I have presented ought to be, it seems to me, decisive of the action of the Senate upon this measure; and I should regard the argument as closed did I not know that there still remain those who do not consider the question as settled, and who insist upon further inquiry into the reasons for a policy of restriction, as applied to the Chinese. I am not one of those who would place the consideration of consistency or mere appearances above considerations of right or justice; but since no change has taken place in our relations with China, nor in our domestic concerns, which renders a reversal of the action of the Government proper or necessary, I insist that if the measure of restriction was right and good policy when Congress passed the fifteen-passenger bill, and when the late treaty with China was negotiated and ratified, it is right and expedient now.

This measure had its origin in California. It has been pressed with great vigor by the representatives of the Pacific coast in Congress for many years. It has not been urged with wild, vehement declamation by thoughtless men, at the behest of an ignorant, unthinking, prejudiced constituency. It has been supported by incontrovertible fact and passionless reasoning, and enforced by the logic of events. Behind these representatives was an intelligent, conscientious public sentiment—universal in a constituency as honest, generous, intelligent, courageous, and humane as any in the Republic.

It had been said that the advocates of Chinese restriction were to be found only among the vicious, unlettered, foreign element of California society. To show the fact in respect of this contention, the Legislature of California in 1878 provided for a vote of the people upon the question of Chinese immigration (so called) to be had at the general election of 1879. The vote was legally taken, without excitement, and the response was general. When the ballots were counted, there were found to be 883 votes for Chinese immigration and 154,638 against it. A similar vote was taken in Nevada and resulted as follows: 183 votes for Chinese immigration and 17,259 votes against it. It has been said that a count of noses is an ineffectual and illusory method of settling great questions, but this vote of these two States settled the contention intended to be settled; and demonstrated that the people of all others in the United States who know most of the Chinese evil, and who are most competent to judge of the necessity for restriction, are practically unanimous in the support of this measure.

Is it to be supposed that this vote of California was the effect of an hysterical spasm, which had suddenly seized the minds of 154,000 voters, representing the sentiment of 800,000 people? For nearly thirty years this people had witnessed the effects of cooly importation. For more than a quarter of a century these voters had met face to face, considered, weighed, and discussed the great question upon which they were at last called upon, in the most solemn and deliberate manner, to express an opinion. I do not cite this extraordinary vote as a conclusive argument in favor of Chinese restriction; but I present it as an important fact suggestive of argument. It may be that the people who have been brought face to face with the Chinese invasion are all wrong, and that those who have seen nothing of it, who have but heard something of it, are more competent (being disinterested) to judge of its possible, probable, and actual effects, than those who have had twenty or thirty years of actual continuous experience and contact with the Chinese colony in America; and it may be that the Chinese question is to be settled upon considerations other than those practical common sense reasons and principles which form the basis of political science.

It has sometimes happened in dealing with great questions of governmental policy that sentiment, or a sort of emotional inspiration, has seized the minds of those engaged in the solution of great problems, by which they have been lifted up into the ethereal heights or moral abstraction. I trust that while we attempt the path of inquiry in this instance we shall keep our feet firmly upon the earth. This question relates to this planet and the temporal government of some of its inhabitants; it is of the earth earthy; it involves principles of economic, social, and political science, rather than a question of morals; it is a question of national policy, and should be subjected to philosophical analysis. Moreover the question is of to-day. The conditions of the world of mankind at the present moment are those with which we have to deal. If mankind existed now in one grand co-operative society, in one universal union, under one system of laws, in a vast homogeneous brotherhood, serenely beatified, innocent of all selfish aims and unholy desires, with one visible temporal ruler, whose judgments should be justice and whose sway should be eternal, then there would be no propriety in this measure.

But the millennium has not yet begun, and man exists now, as he has existed always—in the economy of Providence—in societies called nations, separated by the peculiarities if not the antipathies of race.

In truth, the history of mankind is for the most part descriptive of racial conflicts and the struggles between nations for existence. By a perfectly natural process these nations have evolved distinct civilizations, as diverse in their characteristics as the races of men from which they have sprung. These may be properly grouped into two grand divisions, the civilization of the East and the civilization of the West. These two great and diverse civilizations have finally met on the American shore of the Pacific Ocean. The history of the human race describes a westward march from the plains of Asia, where man began his career many centuries ago, as steady and persistent as the stars in their courses. Nations have been planted on new soil and afterward supplanted, and the grand progressive movement has been westward, passing every barrier, overcoming every obstacle, until on the Californian shore of the Pacific the man of the West has met the man of the Orient. Mankind has made the circuit of the globe. The great consummation has been reached, the earth has been girdled, the grand march is ended. It is the achievement of all the ages, and its fulfillment marks the most important epoch in the history of man.

Mr. Seward, in speaking of this event, here in the Senate once said:

Certainly no mere human event of equal dignity and importance has ever occurred on the earth.

The two civilizations which have here met are of diverse elements and character, both the result of evolution under different conditions, radically antagonistic, and as impossible of amalgamation as are the two great races who have produced them. The attempt to merge them must result, as both reason and experience teaches, in the displacement of one or the other. Like the mixing of oil and water, neither will absorb the other. The Chinese have been established on the Pacific coast for more than a quarter of a century, and have displayed every phase and characteristic of their ancient civilization, all this time under the pressure of American laws and the example of American methods, brought into direct contact with western civilization and subjected to the powerful influence of modern thought and Christian teaching; and they have remained as fixed in their habits, methods, and modes of life as if they had all this time lived in the Mountains of the Moon. Not the slightest impression has been made upon them or the peculiar civilization which they brought with them. Their modes of life remain the same, which they and their ancestors have pursued for fifty centuries in their fierce struggle for existence. They have been unable or unwilling to change the habits and character which have been forced upon them and ground into them by necessity and a heredity as old as the records of man. Nor does our experience with the Chinese differ in this respect from that of other nations who have admitted them.

It is a fact of history that wherever the Chinese have gone they have always taken their habits, methods, and civilization with them; and history fails to record a single example in which they have ever lost them. They remain Chinese always and everywhere; changeless, fixed, and unalterable. In this respect they differ from all other peoples who have come to our shores. The men of every other race or nation who go abroad, sooner or later, adopt the civilization of the people by whom they are surrounded, and assimilate with or are absorbed in the mass of humanity with which they come in constant contact. The Chinese are alone perfectly unimpressible, and even their offspring born on American soil and who have grown up surrounded by American influences are Chinese in every characteristic of mind, feature, form, habit, and method, precisely the same as their fathers and their ancestors in China. We have found that no impression has been or can be made upon the civilization which confronts ours on the Pacific coast. An "irrepressible conflict" is now upon us in full force, and those who do not see it in progress are not so wise as the men who saw the approach of that other "irrepressible conflict" which shook the very foundations of American empire upon this continent.

If we continue to permit the introduction of this strange people, with their peculiar civilization, until they form a considerable part of our population, what is to be the effect upon the American people and Anglo-Saxon civilization? Can these two civilizations endure side by side as two distinct and hostile forces? Can these two forces abide in such close relation without conflict? Is American civilization as unimpressible as Chinese civilization? When the end comes for one or the other, which will be found to have survived? Can they meet half way, and so merge in a mongrel race, half Chinese and half Caucasian, as to produce a civilization half pagan, half Christian, semi-oriental, altogether mixed and very bad?

I insist that these questions are practical, and must have answers. We have already seen in California that the American people are far more impressible than the stoical Chinese, and the influence of Chinese methods and practices upon the social economy and moral condition of our people is plainly visible. The presence of the Chinese has produced a labor system which is unique; at least different from that of any other part of the United States. This is seen in the wandering, unsettled habits of white farm laborers, who, forced into competition with the Chinese, have been compelled to adopt their nomadic habit. So that the white farm laborer in California has no home in the family he serves, as in these Eastern States, but he is a "blanket man," who works in the fields only during the planting and harvest seasons, roaming the remainder of the year in search of other employment, his shelter the straw stack, and his food anything he can get. Under this system the great wheat growers carry on immense operations without the necessity of employing continuous labor, and the result is, large farming, to the exclusion of small American homes.

The new element in American society called the "hoodlum" is the result of Chinese competition in the manufacturing districts in California, by which young people of both sexes are driven to idleness in the streets. Strange and incurable maladies, loathsome and infectious diseases have been introduced which no medical skill can circumscribe or extirpate, and the stupefying, destructive opium habit is steadily increasing among our people. These and many other evidences of the demoralizing influence of Chinese civilization are open to the dullest observation. It is said, however, that the Chinese do not come in sufficient numbers nor remain long enough in the country to disturb the equilibrium of American society, or threaten a change in American institutions or the adulteration of our civilization. Individual Chinese come and go. As a people they remain. The number of Chinese in the United States is increasing constantly from year to year, as steadily as the steamships come and go.

It is a fact of history that the Chinese have never abandoned any region wherein they have ever established themselves as they have on the Pacific coast. They have never more than temporarily quitted any soil upon which they have ever been planted. Regarded by superficial observers as the most inert and pusillanimous of all peoples, they are on the contrary the most successful conquerors the world has ever known, because they have held all they have ever conquered, and conquered every territory they have ever invaded. And not only so; whenever China has been invaded, the invaders have been absorbed and finally conquered. To the central kingdom China has added one by one, by her peculiar methods of conquest, and still holds, the vast countries of Mongolia, Mancoohria, Thibet, and Eastern Turkistan, and now by a peaceful invasion she threatens to entirely overwhelm Siam and Formosa. The complete conquest of the Hawaiian Islands by the same insidious method is assured within ten years, unless vigorous measures are applied to prevent it.

As invaders the Chinese are the most persistent, subtle, and successful. They overran the Philippine Islands three centuries ago, and despite adverse laws, indignities, cruelties, and horrible massacres, these stubborn invaders have never been more than temporarily checked. The first resistance to the Chinese on those islands culminated in the slaughter of twenty thousand of them, nearly the whole Chinese population, but within thirty years they again numbered over thirty thousand. Another slaughter then ensued in which twenty-two thousand Chinese were killed, but the undaunted survivors remained and were joined by thousands of their countrymen until 1710, when all were expelled and commerce between the islands and China was prohibited. All this has not availed against Chinese persistence; there are ninety thousand Chinese now in Manilla alone.

Confronted, as we are on the Pacific, with our hundred and fifty millions of people, who have furnished such an historical example as this, the ocean barrier almost overcome by modern science in ship building; the invasion already in progress; forcible resistance upon sea or land forbidden to us; the remedy of State legislation denied to us; the invaders aided by the enterprise and cupidity of speculators in cheap labor, has not the time for the action of the General Government come? That an exodus from the province of Kwang Lung to the United States has not only begun, but has been in steady progress for many years, cannot be denied. Had this hegira been general in all the provinces of China in the same ratio as to population, and the admission of the invaders as untrammeled as it has been in respect of those who have come, and the transit as easy, there would have been already in the United States more than thirteen millions of Chinese, all able-bodied men. These, with families, would represent a population of over sixty millions.

This would have long ago degraded the Pacific States and Territories to the condition of a Chinese province, and made them a howling wilderness of Chinese. Why have they not come? Because of the cost and inadequacy of transportation, and because of the hostility and vehement opposition of the people of California. It was not for want of disposition to come. Had the labor brokers, the speculators in human muscle, dared to import more than have come there were millions of hungry, half-starved Chinese of the northern provinces eager to come. For those who came, openings were found for their labor by their importers before they left China. No risk was taken.

During the late depression in business affairs, which existed for three or four years in California, while thousands of white men and women were walking the streets, begging and pleading for an opportunity to give their honest labor for any wages, the great steamers made their regular arrivals from China, and discharged at the wharves of San Francisco their accustomed cargoes of Chinese, who were conveyed through the city to the distributing dens of the Six Companies, and within three or four days after arrival every Chinaman was in his place at work, and the white people unemployed still went about the streets. This continued until the white laboring men rose in their desperation and threatened the existence of the Chinese colony, when the influx was temporarily checked; but now, since business has revived and the pressure is removed, the Chinese come in vastly increased numbers, the excess of arrivals over departures averaging about one thousand per month at San Francisco alone. The importers of Chinese find no difficulty in securing openings for their cargoes now, and when transportation from California to the Eastern States is cheapened, as it soon will be, they will extend their operations into the Middle and Eastern States, unless prevented by law, for wherever there is a white man or woman at work for wages, whether at the shoe bench, in the factory, or on the farm, there is an opening for a Chinaman. No matter how low the wages may be, the Chinaman can afford to work for still lower wages, and if the competition is free, he will take the white man's place.

At this point we are met by the query from a certain class of political economists, "What of it? Suppose the Chinese work for lower wages than white men, is it not advantageous to the country to employ them?" The first answer to such question is, that by this process white men are supplanted by Chinese. It is a substitution of Chinese and their civilization for white men and Anglo-Saxon civilization. This involves considerations higher than mere economic theories. If the Chinese are as desirable as citizens, if they are in all the essential elements of manhood the peers or the superiors of the Caucasian; if they will protect American interests, foster American institutions, and become the patriotic defenders of republican government; if their civilization does not antagonize ours nor contaminate it; if they are free, independent men, fit for liberty and self-government as European immigrants generally are, then we may begin argument upon the question whether it is better or worse, wise or unwise, to permit white men, American citizens, or men of kindred races, to be supplanted and the Chinese to be substituted in their places. Until all this and more can be shown the advocates of Chinese importation or immigration have no base upon which to even begin to build argument.

But in saying this I would not be understood as seeking to avoid the economic question in respect of the relation of cheap labor to the production of national wealth. Far from it. It would be an easy task to show, as I believe, that the prevalence of cheap labor or low wages, instead of being the cause of the wealth or prosperity of a people existing under free government, is the indubitable evidence of national poverty and decay. Cheap labor is not a cause of any public good, but an effect of a vicious economic system. It is necessary to a perception of the truth, in the investigation of such questions, to consider the principles of that higher political economy which not only elucidates the laws which govern the production and distribution of wealth, but subjects the elements and causes of national prosperity or adversity to searching philosophical analysis, and exhibits clearly to view whatever constitutes the real wealth of a nation. Temporarily, and under peculiar conditions, cheap labor might be an advantage, but when we consider our condition and are confronted by the fact that the introduction into our country of an alien race of men who perform the cheap labor operates as a displacement of the natives of the soil, man for man, and substitutes a non-assimilative, heterogeneous people utterly unfit for and incapable of free or self-government, the question assumes proportions which are not to be measured by the application of mere economic theories.

To those who have not studied the history of race conflicts, nor witnessed the social and industrial phenomena now open to view in the Pacific States, it may seem strange and improbable that the apparently insignificant, dwarfed, leathery little man of the Orient should, in the peaceful contest for survival, drive the Anglo-Saxon from the field. This was at first thought impossible in California, and it was not until it became apparent that the Chinese were actually substituting themselves for white men, as the occupants of the Pacific coast, that the fearless, confident, generous Californian believed it possible. How, by what process and method, this can be and has been done, has been illustrated by essayists and publicists, in writings and speeches which would fill many volumes, until there is, perhaps, nothing new to be said upon the subject. I would call attention to the very able pamphlet of Professor Whitney, recently published; to the strong article of Mr. Dee, published in the North American Review in 1878; to the report made to the Senate of California in 1877; to the several speeches heretofore made in Congress by the representatives of the Pacific coast, and to the report of the committee of Congress, of which Senator Morton was a member, as some of the more prominent of these essays, writings, and speeches.

In the discussion of this subject numerous facts are invoked, with their complex relations in respect of the political, social, and industrial conditions of the two races here brought in contact. In order to form a true conception of the present capabilities, characteristics, purposes, and tendencies of the Chinese, a careful study of their history is necessary. Nor can any perception of the future relations which those people shall sustain toward our people be formed without a knowledge of the present condition of their race, their civilization, government, and laws. One may well despair of giving this subject the treatment its importance demands, in the time usually allotted to a speech in the Senate; for the history of China is the history of a people who comprise one-third of the human race, and it extends so far into the remote past that the student of its mysteries can in a lifetime do but little more than read the title pages of its ponderous volumes. It is the history of a people whose form of government, institutions, and civilization have endured without change through forty centuries or more, and survived the rise and fall, the death and decay of the mightiest nations and empires ever established on the earth.

Alone in its busy solitude this nation has wrought and struggled, never until lately looking up or out upon the world to note the triumphs or failures of contending nationalities. These are the only people who have been contented to be alone. They have never sought to teach nor desired to be taught. They have enacted their long, doleful drama of life, with its numberless tragedies, upon a stage all their own, and with out an audience. From the days when the far-off mysterious Cathay was the wonder-land of all the world beside down the centuries until now the spirit of seclusion, the habit of isolation, has ruled the Chinese people. Their written language is forty-two hundred years old, but their history, as written upon the physical face of their country, is far older. The deposits within the dikes of the Hoang Ho, if made in about the same ratio as the deposits of the Nile, show that the construction of those dikes was begun more than nine thousand years ago.

For probably one hundred centuries those people have been cultivators of the soil. Their written history discloses no change in their system of cultivation, nor in any of their methods for the production of the means of subsistence. Human labor has never been raised above the standard of mere brute energy in the cultivation of the soil. Men and women perform the work of beasts, because their labor is cheaper than the brute labor. The subsistence of one beast costs in China more than the subsistence of five men, and this shuts out the brute from the domestic economy of the Chinese. Their civilization culminated before western civilization began, and has no element of progress in it. The literature, art, science, or religion of western nations has made no impression upon the Chinese. They have remained the same through all the changes of the world, and they are now a people as different from all other peoples in their characteristics, habits, methods, and physical appearance as if they were the inhabitants of another planet.

The Government of China has always been imperial in form and in practice a corrupt despotism. The gulf which lies between the rulers and the common people is wider and deeper and darker than exists in any other land. The rulers have grown richer and richer, and the people poorer and poorer, until the normal condition of the lower orders is that of the most degrading, pinching poverty; and so has it been for many centuries. To them life is a monotonous agony. Men and women are sold into slavery, and go into a bondage, from which there is no escape except by death, without emotion or regret. So low is the estimate upon human life, and such is the ferocity of Chinese government, that men are beaten to death by the bamboo for trivial offenses.

It is said that in some of the provinces more female infants are exposed or murdered by their parents than are named; and this without danger of punishment. The great question in China for thousands of years has been the question of subsistence. The Chinese are a people who have increased and kept up their numbers constantly to the limit of subsistence without the interposition of any intelligent restraint. Civil wars, famine, pestilence, infanticide, and emigration have from time to time served to relieve the pressure of human life upon the means of subsistence, but as soon as the pressure has been relieved, by these or any other means, the measure of increase has again been filled to the utmost limit, so that China has been an overpopulated country for thousands of years. In this persistent dreary struggle for existence the law of the "survival of the fittest" has had full play, and from the process of induration which has been so long at work a race of men has resulted whose vital organism is adapted to the smallest needs of human life, with a capacity for physical endurance equal to that of the most stalwart races.

During the thousands of years of training which this race of men has undergone, in which they have been accustomed to incessant toil and insufficient food, the individuals who were too weak to endure the strain have fallen out, and none but the "fittest" have survived to become the progenitors of their race. The laborers of China are therefore men, who by long training and a heredity which is stamped upon them and ground into them through centuries of time, have become machine-like in every physical characteristic. They are of obtuse nerve, but little affected by heat or cold, wiry, sinewy, with muscles of iron; they are automatic engines of flesh and blood; they are patient, stolid, unemotional, and persistent, with such a marvelous frame and digestive apparatus that they can dispense with the comforts of shelter and subsist on the refuse of other men, and grow fat on less than half the food necessary to sustain life in the Anglo-Saxon. We have found that these men bring with them these wonderful qualities, and never lose them through all the changes of climate and food which they meet in this country; and they never change or abandon their habits or methods no matter what their surroundings may be. They herd together like beasts in places where white men could not live; they clothe themselves in the cheapest raiment as they have always done in China, and subsist on cheap food imported for their use and the refuse of our markets.

No matter how low the wages of the white man are fixed, the Chinese underbid him. Competition with such a machine by the free white man is impossible. To compete with the Chinese the white man must become such a man as the Chinaman is. He must work as the Chinaman works, subsist on as cheap food, inure himself to the same disgusting and parsimonious diet. He must adopt the packing habit, in which the shelter and space now required for one will be sufficient for ten; the unmarried must not marry, and those who have wives or children must give up home and resort to the hovel. The school-house door can no longer swing open to admit the American laborer's child, for under this grinding competition every human being out of puling infancy must work for the means of subsistence. To compete with the Chinese, American civilization must change; all the comforts, the pleasing amusements, the sweet pleasures of existence, all that makes life worth living to those who work with their hands, must be surrendered; nothing left but toil—grinding, incessant, wearisome toil; nothing but a career of misery, want, self-denial, ignorance, and dumb slavery is open for the American laborer. To this low level will Chinese competition bring the laboring people of the United States, down to the degradation, the demoralization, the unhappy, miserable condition of the Chinese cooly. If the Chinese could be lifted up to the level of the free American, to the adoption and enjoyment of American civilization, the case would be better; but this cannot be done.

Forty centuries of Chinese life has made the Chinaman what he is. An eternity of years cannot make him such a man as the Anglo-Saxon. It is as impossible to bring the Chinaman up to the American standard as it is cruel and wicked to risk, by any experiment, the degradation of the American laborer to the Chinese standard. The experiment now being tried in California is to subject American free labor to competition with Chinese servile labor, and so far as it has gone, it has put in progress the displacement of American laborers, and the substitution of Chinese for white men. This process will continue if permitted until the white laborer is driven out into other fields, or until those who remain in the contest come down to the Chinese level.

As illustrative of this process, I will submit the following undeniable facts. In San Francisco the Chinese began some fifteen years ago to enter the manufacturing establishments as operatives, then operated entirely by white people. They were dexterous and apt, and the work of displacement of the whites went steadily on. Wages were cut down, and still the Chinese underbid the white man, and in some of the factories the whole number of white employés were supplanted. The more intelligent Chinese, who had learned the art and business in which they had been employed, began a co-operative system of Chinese manufacture, and numerous factories sprung up, carried on wholly by Chinese in competition with their old employers. Chinese proprietors imported laborers from China, who came under contracts for a term of years, as they all come, and worked out their passage money at the wages paid in China, three or four dollars per month. For example, I will cite the manufacture of boots and shoes. The number of boot and shoe factories now in San Francisco is 60. The number carried on by white proprietors is 12. The number carried on by Chinese is 48. The number of slipper factories is 50; all carried on by Chinese. The number of Chinese employed in making boots, shoes, &c., is 5,700. Number of white people so employed, is 1,100.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator if he has one statistical fact, in connection with the very interesting one which he has stated, that the wages of the white persons employed in those factories where they still employ white persons range at a rate higher or lower than the corresponding wages of Chinese in the same employment?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I cannot give the ratio.

Mr. HOAR. Of course I ought not to intrude in the Senator's argument, but the reason of my putting the question was that I have been furnished with some statistics to show that in the occupations where Chinese labor was employed it is still true that the wages of the white employés are much larger than the corresponding wages of the Chinese.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That may be. That would be the case in all branches of labor. You must remember that wages were very much higher. The point is that wages have been constantly going down and are still on the downward grade. Probably they may go down lower. I fancy that the Chinese can come in competition with your laborers of the East and bring wages down to one-quarter what they are in Massachusetts.

The statistics of the manufacture of cigars in San Francisco are still more suggestive. This business was formerly carried on exclusively by white people, many hundreds finding steady and lucrative employment in that trade. I have here the certified statement from the office of the collector of internal revenue at San Francisco, showing the number of white people and Chinese, relatively, employed on the 1st of November last in the manufacture of cigars. The statement is as follows:

Number of white men employed	493
Number of white women employed	170
Total whites	663
Number of Chinese employed	5,182

The facts of this statement were carefully ascertained by three deputy collectors. The San Francisco Assembly of Trades certify that there are 8,265 Chinese employed in laundries. It is a well-known fact that white women who formerly did this work have been quite driven out of that employment. The same authority certifies that the number of Chinese now employed in the manufacture of clothing in San Francisco is 7,510, and the number of whites so employed is 1,000. In many industries the Chinese have entirely supplanted the white laborers, and thousands of our white people have quit California and sought immunity from this grinding competition in other and better-favored regions.

It is a necessity of the civilization of the white people of the Pacific, as it is here, that labor shall have a reward sufficient for the comfortable maintenance of families, the education of children, the cultivation of refinement in manners and morals, the sustenance of the physical organism by sufficient nutrition, and to enable the laborer to have that degree of leisure necessary for intellectual expansion. The Chinese in California generally have no families to support or educate; their wants are few and the requirements of their civilization demand but a meager outlay. The contest is unequal. It ought not to be permitted to proceed. Under such conditions as exist in California the purchasers of labor, the rich and independent employers, are aggrandized, and the laboring class is impoverished and degraded. The rich grow richer and the poor grow poorer.

If this system is extended into the States of the East, (and there are Chinese in all the States now but two,) the same result will follow, for the Chinese will thrive just as well in the older States as in the new. The margin between the rate of wages to which the Chinese have been accustomed, or upon which they can flourish, and the rates which your laboring people of the Eastern States receive, or must have to live, is wide enough to tempt millions of these orientals into so rich and promising a field. I here invoke the application of the protective principle for the benefit of American labor on the Pacific coast, and for the ultimate benefit of American labor in all the States. You protect American industry here in these States by high tariffs upon the importation of foreign manufactures. This you do to protect the American laborer from competition with what you call the cheap pauper labor of other lands. In California our white laborers are forced into competition with a cheaper labor than the "pauper labor of Europe," and that, too, with the worse than "pauper" laborer himself on the ground. You tax the product of European cheap labor for the protection of the American laborer from low wages. In California the cheapest laborer of all the world is admitted free to compete with our American laborers directly. The Chinese can thrive in America on lower wages than will afford the "pauper" laborers anywhere in Europe a more frugal subsistence. And in this connection I venture to say, and I hope without offense, that if a speech shall be made in the Senate in opposition to Chinese restriction, I shall not be surprised if it be made by a protectionist. Not perhaps by a protectionist who advocates high tariff primarily for the protection of American laborers from low wages, but for the protection of what he calls "American industry;" which is a convenient and comprehensive phrase. It includes and is intended to be descriptive of other interests than those of labor; interests which a certain class of political economists in this country regard as paramount to all others in the adjustment of tariff laws.

The average American manufacturer is interested generally in two things, namely, the highest protective tariff, and the cheapest labor. If he can secure these all else desirable speedily follows. The first he has secured; the second he can readily obtain through unrestricted Chinese immigration, if this measure shall be defeated. It is not difficult to perceive the origin of that political economy which suggests high protective tariffs, and at the same time advocates the admission of servile laborers into the country without limit. It means high prices for the products of manufacture, and low prices for the labor which produces them; the aggrandizement of capital and the debasement of labor; greater wealth for the wealthy and greater poverty for the poor. But it has been said that all the arguments we make against the admission of the Chinese cooly into direct competition with our free American laborer apply with equal force to the immigrants who come from Europe, and that most of the objections we make against the Chinese apply to immigrants from beyond the Atlantic, particularly the Irish. Now, if this were true it would furnish no argument in favor of the introduction of Chinese. It might be an argument against the European immigrants, but it is not true.

European immigrants are men of the like mental and physical characteristics of the American laborer. They are of the same or a kindred race, trained under a like civilization, with similar aspirations, hopes, and tendencies. Their wants and necessities are the same, and they conform their habits, methods, and manners to those of the people by whom they are surrounded. The requirements of their social condition expand with their improving fortunes. They assimilate with American society and become a part of the American people. The competition in the field of labor between such men and the American is a contest between equals. While the European immigrant augments production he becomes a liberal consumer. The Chinaman clothes himself in cheap imported fabrics, and his principal article of food is imported rice. The European immigrants build homes, rear families, and surround themselves with the luxuries and refinements of modern life. The Chinese take shelter in the hovel, or mass themselves in houses like swine in the sty, and send their wages to China. The accumulations of the European immigrants remain in the country and swell the aggregate wealth of the nation. Moreover, they are free, independent men, who control their own labor and their own destiny. They soon become the earnest defenders of free institutions and republican government. They unite their fortunes with ours, enjoy our prosperity, and brave our disasters. They stand shoulder to shoulder with us in battle for the defense of the Republic and the maintenance of the national honor.

The Chinese come as a servile people and are held while in the country in a bondage of fear by the "Six Companies," by whose will their labor is controlled and directed. The manner of their coming and the character of this bondage is best explained by the correspondence of Mr. Bailey, consul at Hong-Kong, with the State Department, under date of April 25, 1871. He says:

The subject of Chinese emigration from this port to the United States has claimed my careful thought and patient investigation for the last four months, with a view to get at the facts, and to understand it in its surroundings and bearings. The whole subject is an anomaly. Rules that will do elsewhere in the world, when applied in considering questions of immigration, have no application to Chinese immigration to the United States. Immigrants to America from other parts of the world go of their own volition, free and voluntary. Emigration from China to all parts of the world is an organized business or trade, in which men of large capital and hongs of great wealth engage as a regular traffic, by which men are bought and sold for so much per head, precisely as a piece of merchandise is handled, at its market value. The poor laborer of Europe applies his own scanty means to get to the land of promise, or is assisted by his friends, charitable societies, or benevolent institutions to reach a place where he hopes to have his toil properly requited, where his labor will inure to his own benefit. The cooly of China is bought by the rich trader to serve his purchaser at low wages for a series of years in a foreign country, under contract for the faithful performance of which in many instances he gives a mortgage on his wife and children, with a stipulation that at the end of his term of service he is to be brought back to China by his purchaser. This contract is sold by the dealer through his agents in the United States and elsewhere at a large advance, and is a source of great profit to the capitalists who have the means to buy and sell large numbers of men. This contract in the United States is no doubt null and void, but nevertheless the cooly will comply strictly with all its terms, a copy of which in Chinese characters is always in his possession, and this he will do because his purchaser holds his household lares in the land to which he always hopes and expects to return in pledge for the faithful performance of his bonds. The central idea of a Chinaman's religion, if he has any religion at all, is that of the worship of the tombs of his ancestors. The superstitions of Fung-Shuay dominate him wherever he may be in the world. The subtile mysticisms of China, so strangely governing all its people in their social, political, and quasi religious life, are as a hook in his nose, by which his purchaser controls him at all times and in all places; and thus this relation of master and quasi slave, no matter how many miles apart, is welded by the mystical links of religious superstition, family ties, and rights of ancestral tombs, which control and regulate the reciprocal duties of trader and cooly in the home-land.

The means of obtaining coolies are as various as the ingenuity of man can devise, and are as corrupt as the incentive to large gains can stimulate and invent. Men and boys are decoyed by all sorts of tricks, opiates, and illusory promises into the haunts of the traders. Once in the clutches of these men-dealers, by a system of treachery and terrorism connived at by the local Chinese authorities, whose chief business in life is to "squeeze" the people, the stupefied cooly is overawed into making a contract under such Chinese influences and surroundings as to give it a sacredness of character nowhere else known in the world. From that moment he is the mere tool of the rich dealer wherever he may go. It is difficult for persons accustomed to western civilization to understand the depth and extent of this relationship; but Chinese civilization is unique, perhaps opaque, and cannot be measured by that of any other.

This is the testimony of many writers and travelers in China, and is evidenced very fully in the report made to Congress by the joint Congressional committee and also in the report made in the California Senate in 1877. Such are the Chinese who are called "immigrants."

We of the Pacific coast have tried all varieties of men as "immigrants," and our experience suggests a warm and generous welcome to our shore of the German, the Irishman, the Scandinavian, the Italian, and all who come from beyond the Atlantic; but of Chinese we have enough, and would be glad to exchange those we have for any white people under the sun. It has been urged, however, that we have no right to discriminate against the people of any race or nation who desire to come to the United States, and that it has been the uniform policy of our Government to welcome the men of all races and nations to our shores. To this I answer, that, in respect of the Chinese, our Government has agreed with China that we may discriminate as against a certain class of her people. That settles the question of right as between the United States and China. I know that it has been said that the right of expatriation, as interpreted by certain American publicists, carries with it the right of settlement, by those who expatriate themselves, in any country and among any people they may choose, without the consent of the nation into whose territory they may go. By this new theory the right of expatriation is exalted into a higher law than treaties or constitutions. I do not regard it as necessary or profitable to enter into a discussion of this doctrine at this time.

The right and power of a nation to protect itself against the introduction of any class of immigrants or invaders whom it may regard as either dangerous to its peace and happiness or undesirable from any other cause has not been questioned by any jurist or writer on international law of eminence, or who is recognized as authority. Self-preservation is the foundation principle of the constitution of nations. The law of self-preservation, if not the higher law, antedates all other human laws, and is instinctively recognized by all peoples as a fundamental law of national life. A people deprived of the power to exercise the right of self-preservation cannot be said to be a nation. Now, as to the policy of this Government in respect of immigration. Is it true that the invitation has been general without discrimination as to the varieties of men who have been encouraged to come? The naturalization laws of a nation illustrate its policy upon the subject of immigration. When these are liberal, immigration is encouraged; when they are stringent and obstructive, immigration is discouraged and not desired.

In the days of Rome's greatest power, no foreigner could be naturalized unless he had rendered eminent service to the Roman state, and then only by a vote of the senate. In the prosperous days of the Athenian republic no foreigner could become a citizen of Athens except by a vote of the electors twice had, and then only in case the applicant received over 6,000 votes at the second election. After destructive wars had depleted the armies of both these nations, and immigrants were desired to re-enforce their ranks, the rigor of the naturalization laws was relaxed and citizens were made of foreigners almost without limit. So in all countries; the encouragement given to immigration is measured by the state of the naturalization laws. The Chinese and other oriental colored people have never been encouraged to come by our naturalization laws. They never could upon any conditions become citizens of the United States under our laws. The policy has therefore been a policy of discrimination as practiced by our Government, and not only so, but a discrimination against particular races. Was it without reason? There was and is not only this race discrimination against the Chinese in our naturalization laws, but also in the treaty with China known as the Burlingame treaty, which contains an express provision against the naturalization of Chinese in the United States. This was and is notice to all Chinese that they would not and will not be admitted upon the terms accorded to immigrants from European countries.

In dealing with any other people such a notice would have discouraged immigration. But why this discrimination as against the Chinese? It was because they are unfit for the responsibilities, duties, and privileges of American citizenship. This is the declaration of your naturalization laws. That they never will become fit for American citizenship is proven by the experience of thirty years on the Pacific coast. What, then, is to be the status of a race of men who form a considerable part of the population of a State and are unfit for and not admitted to citizenship? The presence in this country of a great number of people of an alien race, who do not and cannot assimilate with our people, and who are so hardened and fixed in their habits and characteristics, so inflexible in all their methods of life, and who practice a civilization so utterly antagonistic to ours that they are unfit to exercise the rights of citizenship, must of necessity always be a disturbing element. If they should be admitted to citizenship, then there would be a new element introduced into the governing power of this nation, which would be the most venal, irresponsible, ignorant, and vicious of all the bad elements which have been infused into the body-politic—an element disloyal to American intitutions, inimical to republican liberty, scornful of American civilization, not fit for self-government and unfit to participate in the government of others—a people destitute of conscience or the moral sense. In every State wherein the Chinese might secure domicile there would be a mass of voters, sufficiently numerous probably to hold the balance of power in elections, who would be for sale to the best bidder. They would esteem the suffrage only for the money they could make out of it.

I need only suggest such a condition of affairs to convince any thoughtful man that no greater evil could come upon the Republic than this. And if the Chinese are permitted to come and reside in the United States; to become denizens of our cities and the occupants of our lands; if by any action of Congress they are invited to come and form a part of this nation, on what grounds will American citizenship be denied them? If they are free men and are to remain free, and are fit to dwell among our people, will not the sentiment which admits them demand for them all the rights of citizenship? We have a notable example before us. The same reasons which induced the enfranchisement of the negro would be sooner or later urged with the same effect for the enfranchisement of the Chinese. But whether they remain pariahs or are made citizens they add a new peril to free government. In California the number of men capable of bearing arms or entering an army is about equally divided between the Chinese and the white people. If this condition existed in the other Northern States of the Union is it to be imagined that no race conflicts would ensue? Could free republican government be long maintained without such conflicts? Under such conditions, to admit the Chinese to citizenship would be to begin the wreck of the Republic. Elections would become a series of tragedies. The end of all would be a spectacle so inexpressibly sad, so awful and terrible, as to at once grieve and horrify the lovers of liberty and of peace and of justice throughout the world.

There has sometimes appeared in the discussion of this subject a hazy sort of theory that it is unjust or illiberal to discriminate against any race or variety of men who seek residence in this country. Now, in this time, when more than half the world of men are turning their eyes to this virgin land of plenty, and are moving in upon us by millions, I believe that the national safety demands an intelligent discrimination, and that it is not only just and wise but humane to keep the bad sorts out. The time for a judicious sifting process has come, and I would sift out the Chinese laborers first; not alone because they are laborers, but because they are unfit, always were and always will be unfit, for American citizenship. If the domain of this nation were large enough to furnish homes for all the myriad peoples who desire to come, and for their posterity, and our system of government were so flexible as to fit and cover all possible conditions, and strong enough to meet all possible contingencies; if the power of assimilation were sufficient to digest and incorporate all races and sorts of men into one homogeneous people, then objection might be made against any discrimination in respect of the varieties of men who are crowding in upon us from the east and from the west. But this is not so. We are already a nation of fifty millions. The country is now stocked with an intelligent, vigorous, and civilized people, in more than necessary or desirable variety as to races. There is no need of immigration for the settlement or development of the country.

Malthus cites the people of the United States as people who, by natural increase alone, are capable of doubling their population every twenty-five years. Such a people, under favorable conditions as to space, food, and shelter, all writers upon this subject, such as Adam Smith, Voltaire, Macaulay, Buckle, agree will double their numbers at the most every thirty years. Our census reports are suggestive of thought in this connection. Making all due allowance for war, pestilence, and other extraordinary causes of destruction to human life, the population of the United States should be in 1915 not less than one hundred millions, and in 1950, two hundred millions, without the aid of immigration, and so on in the same ratio until the increase of human life in this country should be limited only by the means of subsistence. Within one hundred years, which ought not to be regarded as a very long period in the life of a nation, the question of subsistence will be the "burning question" of the time, even though not another immigrant should ever land upon our shores. Why not, then, make selection among the millions who are coming to us and receive the best, those who are most easily assimilated, and who become homogeneous with our people? Why not discriminate? Why aid in the increase and distribution over the surface of our domain of a degraded and inferior race, and the progenitors of an inferior sort of men, to the exclusion of the highly civilized, progressive man of our own race? It is not numbers that are needed; quality is of more importance than quantity. One complete man, the product of free institutions and a high civilization, is worth more to the world than hundreds of barbarians.

Upon what other theory can we justify the almost complete extermination of the Indian, the original possessor of all these States? I believe that one such man as Washington, or Newton, or Franklin, or Lincoln glorifies the Creator of the world and benefits mankind more than all the Chinese who have lived, and struggled, and died on the banks of the Hoang Ho. But it is said that in order to extend the benefits of republican government and free institutions to other peoples, we must admit to citizenship in this land men of all races and classes without distinction. I believe that the surest way to popularize and extend the blessings of civil liberty, free government, and American institutions is by example. Let us keep pure the blood which circulates through our political system; dignify, ennoble, and exalt our sovereign—the people; preserve our national life from the gangrene of oriental civilization; foster American institutions in their grandeur and purity; continue to educate and develop the intellect and elevate the morals of the nation; in fine, let our civilization be progressive and make free government in the United States a perfect success, and an example will be furnished the world which will light the fires of liberty in every civilized land.

The matter of supreme importance to us and to the cause of liberty everywhere is the preservation and maintenance of free, intelligent, honest, pure, and successful government of the people, by the people in these United States. This demands the highest statesmanship and the most lofty patriotism, and it can never be effected by the degradation of American labor, the debasement of our civilization through the injection into the body-politic of a poisonous, indigestible mass of alien humanity, or the admixture of antagonistic races. If the object were to destroy our political system, to render free government impossible, then it would be rational and consistent to permit the riff-raff of the nations to be dumped into our streets and upon our lands without restraint; to import great hordes of servile laborers, whose competition with the free American voter will break down our social economy by the destruction of the industrial system which sustains it; to give welcome to ignorance, vice, and crime; to substitute the Temple of Joss for the Christian Church, and the worship of Chinese gods instead of the worship of the God of our fathers. These are the means which the enemies of free government might well employ.

When, in the progress of unlimited immigration, this country becomes well filled with Chinese; whose scouts and spies are now in every city and town in all the States giving information to their masters who are conducting this oriental invasion; when our cities are festering with the rot of their civilization; when our towns are filled with alien thieves, and our lanes are trodden by an interminable line of vagabond tramps; when the American laborer, overwhelmed, discouraged, and disgusted, is compelled to either abandon his native land or take refuge in the hovel, too poor to send his children to school; the youth of the masses growing up in ignorance, their young lives crushed by grinding toil for the means of subsistence, what then will be the prospect for the permanence of free government?

History teaches no lesson with greater clearness or persistence than this: that nations once powerful have degenerated and gone into decay, generally, in consequence of, and in proportion to, the admission and incorporation into their bodies-politic of inferior or heterogeneous races; and this we may apply with peculiar fitness to a nation like ours, whose government is a government of the people. Debase the people and you degrade your sovereign. Can it be possible that we who stand here, fresh from a conflict engendered by the effects of that policy, which in the morning of our national career permitted the introduction into this country of an alien and servile race; our memories burdened with the horrors of that long agony of internecine war; our wounds scarcely yet healed; in full view from our windows of the graves of a hundred thousand heroic dead who fell in the struggle; the sad faces of many widows and orphan children reminding us wherever we turn of the anguish and suffering innocent souls have been made to feel; can it be possible, I repeat, that we shall longer permit a like policy to prevail, and tempt heaven or fate to scourge our posterity as we have been scourged for the mistake of our fathers?

To those who believe that there is no danger of any general disturbance of our social economy or political system by the introduction of Chinese upon the Pacific coast, I beg to suggest that the evil is already upon us there; the conflict is in progress, and we ask for the relief which this measure is intended to give for the Pacific coast alone, if in your opinion it is not necessary to save the whole country from the evils of which we complain. We invoke the protection of the National Government from an invasion which we ourselves are not permitted by the Constitution to repel. If the people of California were free to act, you would not be troubled here by the consideration of the Chinese question. They would have settled it long ago, not arbitrarily, nor in a frenzy of passion, but peacefully, humanely, and by law. It must be apparent now that our people believe that our fair State and the whole Pacific coast is in the presence of a great and to you a strange peril; and we further believe that those things which endanger our peace and prosperity in some degree affects the tranquillity of the whole nation.

I make this appeal in behalf of a grand people, generous, loyal, brave, enterprising, and intelligent. They are a part of the great American people; they are your brethren. They went out over the trackless plain, the dreary desert, or else sailed over stormy seas, from New England, from New York, from Ohio, from the great empire of the Northwest, from the sunny South, from every part of every State in this glorious Union of States. There, in the once far off land of California, they have made the conquest of nature. They are laying the foundations of empire there, and they are laying them strong and deep. They are forming and building up American institutions based upon Anglo-Saxon civilization. They have seen and understand that there can be no stability to their institutions and government unless based upon one civilization. Government is the product of civilization. It is evolved from the civilization of the people who ordain it. Free government cannot be maintained permanently in any country in which there exist two diverse and antagonistic civilizations of nearly equal strength. They operate as antagonistic hostile forces, and one or the other must have the ascendency.

If the civilization of a people changes, the government must change to conform to it. In California Chinese civilization in its pure essence appears as a rival to American civilization. It is the product of a people alien in every characteristic to our people, and it has never yet produced and never can evolve any form of government other than an imperial despotism. Free government is incompatible with it, and both cannot exist together. We ask of you to secure to us American Anglo-Saxon civilization without contamination or adulteration with any other. We make our appeal within the spirit of the Constitution of the United States in its highest interpretation. Its framers declared that it was—

Ordained to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

In order to insure general tranquillity, peace and good order must be secured to every part of the country; to provide for the common defense involves the protection of every part; to promote the general welfare the rights and interests of every section must be guarded; to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, our free republican government must be maintained and administered in every portion of our land, and made permanent by keeping pure and uncontaminated the progressive civilization which gives it life and being. If you ask me how we may best "insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare" on the Pacific coast, I answer by passing this bill and enforcing its provisions to the letter. China for the Chinese! California for Americans and those who will become Americans!

If you would "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," there must be some place reserved in which and upon which posterity can exist. What will the blessings of liberty be worth to posterity if you give up the country to the Chinese? If China is to be the breeding ground for peopling this country, what chance of American posterity? We of this age hold this land in trust for our race and kindred. We hold republican government and free institutions in trust for American posterity. That trust ought not to be betrayed. If the Chinese should invade the Pacific coast with arms in their hands, what a magnificent spectacle of martial resistance would be presented to a startled world! The mere intimation of an attempt to make conquest of our western shore by force would rouse the nation to a frenzy of enthusiasm in its defense. For years a peaceful, sly, strategic conquest has been in progress, and American statesmanship has been almost silent, until the people have demanded action.

The land which is being overrun by the oriental invader is the fairest portion of our heritage. It is the land of the vine and the fig tree; the home of the orange, the olive, and the pomegranate. Its winter is a perpetual spring, and its summer is a golden harvest. There the northern pine peacefully sways against the southern palm; the tender azalea and the hardy rose mingle their sweet perfume, and the tropic vine encircles the sturdy oak. Its valleys are rich and glorious with luscious fruits and waving grain, and its lofty

Mountains like giants stand,
To sentinel the enchanted land.

I would see its fertile plains, its sequestered vales, its vine-clad hills, its deep blue canons, its furrowed mountain-sides dotted all over with American homes—the homes of a free, happy people, resonant with the sweet voices of flaxen-haired children, and ringing with the joyous laughter of maidens fair—

Soft as her clime, and sunny as her skies—

like the homes of New England; yet brighter and better far shall be the homes which are to be builded in that wonderland by the sunset sea, the homes of a race from which shall spring

The flower of men,
To serve as model for the mighty world,
And be the fair beginning of a time.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but before making that motion I wish to say that it was my purpose to have submitted some remarks to-day on the subject of the Library. However, at this hour, of course, I will not do so. I will ask the Senator from California, who is so much interested in the pending question, however, to allow it to be laid aside informally, so that I may be entitled to the floor to-morrow at half past one o'clock for the purpose of addressing the Senate on the subject of the Library, and then the discussion of this bill can be resumed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proper way, the Chair would state to the Senator from Indiana, would be for the bill to take its place regularly at half past one to-morrow, and then consent be given at the pleasure of the Senate to lay it aside.

Mr. VOORHEES. I thought I might obtain consent of the Senate now and be entitled to the floor to-morrow at half past one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This measure would lose its place if it be not placed before the Senate at that time.

Mr. HOAR. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will state then that I shall ask unanimous consent to-morrow, at half past one, to lay aside informally and temporarily the special order for the purpose of addressing the Senate on the subject of the Library.

Mr. FARLEY. About what time will the Senator consume?

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall need, perhaps, an hour.

CARDS TO GARFIELD MEMORIAL SERVICES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. No. 4679) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of the cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I can get the attention of the Senate a minute, I will ask the passage of that bill at the request of several members of the House.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress, is hereby authorized to furnish impressions from the engraved card of invitation to the Garfield memorial services made in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at the cost thereof, with 10 per cent. added, to be paid for by persons ordering the same; and orders for the same, and payments therefor, may be made for Senators, Representatives, and Delegates through the office of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, respectively.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is now in substance the law as to all vignettes and engravings in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but it is doubtful whether the plate of the memorial card is properly an engraving of that kind in the language of the law. I ask the Secretary to read the law which I send to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, the head of a Department or bureau, art association, or library, be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish impressions from any portrait or vignette which is now, or may hereafter be, a part of the engraved stock of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at such rates and under such conditions as he may deem necessary to protect the public interests.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Ohio what is the cost?

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it will be a cent apiece; it will be trifling. The engraving is already complete and the stock is on hand; but it is doubtful whether it comes within the language of the existing law. I doubt whether the cost will exceed a cent a copy, and many members of the House desire to have them in considerable numbers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eleven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 28, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last and also of yesterday will be read.

The Journal was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MILLS. Upon the vote on Saturday last upon the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department the RECORD shows that I did not vote. On a previous vote it is shown that I was paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.] The same statement ought to have been made in connection with the subsequent vote, or it should have been stated in the first instance that I was paired for the day.

CARDS OF INVITATION TO GARFIELD MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Mr. SKINNER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill, upon which, if there be no objection, I ask immediate action.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of the cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress, is hereby authorized to furnish impressions from the engraved card of invitation to the Garfield memorial service, made in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at the cost thereof with 10 per cent. added, to be paid for by persons ordering the same; and that orders for the same and payment therefor may be made for Senators, Representatives, and Delegates through the office of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, respectively.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4679) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SKINNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CELEBRATION OF DISCOVERY OF MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent to present a memorial from the governor and other prominent officials of the State of Louisiana, and also a concurrent resolution based thereon. I ask that the memorial be read and that the concurrent resolution be now acted on.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the concurrent resolution, and then the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the chambers of commerce, cotton and produce exchanges, and other commercial associations, the historical and literary and scientific societies and municipal governments in the Valley of the Mississippi have invited the Congress of the United States to be represented at the celebration to be held by them in the city of New Orleans on April 9, 1882, of the two hundredth anniversary of the first voyage down the Mississippi River to the sea and the discovery of its mouth by Robert Cavalier de la Salle;

Now, therefore, in order to commemorate an event so memorable alike in the history of our country and of civilization, and to testify on behalf of the people of the whole Union their appreciation of the services of Robert Cavalier de la Salle and their respect for his memory,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a committee of sixteen members, seven from the Senate and nine from the House of Representatives, shall be appointed by the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, to attend the said celebration on April 9, 1882, in the city of New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned represent to your honorable bodies that it is proposed by the historical associations located in the valleys of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and their tributaries that there shall be a commemorative celebration in the city of New Orleans of the two hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi River by Robert Cavalier de la Salle, on the 9th day of April, 1882. (The States to-day bordering on the Mississippi River and its tributaries are Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska, and Minnesota, and they now have an aggregate population of twenty-three millions.) In view of the historic interest of that great event and as a tribute to the memory of one of the most remarkable men and one of the greatest discoverers of any age or country, this celebration is believed to be eminently worthy of national recognition. It is, therefore, prayed that the Congress of the United States shall associate itself therewith by the passage of a joint resolution appointing a committee of both Houses to attend such celebration and by taking such other measures as may be deemed meet and proper.

S. D. McENERY,
Governor, New Orleans, Louisiana.
WILL. A. STRONG,
Secretary of State, New Orleans, Louisiana.
ALLEN JUMEL, Auditor.
A. A. BURKE,
Treasurer, New Orleans.
JOS. A. SHAKSPEARE,
Mayor, New Orleans.
GEO. DELAMORE,
Administrator of Assessments, New Orleans.
JOHN FITZPATRICK,
Administrator of Improvements.
W. E. HUGER,
Administrator of Public Accounts.
B. T. WALSHE,
Administrator of Finance.
P. MEALEY,
Administrator of Police.
WM. FAGAN,
Administrator of Commerce, New Orleans, La.
A. J. GOMILA,
President New Orleans Produce Exchange.
W. M. SMALLWOOD,
Secretary New Orleans Produce Exchange.
T. A. BARTON,
President New Orleans Stock Exchange.
A. A. BRINTMADE,
Secretary New Orleans Stock Exchange.
THOS. L. AIREY,
President New Orleans Cotton Exchange.
HENRY G. HESTER,
Secretary Cotton Exchange.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KASSON. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] would not deem it best to refer a resolution of this importance to a committee before asking the House to act upon it. It proposes to take away from our sessions a very large number of Representatives and Senators; and I think in view of the number to be taken away and the possible effect upon the business of the two Houses, we ought not to act without the report of a committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GIBSON. Before the presentation of this resolution, a great many members of this House were consulted in regard to it, and I supposed it would meet with general concurrence. The simple question is, whether we should accept an invitation extended to this body by the cities in the Valley of the Mississippi, to attend a celebration by them at New Orleans in commemoration of the discovery of the Valley of the Mississippi. The resolution does not propose to take away any great number of members of the House—only nine, and at a season of the year when I hope gentlemen here will be found willing to represent Congress on so interesting an occasion.

Mr. KASSON. I appreciate the gentleman's purpose in presenting the resolution; but I still submit to him that in view of its possible effect upon the transaction of our business here it ought to have the consideration of a committee. A clause can be inserted providing for a prompt report.

Mr. GIBSON. What committee does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. COX, of New York. Say the Committee on the Library.

Mr. KASSON. I shall suggest the Committee on Appropriations, or the Committee on Commerce, or indeed any committee the gentleman may select.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this matter?

Mr. COX, of New York. Let it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GIBSON. Very well; let it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

REPEAL OF DISCRIMINATING DUTIES.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4680) to repeal discriminating duties on tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands.

Mr. KELLEY. If the House will bear with me for one moment I will explain the necessity for this measure.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas section 2501 of the Revised Statutes provides for a discriminating duty of 10 per cent. on certain goods the produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope when imported from places west of said cape; and

Whereas the fifth article of the treaty of the 26th of February, 1853, between the United States and the Netherlands provides that the discriminating duties against tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands, shall be removed by the United States whenever the discriminating export duties imposed by the Government of the Netherlands in favor of direct shipments to Holland of the products of its colonial possessions are removed; and

Whereas satisfactory information has been received by the President that said discriminating export duties have been removed by the Government of the Netherlands: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands, be, and the same shall hereafter be, exempt from discriminating duties imposed by section 2501 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4680) to repeal discriminating duties on tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KELLEY. I need not say anything, as the preamble fully explains the necessity for the passage of this measure.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF GALVESTON HARBOR.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas. It is a bill which has passed the Senate, has the approval of the Committee on Commerce of this House, and it is by the authority of that committee I now ask that that Senate bill may be taken from the Speaker's table for the purpose of continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor. The local engineer, as well as the Chief of Engineers, both report that unless this appropriation is made this important work will suffer serious detriment. If it is passed, the amount here appropriated will be deducted from the general river and harbor appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, in the State of Texas, which improvements are now being prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War, and the appropriation for which is wholly insufficient to continue the work to the end of the current fiscal year; and the expenditure of the sum hereby appropriated is placed under the direction and control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve any objection until some explanation is made of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I reserve my right to object, as I did not hear what the gentleman from Texas stated when he made the request for unanimous consent. There was some considerable confusion, and it was impossible to hear.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state the necessity for the passage of this bill in a few words. There is an important work of improvement going on at Galveston. The local engineer, Colonel Mansfield, reports that the balance of appropriation on hand will not enable him to continue the work during the present fiscal year, and that unless some provision is made for continuing the work serious damage will result to the interests of the Government as well as to the interests of the commerce of that harbor. The Chief of Engineers has approved the recommendation of the local engineer in favor of the passage of this appropriation. The Senate has passed and sent us this bill for the purpose.

The Committee on Commerce of this House have carefully examined it, and have authorized me to make this request by unanimous consent, and that committee likewise have agreed that this amount shall be deducted from the river and harbor appropriation bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. On that statement of the gentleman from Texas I make no objection to his request.

The bill, by unanimous consent, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT KEITHSBURGH, ILLINOIS.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. No. 4454, a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2247) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road, and that the same be now put upon its passage.

The substitute for this bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce, and I hope there will be no objection to its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. BAYNE. Let it be read subject to objection.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the Mercer County Bridge Company, a corporation duly created and organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, or the Keithsburgh Bridge Company, a corporation duly created and organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, or both of them, or either or both of their successors or assigns, to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at such point on said river at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, as may accommodate the Chicago, Burlington and Pacific Railroad Company, or the Central Iowa Railway Company, and their connections, on the west side of said river, and the Peoria and Farmington Railroad Company, on the east side of said river, and to lay on or over said bridge a railroad track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to the said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided; that said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what is necessary in order to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and not less than three hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet, and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark and not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge may be erected: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads and public highways leading to the said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and all of the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hours of sunset to sunrise, such lights as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation and modification by law whenever the public good shall, in the judgment of Congress, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States. That the said Mercer County Bridge Company, or the said Keithsburgh Bridge Company, whichever of them shall construct said bridge, may execute a mortgage or mortgages thereon, and issue bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold, the payment of which shall be secured by said mortgage.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say for the information of the House——

Mr. BAYNE. The right to object has been reserved, but I presume the gentleman may be allowed to make a statement first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will preserve the rights of gentlemen.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to say for the information of the House that this bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce, and reported favorably by the unanimous voice of the committee. Before taking action on the bill, as on all bills relating to crossing navigable streams, the bill was referred to the Chief Engineer and by him to the local engineer for the division of the Mississippi River in charge at that point, and both return answer that no reason exists why the bill should not be passed. It is guarded in every respect. There is no provision looking to the protection of the navigation of the Mississippi River that is not fully guarded in the bill, and I can conceive of no possible objection to its passage. It is important that immediate action should be had upon it, as the roads interested are desirous of progressing with the work as rapidly as possible, and therefore there are reasons why the House should take immediate action upon it.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him what provision has been made with reference to the width of the channel span?

Mr. WASHBURN. The same provision that is made with reference to other bridges. It is the same that is prescribed by the law with regard to every bridge that has been built on the Mississippi River since 1878. Every one of them has had the same provision as to width of span, and that provision is incorporated in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the right to object until I ascertain whether the bill contains a provision, or whether an amendment will be accepted, putting it upon the same footing with the Carondalet bridge——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman had better submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will inquire in the first instance if this contains a provision, as I am now informed that it does, providing for the transportation of the mails of the United States over the bridge at the same rate that is paid for the transportation over railroads crossing the bridge?

Mr. WASHBURN. That is provided in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I shall not object to its passage.

Mr. BAYNE. It seems to me that a bill of this importance should be considered by the whole House.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania as objecting?

Mr. BAYNE. No; I shall not object, as I am informed the bill has been carefully prepared by the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARSH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BROWNE. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask the House to set aside the evenings of Tuesday and Thursday of next week for the consideration of pension bills on the Private Calendar, and that the House on said days take a recess until eight o'clock; the evening sessions to be devoted to the purpose named, no other business to be transacted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is a continuing order of the House giving Tuesday and Thursday evenings of each week for the consideration of the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWNE. Then I will make it Monday and Friday of next week; and that the House on those days shall take a recess, to meet at eight o'clock for the purpose specified.

Mr. DUNNELL. Say half past seven o'clock.

Mr. BROWNE. I am willing to accept the suggestion, and will say half past seven.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. YOUNG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask the Chair whether, when there is a regular order of business which is interfered with by a special order, as was the case on yesterday, upon the disposition of that special order the regular order is not to be resumed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the practical effect of the gentleman's inquiry to be, whether the business of Monday, which was interfered with by the special order of yesterday, goes over until Tuesday.

Mr. YOUNG. Precisely.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that Monday's business is confined to that day only, and would not go over until Tuesday if interfered with by the action of the House in any manner.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask the question for the reason I understand that there are several gentlemen who desire to introduce bills for reference. I myself have had some bills for over a week, but have had no opportunity of presenting them, though it would take the time of the House but for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask consent of the House for the gentleman to introduce the bills.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope all gentlemen will be allowed the privilege of introducing bills to-day.

HARRIET E. EDWARDS.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4681) granting a pension to Harriet E. Edwards; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BOYLE & ROACH.

Mr. YOUNG also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4682) for the relief of Messrs. Boyle & Roach, contractors for work on the Saint Mary's Falls Canal, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Mr. YOUNG also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4683) to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at Cincinnati, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to submit a resolution calling for information.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will rise in their places and insist on the regular order the Chair will enforce it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, (having risen.) I call for the regular order.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, have considered the same, and beg leave to recommend as follows:

The committee recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 7, 11, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 39, and 40.

The committee recommend non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, and 42.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now concur in the amendments of the Senate in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the rules do not require a statement as to the contents of these amendments in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend respectively concurrence and non-concurrence?

The SPEAKER. The rule to which the gentleman probably has reference only refers to conference reports.

Mr. CONVERSE. Then I ask that the amendments may be read separately, that we may know what they are.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Ohio desires it I can take up the amendments one by one and state their purport.

Mr. CONVERSE. I should like the gentleman from New York to do so.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I will state that the first amendment in which we recommend non-concurrence is the increase by the Senate of the appropriation for the public printing from $400,000 to $600,000.

In the second amendment the Senate decreases the appropriation for rebuilding the revenue steamer W. P. Fessenden from $30,000 to $25,000. The reduction is small, and we recommend concurrence.

The next amendment is on the appropriation for the transportation of bullion and coin. We gave $50,000. The Senate has increased the amount to $55,000. We recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

The Senate strikes out the item of $75,000 for vaults and inserts two items, one for $10,000 for vaults, &c., at the assistant treasurer's office at San Francisco, and one for $10,000 for an additional vault in the mint at San Francisco. We recommend non-concurrence in all of those amendments.

The seventh amendment is a limitation on the expenditure of money for fuel, light, water, and miscellaneous items for public buildings, the limitation being that this appropriation shall be used outside of the city of Washington. That amendment we recommend concurrence in.

The Senate puts in next $10,000 for the repair and purchase of instruments to be used in observing the transit of Venus, &c. In that we recommend non-concurrence.

The Senate strikes out the item of $100,000 for new boilers in certain vessels designated by the Secretary of the Navy. In that we recommend non-concurrence.

The Senate introduces an amendment for $20,000 for mileage of Army officers; in which we recommend the House to non-concur.

The Senate inserts an item for stationery for the Interior Department of $4,000; we recommend the House to concur in that amendment.

There is an item added of $20,000 for collectiong and subsisting Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico; we recommend non-concurrence.

The Senate also amends the bill by the insertion of an item of $50,000 for the support and civilization of the Cheyennes, Apaches, and other Indians; we recommend non-concurrence.

The Senate strikes out an item of $3,000 for the support of Indians in the Central superintendency; we recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

The Senate also amends the bill by inserting an item of $15,000 for the Indians in the Central superintendency, including the Modocs and the Nez Percés of Joseph's band; we recommend non-concurrence.

It also introduces an item of $5,000 for the support and civilization of the Navajoes; we recommend non-concurrence in that item.

The Senate amends the clause for the support of schools not otherwise provided for by inserting the words "including schools for freedmen in the Indian Territory," a clause which was ruled out in the House on a point of order; we recommend non-concurrence in that.

We recommend non-concurrence in an amendment providing $5,000 to pay expert architects employed under the act of June 8, 1880, for work on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress.

We recommend concurrence in amendment number 19 of the Senate which appropriates $4,769.51 and $5,230.49 for additional clerk hire in the Interior Department in the Patent Office.

Amendment number 20 of the Senate authorizes the Secretary of War to use the unexpended balance of the appropriations for the improvement of the Susquehanna River in the construction of the channel and break-waters of the fishing battery below Havre de Grace; we recommend non-concurrence in that item.

The Senate increases the appropriation for post-office clerks from $75,000 to $150,000; we recommend non-concurrence.

Amendments 23 and 24 are verbal amendments to the clause appropriating money for route agents and post-office clerks; the House committee recommend concurrence in those amendments.

Amendment 25 appropriates $1,830.70 for the repairing of damages done to the court-house building in Washington during the storm of June 27, 1881; the House committee recommend concurrence in that amendment.

Amendment 27 is for furniture and repairs in the Senate, and we recommend concurrence.

Amendments 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38 are all amendments introduced by the Senate for the payment of employés of the Senate and the expenses of the Senate; your committee recommend non-concurrence in all those amendments. I may say they are all grouped under the head of the twenty-sixth amendment, "Senate;" and the numbers I have given are the numbers of the clauses in that amendment.

Amendments 39 and 40 associate the inspector of the buildings of the District of Columbia with the Architect of the Capitol in the erection of the school-houses in the District of Columbia; your committee recommend concurrence in those amendments.

Amendment 41 is an amendment appropriating $2,000 for the contingent expenses of the executive office; your committee recommend non-concurrence.

Amendment 42 is an amendment for the payment of rent for a building occupied by a part of the force of the Surgeon-General's Office; your committee recommend non-concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. HISCOCK.] I understood him to say that the committee recommended non-concurrence in an amendment of the Senate making an appropriation for constructing vaults in the sub-treasury in San Francisco. I would ask the gentleman if the bill originally contained any appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. HISCOCK. In answer to the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] I will say that the original bill contained an appropriation of $75,000, which was intended to include the amount necessary for constructing those vaults. The Senate proposes a specific appropriation for the vaults in San Francisco of $20,000 and strikes out the appropriation of $75,000 which was made by the House. I will say to the gentleman that the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to non-concur in those amendments of the Senate is not because there is any desire to antagonize the building of these vaults.

Mr. PAGE. In that case I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first upon the amendment which the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think each amendment should be acted upon separately.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in most of the amendments, and in regard to them the question might be taken altogether.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is possible that the House might differ with the Committee on Appropriations. I suggest that the amendments be reported by the Clerk, and if not objected to they can be considered as concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The amendments in which concurrence is recommended will first be read and considered.

The Clerk then read amendments numbered 2, 7, 11, 19, 23, 24, and 25, which were concurred in, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Amendment 26 was read as follows:

After line 1, page 7, insert "Senate."

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in the amendment just read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think that is a mistake. The amendment in which we recommend concurrence is 27 clause of amendment 26. After the word "Senate" will be found this clause:

For furniture and repairs, $5,000.

The SPEAKER. That is a further amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not a further amendment; it is a clause of amendment 26.

The SPEAKER. It is stated in the report as a separate amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Committee on Appropriations of the House recommend concurrence in that clause only of amendment 26.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and repairs, $5,000.

The amendment was concurred in as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Amendments No. 39 and No. 40 were then read and concurred in, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendments in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demands a separate vote upon each amendment in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence?

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendments have not been printed.

Mr. COX, of New York. Certainly they have.

Mr. HISCOCK. What I ask is this: does the gentleman ask a separate vote on the amendments in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are some of them which I desire to have a separate vote upon, but it is impossible for me to indicate them in the absence of the printed bill containing the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. It seems to me that the gentleman need not require a separate vote upon these amendments where we do not recommend a yielding of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House might desire to concur in some of the amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether he insists upon having all the amendments in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence considered and acted upon separately?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are one or two upon which I desire a separate vote, but I cannot indicate them, not having the printed bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. The printed bill is here with all the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not in the order in which they are reported.

The SPEAKER. The bill with the Senate amendments has been printed; the report of the Committee on Appropriations upon the Senate amendments has not been printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as we have to rely upon the statement of the chairman of the committee as to what they have done, and inasmuch as I am assured that the recommendations of the committee favor a reduction of appropriations, I will not insist upon the separate vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question will be upon agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, that the remainder of the Senate amendments to this bill be non-concurred in.

The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with. I make the motion for the purpose of moving to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. CALKINS. Before that is done, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Elections. That committee is ready to make some reports this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Elections is authorized to report at any time.

ELECTION CONTEST—CAMPBELL VS. CANNON.

Mr. CALKINS. I am authorized by the Committee on Elections to report upon the contested-election case of Campbell vs. Cannon from the Territory of Utah. It is proper for me to state that the views of the minority of the committee appear in the report seriatim. I ask the Clerk first to read the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Allen G. Campbell is not entitled to a seat in this Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah.

Resolved, That George Q. Cannon is not entitled to a seat in this Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah.

Resolved, That the seat of Delegate from the Territory of Utah be, and the same hereby is, declared vacant.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. THOMPSON,] as one of the minority of the committee, desires to submit resolutions, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That G. Q. Cannon is not entitled to a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah.

Resolved, That Allen G. Campbell is entitled to a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah.

Mr. CALKINS. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MOULTON,] to submit a minority report.

Mr. MOULTON. I desire to submit the views of a minority of the committee upon this case; and I presume they will be published with the majority report. I simply ask now that the resolution we submit be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George Q. Cannon was duly elected and returned as Delegate from the Territory of Utah, and is entitled to a seat as Delegate in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire that the views of the different members of the committee, together with the resolutions, be printed; and I give notice that at some future time I will call up the matter for the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee with the views of the minority will be printed and lie over, to be called up hereafter as a privileged question.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. RITCHIE. I am directed by the Committee on Elections to submit their report on the petition of M. D. Ball for admission to a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress as Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. CALKINS. Let the resolution reported by the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That M. D. Ball be not admitted to a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska until the Committee on Territories shall report thereon, and that the matter be continued until that time for further action.

The SPEAKER. The report and accompanying resolution will be printed and lie over.

Mr. CALKINS. I understand that my colleague on the committee [Mr. RITCHIE] desires to have this matter referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. RITCHIE. There is a recommendation to that effect in the report.

Mr. CALKINS. We may as well dispose of the matter now by referring it to the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RITCHIE] asks that the report on this subject, together with the resolution and accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on the Territories. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CALKINS. A minority of the committee desire to submit their views with a resolution embodying a different conclusion. It is desired that the views of the minority may take the same reference.

The SPEAKER. The House will doubtless give consent to that.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Does this action relate to the matter of a Delegate from Alaska?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. As I understand, the majority of the committee propose to submit hereafter a resolution covering the case.

Mr. CALKINS. The majority of the committee now report their conclusion in the form of a resolution and ask that the whole case be referred to the Committee on the Territories for a report with reference to the organization of Alaska as a Territory. The minority of the committee ask leave to make a report hereafter, proposing that the applicant for a seat be seated. As I understand, they wish time to prepare that report.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It occurs to me—I do not know what the Committee on Elections have reported or may report—but it occurs to me (and I presume a great many others share in that opinion) that the title of the gentleman coming here from Alaska and asking a seat in this House is an exceedingly slim one. It is proposed now, as I understand, to continue his case along month after month until the Committee on Territories shall report on the question.

The SPEAKER. The subject is not up for consideration now.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand the question is, what shall be done with this report. I want to take this, my earliest opportunity, to say that in my opinion it is not right——

The SPEAKER. The matter is not before the House for consideration. It has been referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It was not so understood. I hope the committee will report as soon as possible, so that we may not be called on to vote a large sum from the Treasury for the time and expenses of this gentleman in prosecuting his claim.

REPRINTING OF A JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. SPRINGER. All the copies heretofore printed of joint resolution (H. R. No. 6) in relation to prohibiting special legislation are exhausted. I ask that the resolution be reprinted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PROMOTION OF LIEUTENANTS.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to submit for immediate consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House why section 1204 of the Revised Statutes is not applied to lieutenants of the Army in lineal promotion.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman that the resolution be modified so as to read, "whether section 1204 of the Revised Statutes is or is not applied," &c.

Mr. STEELE. I modify the resolution in the manner suggested.

There being no objection, the resolution as modified was considered and adopted.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN RESERVATION IN COLORADO.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, as a substitute for House bill No. 2830, a bill (H. R. No. 4685) relating to certain lands in Colorado within the reservation lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UTAH CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, in the Utah contested-election case of Campbell vs. Cannon, I ask leave to present my own views as a member of the Committee on Elections, concurring in the report of the majority, and ask that it be printed in connection with reports already filed in the case.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Vermont on the subject of polygamy be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions adopted at a citizens' meeting held at Bennington Centre, Vermont, February 22, 1882.

Resolved, That in unison with right-minded citizens in Vermont, and indeed throughout the land, we view energetic laws successfully executed against polygamy in Utah and adjacent Territories as profoundly necessary in many ways to the welfare of the people concerned.

Resolved, That we could not but regard any practical admission in the present crisis of inadequacy or indisposition for any reason of Congress and the National Government to effectual legislation against the vast and growing evil in question as an alarming omen for our country.

Resolved, That these resolutions be signed by the chairman and secretary of this meeting and inclosed to Hon. C. H. JOYCE, the Representative of this district in Congress.

SAMUEL CHANDLER,
Chairman.
ALFRED ROBINSON,
Secretary.

Resolutions adopted at a citizens' meeting held at Bennington, Vermont, February 22, 1882.

Resolved, That in common with good citizens generally throughout the land assembled to-day to express public sentiment on the polygamous practices of the Mormons, we do herein record our conviction of the abominable character of these practices as abhorrent to Christian morals, to the laws of our country, and to the good order of society, and as tending to degrade utterly those immediately concerned in them, and to involve posterity in a heritage of ignorance and vice.

Resolved, That it is the duty of all good citizens to aid in the effort to remove this foul blot from our American social life, and we would especially entreat all Christians to renewed zeal in seeking, through their various educational and benevolent agencies, the enlightenment and Christianization of the growing populations of Utah and the adjacent Territories.

Resolved, That we do most heartily indorse the repressive legal measures embodied in the so-called Edmunds bill, which lately passed the Senate of the United States, and that we respectfully, but urgently, request our Representatives in Congress to sustain these measures by voice and vote, and by all lawful means in their power to seek the extirpation of this great evil.

Resolutions adopted at a citizens' meeting held at Plainfield, Vermont, February 22, 1882.

Whereas the practice of polygamy in Utah is carried on in direct defiance of the laws of God and of the laws of the United States, resulting in the degradation of all persons that are concerned in it, and by the contempt thus poured upon the laws of the country tending to the weakening of the national will and authority; and

Whereas this organized system of wrong and vice is assuming more and more gigantic proportions, and is growing every year bolder and more defiant in its impudent demands; and

Whereas the Territory of Utah is controlled by a polygamous hierarchy, the clean and law-abiding inhabitants being unable to cope effectually with the evil:

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Plainfield, Vermont, in public meeting assembled, rejoice in the prospect that more stringent legislation by Congress is to be brought to bear upon the offenders against law and decency in Utah; and that while we are in hearty sympathy with the efforts of all good men in every part of our land to secure the annihilation of polygamy, we especially commend and indorse the bill of Senator EDMUNDS that has just passed the Senate, and we hope that it will speedily become a law of the land; and we pray that Congress will pass all laws that are still further needed for the suppression of polygamy, use its lawful powers to enforce such laws and others now existing for that purpose, and punish all offenders thereof; and we further pray Congress to take such measures in governing their own assemblies that shall exclude all men offending the laws of chastity, whether Mormons or Christians, whether coming from Utah or residing in Washington.

Resolved further, That we do now express our admiration for the moral heroism and persistent patriotism of our fellow-countrymen that are living in Utah, and who, in the schools, in the press, in the pulpit, in the church, and in society generally are bravely fighting this colossal evil.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Congressman of this district.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the morning hour this day for the call of committees for reports be dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 34.

Mr. SPRINGER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, one-fifth of those present not voting in the affirmative.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the notice given a week or ten days ago, I desire to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the bill known as the tariff commission bill, reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desires to make a statement at this time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, it is with extreme reluctance I ask the House to antagonize the Ways and Means Committee, but I believe it is eminently proper before the House enters upon the consideration of their bill, the discussion of which will doubtless take some time, we should get to the Senate appropriation bills enough so that it will have ample work on its hands. Therefore, the Committee on Appropriations now antagonizes the motion of the gentleman from Iowa in order that the House may proceed at this time to the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill, to be followed by the Indian appropriation bill, and immediately afterward by the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. I think this House would do well to give to the appropriation bills the whole of this week, and that would enable us, no doubt, to get to the Senate work enough of that character so there would be no need to interrupt the discussion of the tariff commission bill or any tariff legislation which may be deemed necessary until it was completed and a final vote reached.

I commend these suggestions to the House, I commend them to the Committee on Ways and Means, I commend them to the gentleman from Iowa. It seems to me it will be wise action on our part if the Committee on Appropriations is allowed to have this week for the consideration of the bills which I have indicated; first the Military Academy appropriation bill, second the Indian appropriation bill, and third the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; and that committee will do all in its power to bring those three bills to a vote in the House by Saturday evening of this week.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I wish to state that the Committee on Ways and Means has endeavored, as it was its duty to do, to come into accord with the Committee on Appropriations as to the order of consideration of the important business reported respectively by them. With a view to that object my first understanding, before I gave notice of the day when the tariff-commission bill would be called up, was that the Post-Office appropriation bill, which was then pending, should be finished, as well as a certain other measure, the apportionment bill, which was then also pending, should be disposed of, and that then the field would be clear for calling up the tariff-commission bill, and notice was generally given over the House to that effect. Since that time the Appropriations Committee has deeemed it important, as more time was taken up by the Post-Office appropriation bill than was expected, to ask some further delay on the part of the business of the Ways and Means Committee.

That has been stated by the gentleman as it was stated to the Committee on Ways and Means this morning, in a way to impress us with the opinion that at least one additional appropriation bill should be passed before we went into any general tariff discussion; and that bill was understood to be the Indian appropriation bill. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has since suggested that the Military Academy appropriation bill, the Indian appropriation bill, and the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill could all be disposed of in two days, or at the furthest, by the third day. Now, as he is of opinion that may be done, we do not wish to antagonize such action on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, and as our first appointment was made in harmony with that committee, and it states it requires this further time for the consideration of the appropriation bills indicated, I feel, with great reluctance, we should yield even two or three days more. But we are willing to do it, however, if the gentleman thinks he can get these bills through in two or three days, in order that the public business may be promoted, which, of course, is the object of the whole House. As the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means suggests, we shall then, by general consent of the committee representing that interest and our own and of the House, take up our bill and proceed as rapidly as in the opinion of the House it may be considered and acted on.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KASSON. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McLANE. I wish to know if it is the understanding that on the report of the Committee on Ways and Means we shall have the opportunity and the liberty to look at the revision of the tariff?

Mr. KASSON. There is no question, I think, on that subject, so far as I know the object of the Ways and Means Committee, and certainly to the full extent of my own purpose, it is to open the debate fully when that commission bill comes up.

Mr. McLANE. It is far more important than the appropriation bills.

Mr. KASSON. After disposing of the Military Academy bill, which will take but little time, and the Indian appropriation bill, both of which are to be closed in two days, it is the understanding we may then proceed with that business which we all regard as of great importance.

I will add, while I am on my feet, it is of great importance, if this commission is to be created, that the persons who are to be appointed on it should begin at an early day. The bill limits the report to the 1st day of December, and it is important the commission should get to work at as early a day as possible. With that understanding I yield to the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that it does not understand any special order was made for the consideration of the tariff-commission bill to-day, but only, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, notice was given he would claim the floor to-day to make the motion.

Mr. KASSON. If there is any misapprehension about it, I will only say it is privileged to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on a revenue bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no doubt but that the Military Academy bill and the Indian appropriation bill will be disposed of at the end of three days, and certainly I am very desirous that the House shall enter upon their consideration for the purpose of getting them to the Senate at as early a day as practicable. And I say further in this connection, that I hope the gentleman from Iowa will see the wisdom of allowing one other appropriation bill to be perfected before he presses the consideration of the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. KASSON. I am not authorized, sir, to go further than I have stated.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Military Academy bill.

The SPEAKER. Before that motion is submitted the Chair desires to lay before the House some requests of members for leave of absence.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SCHULTZ, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEEDOM, for ten days, on account of important business.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. McCOOK in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand objection will be made to dispensing with the first formal reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not ask to make any extended statement in relation to this bill. An examination of the total footings at the conclusion of the bill will show that the estimates for the next fiscal year are $419,574.47, or $100,717.43 in excess of the amount appropriated by this bill. The appropriation for the present current fiscal year was $322,435.37, while the amount recommended by this bill is $318,857.04. If the Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs I will take occasion to answer any questions that may be propounded by any gentleman, or give any information that the Committee on Appropriations may have in relation to any changes recommended by this bill, either by way of increase or decrease, as compared with the former bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements, timber, plank, boards, joists, wall-strips, laths, shingles, slate, tin, sheet-lead, zinc, nails, screws, locks, hinges, glass, paint, turpentine, oils, varnish, flagstone, lime, cement, plaster, hair, sewer and drain pipe, blasting-powder, fuse, iron, steel, tools, mantels, and other similar materials, and for pay of citizen mechanics and labor employed upon repairs and improvements that cannot be done by enlisted men, $13,000.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out, in line 59, "thirteen" and insert "eleven," so that it will read "eleven thousand dollars," if adopted. We appropriated for this purpose last year $11,000.

I will now occupy, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will allow me, my five minutes by not referring further to this bill, but in referring to a statement which I find in the New York Times of the 27th instant, in commenting on the debate and action of the Committee of the Whole House upon the appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department, especially relating to special mail facilities, last week.

The Times uses this language:

The attorneys for the star-route thieves, among whom we must always include Messrs. ATKINS, BLAND, SINGLETON, and NEAL, insist that valuable and necessary routes have been cut off or their service diminished in order that the bloated railway monopolists may be subsidized and the New York newspapers be pampered.

And again in another distinct paragraph, among other things it says:

Representative ATKINS, of Tennessee, who has ever been the most reckless and zealous advocate of the star-route gang, asserted, among other things, that Mr. James, while Postmaster-General, had paid $70,000 to the New York Central Railroad for the mere changing of a mail car from one train to another, and that this was done for the purpose of securing the presidency of the Lincoln Bank, in which Mr. Vanderbilt is interested. This is simply a bold untruth. The amount paid to the New York Central Railroad, for its entire mail service, is $60,000 per annum. A postal car attached to the early morning train from New York was, by the arrangement made by Mr. James, added to the fast train leaving Buffalo for Chicago, thus making an additional through fast-mail service to the West. For this the railroad was paid the additional $10,000 per annum, making $70,000 for the whole service. Furthermore, the Vanderbilts do not control the Lincoln Bank and Mr. James was invited into its management (and that fact was published) before he was Postmaster-General.

Now, I felt authorized in making the statements I did, and which are referred to by this article, from a letter of Mr. James, the late Postmaster-General, dated December 12, 1881, addressed to Mr. Vanderbilt, in which he says:

The annual compensation on your main line from New York to Chicago is now $1,116,329.11.

The arrangement which I so much desire will not require the moving of any more cars, but only the running of one car from Buffalo to Chicago on the fast train, instead of the express which follows it. This arrangement will increase your annual compensation from sixty to seventy thousand dollars. Because of the superior equipment of your road, I am anxious to increase the amount of mail forwarded thereon.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that any one reading this letter, seeing how much is appropriated for this particular company, $1,116,329.11, and then reading the clause which I have just read, in which it speaks of increasing the pay from $60,000 to $70,000, would fairly and logically deduce the conclusion I did, and which I stated upon this floor, that this road got $70,000 for changing one car from one train to another. And if I am incorrect in that, I have only to say that I made the mistake unintentionally. I would not wrongly harm any one, nor would I desire causelessly to throw an insinuation at the honor of any one, of any corporation, or any person whatever. But gentlemen on the floor all around me so understood it, and I doubt not so understand it to-day.

Mr. Chairman, the New York Times I have always understood to be a conservative paper, one that I believe intended to represent correctly and fairly the proceedings of Congress and to do justice to the public men of this country, and I am surprised, utterly surprised, to find this statement in that paper. Although I am an humble man, I acknowledge, and that newspaper may have overlooked my record heretofore, still as it has undertaken to criticise my record in this instance, it ought to have been better informed than to have intimated that at any time I had given my countenance to what it denominates the star-route gang or the star-route thieves. It is true I represent a district which has considerable star-route service, so far as that is concerned. But, sir, there are no persons here endeavoring to get contracts from my district that I know of; nor do I know of any persons from any portion of the country who are endeavoring to get contracts for my district, so far as that is concerned.

All I have to say is, here is the record, [holding up a volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.] Here is a record of the memorable contest in this House during the Forty-sixth Congress. I refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, page 2085. There is my name recorded along with that of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] that of my friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] and that of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] and all the other gentlemen who acted with the Appropriations Committee of that Congress in opposition to the demands of the Department for this extraordinary deficiency for what they called the star-route service. And if I may be allowed so unparliamentary an expression, I say that the editor of that paper has published to the country a brazen and infamous untruth when it intimates I have been in anywise the representative of or have sympathized with the star-route contractors who have endeavored to get contracts to defraud the Government and the people of this country.

It was stated further the other day that Mr. James, by having this extraordinary reweighing within eight months of the time he had originally weighed upon these roads had cost the Government, as the gentleman from New Jersey stated, $200,000 in addition to the $30,000 required for the weighing. These are the facts of the case; and any intimation coming from any quarter that I have at any time during that Congress or any other Congress been in collusion with any person who desired illegitimately or illegally or wrongfully to defraud the Government of the United States out of one cent is the statement of a slanderer, a calumniator, and one that has not the courage to stand to his words.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. We did not believe it before you got up to reply to the statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say one word here and now. I most heartily indorse all that has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee as to his record and his position in regard to the star-route service. When he made the remarks which he did the other day, which I thought were somewhat censorious of the late Postmaster-

General, I confess that I wondered then, as I have continued to wonder since, that he made strictures upon that, when he must have been compelled to recognize the fact that the late Postmaster-General struck down and trampled under foot plunderers of the Government who had set the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-sixth Congress at defiance. While I say this, Mr. Chairman, I abate nothing of what I have said before in reference to the resolute position which the gentleman from Tennessee has always maintained against them. But knowing so well as he did their power, and how impotent and weak we were to struggle with them, I thought he should have recognized in the late Postmaster-General both courage and fidelity when he struck them down as he did.

I have no indorsement, Mr. Chairman, to make of what the New York Times has said in reference to the past record of the gentleman from Tennessee, but I beg him to remember that when in his speech, as I remember it, and he will set me right if I am wrong, he charged directly that the Postmaster-General was influenced in his action with reference to the New York Central Railroad by the direct bribe—the direct bribe of the presidency of a bank owned by the Vanderbilts—he must not wonder that the friends of the late Postmaster-General smarted under that charge, and that they retaliated somewhat in kind; and in this instance I say incorrectly, as his charge against the late Postmaster-General was incorrect.

The late Postmaster-General may have made mistakes in the administration of his office. Gentlemen upon the other side or upon this side of the House may think he did. I may think that he did not. But I can stand here both as a Representative and as a citizen of his State, and face the House and face the United States, and proclaim that Thomas L. James is an honest man, and that he brought to the discharge of his duty both fidelity and bravery.

Mr. BLAND. I desire also to address myself to this question of privilege.

I have just this moment observed the paragraph in the paper which has been alluded to, in which I find my name connected with that of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] as attorneys for these star-routers. Now, I shall not speak for myself particularly, but I apprehend if the other gentlemen mentioned in connection with myself had been appointed attorneys to prosecute these star-routers instead of the gentlemen who were called upon by the late Postmaster-General, the country would not now have had to record the fact that the Postmaster-General and his attorneys permitted the time to elapse when these star-route thieves could have been indicted and prosecuted.

I remember, sir, when the Postmaster-General was first installed into office it was proclaimed throughout the country that he had appointed as his clerk or as some chief officer in that Department a correspondent of a certain newspaper, the name of which it is unnecessary to state here, as I suppose gentlemen here and the country are familiar with it; and the only effect of the prosecution of these star-route thieves that I have seen has been the correspondence of this newspaper from this official, announcing the great efforts the Postmaster-General was making in prosecuting thieves and the saving he was making in star-route contracts. There were no steps taken effectively to prosecute them; and when we come to ascertain the facts we find that all the savings, and more, if I am not mistaken, which he claims to have made on the star routes were wasted on railroads.

The charge is made, not by me, but by the country and by the star-route thieves on the other hand, that the Postmaster-General was striking down steamboat routes and star routes and giving the savings to Jay Gould and Vanderbilt and the great railroad lines. And the records of the Department, so far as we can obtain them, sustain that position.

How was it with these star-route cases? The record will show that not only myself, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] and other gentlemen from the sections of the country most interested in star routes, took up the fight against these thieves and placed a provision on the statute-book whereby this expedition of the service could not be made so as to drain the public Treasury of the money appropriated for star-route service, and it prohibited the expediting of routes by which an increase of more than one-half of the amount of the original contract could be taken from the Treasury.

In other words, those interested in the star routes were the very first, by their votes and acts on this floor, to shut the door against this steal. And what did they do the other day, and against the protest of those men interested in the railroads? They adopted another amendment, by which the subletting of contracts, another great source of fraud and infamy, will be wiped out and prevented in the future. That action was taken by the very gentlemen referred to in this newspaper, and from the section of the country most interested in star routes.

But when we came to reform the service in regard to these railroads, the service on these great trunk lines, we found that those who were interested in the trunk lines would not join us in any reformation whatever in that respect. And I have to reiterate now what I stated before that the $500,000 appropriated for the trunk lines is nothing but a corrupt subsidy given to Jay Gould and Vanderbilt, and not for the public service of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word, or anything else necessary to give me five minutes. There is one gentleman upon the other side of the House with whom, whenever there is anything going on in the direction of a reform, I for one have always been able to join hands; and in joining hands with him he has always recognized the fact that we met and acted here as men, not as partisans, to legislate for the good of our country.

That gentleman is the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] the late chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He recognizes the fact that good men upon this side of the House, and good men upon his side of the House, without distinction of party, struggled against the star-route corruption in the Forty-sixth Congress. And I do not believe that that gentleman, whatever the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] may do, will impugn the motives of any man on this side of the House, or upon his side of the House, for the vote which he may have given for special facilities on trunk lines.

It was a business matter. It was a great question on which we upon this side of the House who favor it, and I believe those upon his side of the House, (for I now have in my eye Democrats from the State of New York, who I believe favored it as much as I did and as honestly as I did,) acted understandingly, honestly, and upon our responsibility as Representatives. It was a question which we looked at and discussed as a business question for the interest of the people of the United States. We voted for the appropriation not because it was to go into the coffers of Jay Gould or William H. Vanderbilt, nor because it was to go to any railroad corporation, but because we believed the needs of the country demanded it.

Gentlemen upon the other side of the House need not attempt to point out failures or omissions on the part of the Government in relation to the prosecution of the star-route offenders. The fact stands out notorious that the Forty-sixth Congress was entirely unable to cope with those great malefactors, and that while it may have been an ulcer in the Republican party and in a Republican administration, it was a Republican official and a Republican administration that cut it out. And I may say in this connection that it has been cut out, although it has been resisted by insidious attacks and sneers and attempts to pull down and strike down the brave official that headed the war upon the contractors, colluding officials, and their fraudulent devices.

And I say further—I will not say what I was going to. I was about to impute largely the attacks to the other side of the House. But upon the discussion of this bill I do not desire to precipitate or continue a partisan discussion. I therefore forbear to allude to votes or methods either of men on the other side of the House or upon my own side of the Chamber upon the question. But I will commend to gentlemen on the other side to follow in the footsteps of the gentleman I have followed in the past, in treating questions of this kind not as partisan questions but as business questions, in regard to which Republicans and Democrats alike ought to vote according to their conscience.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman will do me the justice to say that I did not bring any partisan matter into this discussion.

Mr. HISCOCK. No, the gentleman did not. It seems that another gentleman on that side of the House thought it was necessary to do so in order to indorse him and rise to his defense. I would say to him that the gentleman from Tennessee is always able to take care of himself.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I would like to know what this discussion has to do with the appropriation bill under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to answer that question exactly. There has always been allowed great latitude of debate upon appropriation bills.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] who certainly cannot regret more than I do that the Military Academy appropriation bill should have been made an instrument for introducing a discussion of post-office matters, will not object to giving the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] an opportunity to say a word, as members on the other side have been indulged.

Mr. MILLS. Let the debate go on. There are some things I want to say.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no, not on this bill.

Mr. MILLS. Those who have acted in opposition to the Committee on Appropriations have been characterized by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] as unable to resist the influence of contractors, and those gentlemen have a right to speak.

Mr. HISCOCK. When have I done anything of that sort?

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman said that the Forty-sixth Congress was unable to resist the influence of star-route thieves. After the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] has got through I desire to be heard.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I had not noticed the article referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] until his speech. With other names mentioned in that article I see that of Singleton. I cannot believe, however, that it was intended to apply to me for the reason that I did not open my mouth last week upon this subject. There is a gentleman on this floor of similar name who I believe did speak on the subject, and I presume the reference intended was to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON.]

I voted with the gentleman from Tennessee against the proposition introduced here to appropriate a large amount for the star-route service. Our votes are recorded upon the same page. I wish to add that if I had spoken upon the subject there is no language that I would not have been ready to employ in denouncing these star-route men—these men who have been filching money from the Government; whose whole object seems to have been to plunder the Treasury of the United States. I presume I need not have said this. Possibly in the next issue of this paper I may be taken to task and arraigned as one of the attorneys for these star-route men. The name of "SINGLETON" having been mentioned in the article, I have thought it proper to make this statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN rose.

Mr. MILLS. Something has been said here which I think I am entitled to refer to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will not believe I can be wanting in the spirit of courtesy or kindness toward him; but whilst I am in charge of a bill which simply looks to making appropriations for the maintenance of the Military Academy of this country, I must protest against the debate going off into speeches—not once, but twice or three times—made by individual members upon matters altogether foreign to it.

Mr. MILLS. Then my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] ought to have interposed some time ago.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In that the gentleman from Texas and myself differ.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regret that this matter should come up at all; but while personal explanations are not usually had in Committee of the Whole House upon an appropriation bill, in this case a gentleman who had been assailed, as he thought and I think, very unjustly, asked to make some remarks in the nature of a personal explanation. That was responded to by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who was replied to by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND,] and then the gentleman from New York responded again. It seems to me that honors and opportunities are easy; and I must ask that there shall be no more discussion of Post-Office matters upon this Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. I did not "reply" to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then the gentleman spoke in his own right; of which I do not complain.

I wish to say, if it will at all tend to soothe the gentleman from New York, that I recognized in the action taken by the late Postmaster-General a purpose exactly in line and in accord with the conduct of the fight made by the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-sixth Congress in opposition to the star-service gang. I appreciated the effort made—successfully at least to a degree—by the late Postmaster-General in that direction. The gentleman from New York is grievously mistaken when he robs the Committee on Appropriations and the Forty-sixth Congress of their due credit in throttling the abuses of the star service.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not rob them of any just credit.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman will remember that he said the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and the star-service men flung defiance into the face of the Forty-sixth Congress. He will not forget—I certainly have not forgotten, for I happened to be charged as chairman of the sub-committee with the conduct of that bill—that we put into it an amendment which stands as the permanent law of the land to-day, providing that never in the future should any compensation for expedited service be allowed anywhere in excess of 50 per cent. of the original contract price.

Mr. BLAND. And every man whose name is mentioned in that paper voted for it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, and I think every gentleman named was grievously outraged by that article.

Mr. STEELE. Is it in order to move that the committee rise, to terminate this debate?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If this discussion goes further I am going to move—I do now move that the committeee rise, in order to limit debate upon this paragraph to one minute.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] rose to keep me from making a speech, and he has made one himself.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought I was making one satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. No, indeed. I will ask to be heard now, or I will speak on the next proposition that comes up.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, that the committee rise, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 58, noes 59.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I am so very obscure that I do not in fact know a star-route contractor in the United States. I may perhaps know some gentlemen who may be contractors or who may be filling some character I know nothing about, but I do not know actually one star-route contractor in the United States. I have never been spoken to on the subject of star routes by anybody whom I know to be a contractor. I rose, however, to reply to the charge made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] that the Forty-sixth Congress found itself unable to withstand the influences of the star-route "ring," and passed the measures brought into this House by their recommendation. I remember distinctly when that question was presented to the House that in my place on this floor I stated to the Committee on Appropriations I was ready at any time or times to go with them in apprehending the felons charged with plundering the people's money and bringing them to the bar of the House in order they might be punished for their crimes. I called on the Committee on Appropriations to bring before this House all guilty parties they might detect occupying high stations so they might be impeached by this grand inquest of the nation at the bar of the Senate, a tribunal organized by the Constitution to try great offenders. But they did not do that, Mr. Chairman. What did they propose to do? They came gravely and told the House that the star-route thieves and their friends who were officers of the Post-Office Department had stolen from the public coffers about two million dollars, and then as a consequence of that they proposed to deprive the people of the United States of their mail facilities.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is what they did, exactly.

Mr. MILLS. I have in my place on this floor protested against that sort of punishment. I said I would not punish my constituency and save the lash from the parties who were guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors in the public service. I said then to the committee, "Go and apprehend these guilty parties and take them to the courts and try them for the offenses they have committed."

I honor the late Postmaster-General for the position he has taken. He has taken the right course. This is not a judicial tribunal for the trial of these crimes. Our fathers who framed the Constitution said when they formed our Government that a free people could only exist with the executive, legislative, and judicial departments divorced from each other, free but independent, one not under the influence and control of the other.

I protested against this body setting itself upon an appropriation bill to hear charges of guilt, of criminality against parties, and proposing to punish them by depriving the people of the United States of their mail facilities. That was my position precisely. I have no charges to make against the Postmaster-General; he has done right. But the gentleman from New York misstates his position; it was the people of the United States by their Representatives here who refused to withdraw their mail facilities and punish them for crimes committed by others.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I took a somewhat prominent part in the debate in the Forty-sixth Congress concerning these star routes, and the frauds which were alleged to have been perpetrated in the letting of star-route contracts. I fought with all the intensity and power I was capable of in behalf of the star-route mail service of the West, and against a bill brought upon this floor from the Appropriations Committee, or an amendment, that without investigation, with only vague and indirect charges of fraud, without having proved any single case of fraud in a single route, proposed to strike down one hundred and seven of the great star routes west of the Mississippi River. I took the floor, I believe, Mr. Chairman, the first man in this House, in opposition to that amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and if it was to be reported again, and this moment, the speech I made then would be repeated with redoubled earnestness now in opposition to the whole matter.

It has been told from one side of this country to the other that in the Forty-sixth Congress there was a great struggle between star-route thieves and their representatives on this floor and the honest people of the United States and their representatives on this floor. I deny it. There never was in the Forty-sixth Congress an issue presented for and against frauds in the star-route service, never in the world; the issue was star-route service or no star-route service, sir. The only question we ever had presented to us was either to vote for or against the proposition to take out of existence one hundred and seven star routes, without a word of proof, without a word to show that service was not needed and necessary. And we stood here on this floor, day by day, and week by week, and month by month, with the investigating committee of the Democratic Congress in session, and demanded of them that they should produce the proof of the frauds on these star routes; and when it was so produced, I said we would stand ready to strike down every route which was proved to be fraudulent or on which the service was excessive. And when, Mr. Chairman, I secured a copy of the evidence from that committee, I obtained it without the knowledge or consent of the committee and brought it upon this floor. There never was a report made from that committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not catch the sentence, and I ask the gentleman to repeat it.

Mr. HASKELL. I said I had secured a portion of the evidence submitted to your committee, without the consent of the committee, and used it one day on this floor.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that that committee or any member of it ever refused that evidence to any member of the House?

Mr. HASKELL. Ever refused it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask if the gentleman says that that committee or any member of that committee refused to allow this testimony to be seen?

Mr. HASKELL. No, I do not know that——

Mr. VALENTINE. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that they did. I asked for it——

Mr. HASKELL. I cannot yield.

Mr. VALENTINE. I personally asked several members——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas declines to yield. The gentleman from Nebraska is out of order.

Mr. HASKELL. I was not refused it; but when I attempted to use it on this floor, as the RECORD shows, the point of order was made against me, and the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] who was then in the chair, will remember that it was tried to prevent me from using any of the evidence obtained in reference to this matter by that investigating committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HASKELL. Just a word more. I hope the committee will extend my time a single moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will feel compelled to move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate, unless there be no other gentleman present who has a speech which he desires to make at this time.

Mr. HASKELL. I only want a single moment to conclude what I have to say. I wish to state that when finally we had, after much discussion, agreed upon a bill to appropriate money for the star routes, into which bill was incorporated valuable remedial legislation, it passed the House without a dissenting voice, and went to the Senate. There it was amended, and as amended it passed the Senate without a dissenting voice. Although $200,000 was added to the amount appropriated, when it came back to the House the first roll-call on the star-route matter was had, and on that roll-call the House concurred with the Senate. Those of us who battled for western mail service feel, therefore, that we were not entirely unsupported, since we had a majority of the House and a unanimous Senate behind us.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I shall feel compelled to move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCKINLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCOOK reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the Military Academy appropriation bill, and pending that I move that all debate upon the pending paragraphs, and all amendments thereto, be limited to one-quarter of a minute.

Mr. NEAL. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky has moved that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the gentleman from Ohio I will ask to withhold that motion until he has had an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

[The Speaker here resumed the chair.]

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to inquire if there is to be an opportunity for debate on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to limit debate.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, as the Chair understands, is to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and also to limit debate. Does the gentleman from Kansas make a parliamentary inquiry in that connection?

Mr. HASKELL. I do. I wish to ascertain if it will be admissible to discuss the question of limiting debate.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. NEAL. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is in order. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time since I have been a member of Congress that I have had to ask a privilege of this kind upon this floor, and I should not do it now were it not for the fact that the attention of this House has been called by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] to an article in Monday's New York Times, which I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unreasonable and unreasoning opposition to the fast-mail service which appears in Congress whenever an appropriation for that service is asked for, was uncommonly virulent last week. The attorneys for the star-route thieves, among whom we must always include Messrs. ATKINS, BLAND, SINGLETON, and NEAL, insist that valuable and necessary routes have been cut off or their service diminished, in order that the bloated railway monopolists may be subsidized and the New York newspapers be pampered. This feeble stuff is scarcely worthy of serious attention. It is too late in the history of this country to debate the value of the fast-mail service. That the facilitating of rapid communication between the great cities of the Republic is a benefit to commerce every sensible and candid person will admit. New York is the great commercial metropolis of the country. If we are to have a fast mail service, it must begin here.

Mr. NEAL. When the matter in regard to the star-route service was under discussion in the Forty-sixth Congress, about two years ago I think, arising, if I recollect aright, from a communication to the House by the Postmaster-General asking for a large appropriation for the star routes, and in default of which appropriation he stated frankly that he would take the service off from a large portion of the same—those members of the Forty-sixth Congress who are now upon the floor will recollect the burden of that discussion—a sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations, consisting of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] and the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] was appointed to investigate the whole matter. As I understand, they made a thorough examination of General Brady and other witnesses, but the result of that investigation was never made public, nor was any report made to the House. The action of the House in substantially indorsing what had been done in expediting service and increasing compensation discouraged that committee to such an extent that they discontinued the investigation.

Now, what has been my connection with this business? What foundation has any one to gravely charge me with being an attorney of any "star-route thief" or any one in any way connected with the star-route service? I do not know any of them, I have never seen one of them, never spoken to one of them; nor have I ever had any relation, directly or indirectly, with one of them. I do not know their names or faces, if I should meet them. Every vote I gave on this floor during the Forty-sixth Congress was in support of the Appropriations Committee, and against the star-route men, so far as they had any interest in the transactions of the House. Every vote I cast was in the interest of good government, of economy, and of fidelity to what I believed an honest administration of the finances of the Government.

I have not asked of the late Assistant Postmaster-General Brady any favor during the four years he was in office. I only demanded of him what was my right and that of my constituency. No star route in my district was expedited and in but one or two instances was service increased, of which no official has ever complained.

Mr. FLOWER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly.

Mr. FLOWER. Suppose there was a general law on this subject by which members of Congress were required to be present at these mail lettings in their districts, does the gentleman believe that that would tend to stop this star-route thieving?

Mr. NEAL. Oh, I cannot answer that question, because I have no star routes in my district of any importance; none except some short ones.

Mr. FLOWER. Do you know what the contracts in your district are let for?

Mr. NEAL. Why, every contract is let, as I understand, to the lowest bidder.

Mr. FLOWER. Would it not be better for Congressmen to spend a little time in watching the price at which these contracts are let in their Congressional districts than to spend it in peddling garden seed, and books that are not read, through their districts?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I feel that every gentleman interested having had a chance to be heard on this question, I should now insist on my motion that the House go back into Committee of the Whole and resume the consideration of the Military Academy bill.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to say one word in regard to my action during the past week——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wanted to give the gentleman from Ohio what the Chair would hold to be full scope in the matter of personal privilege; but I do not want it to go beyond that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Ohio must confine himself directly to the matter which he claims gives him a right to rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. NEAL. I shall do so. During the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill last week, from the moment of its introduction to its final passage, I made no remarks on this floor or elsewhere in regard to the same. I supported on every vote, with perhaps one exception, the report of the Appropriations Committee, and of which the RECORD will confirm me. On the final passage of the bill on Saturday last I was unavoidably detained from this House owing to a serious illness in my family; otherwise I should have voted for the bill just as it was reported from the Committee of the Whole.

My public conduct and my public utterances are legitimate matters for criticism here in the House and elsewhere. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not fair, it is not just, it is beyond the province of honorable and upright journalism to charge members of this House, having great responsibilities resting upon them and great public trusts to discharge, with being attorneys of thieves, engaged in plundering the Government, without anything upon which to found such charges. And especially is this unfair when, so far from being true, every word spoken and every vote given has been in opposition to every corrupt scheme and to expenditure of every dollar of money not required in the proper management of the public service.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio a single question, whether he has not done injustice to the sub-committee to which he has referred when he says that sub-committee got discouraged?

Mr. NEAL. I think not; that is my view of it.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to answer that question.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] yield further?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to get rid of this discussion, and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. McCOOK in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust that the postal affairs of the country having been disposed of to the satisfaction of the committee, we may now be allowed to proceed with this bill, which ought to be completed within an hour's time if the House will give it proper consideration.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For department of natural and experimental philosophy: For additions to apparatus to illustrate the laws of acoustics, optics, and mechanics, $1,000; books of reference, text-books, materials, and repairs, $400; for pay of mechanic assistant, $1,000; in all, $2,400.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 162 the following:
"For astronomical instruments to equip the new observatory, $10,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to hear some explanation of this from the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that this is an appropriation of $10,000 for instruments to equip the new observatory at West Point. And in order that the committee may understand the necessity for the appropriation I will make a statement, as brief as possible.

The railway company, now constructing a tunnel under part of the Government reservation, found it necessary to adopt a line that passed immediately under the observatory, the most expensive building on this reservation. By a contract, the terms of which I am assured were very advantageous to the Government, the railroad company obligated themselves, according to plans and specifiations to be agreed upon, to construct at its own expense a new observatory for the Government. Of course the passage of trains through this tunnel, which was below the base and foundation of the building, would render it unfit for observation purposes or as an observatory. It does not affect or damage the building for other purposes. The railroad company accepted the terms stated by the Government, and are now constructing a very handsome, elaborate, and suitable building for an observatory on a site adapted for the purpose. In the construction of this observatory the Government is not put to the expense of a single dollar; but, on the contrary, there is even enough money left after the construction of the building to provide for the dismantling of the old observatory and the conversion of its rooms into a library.

The item of $10,000 for the purchase of instruments for the equipment of the new observatory was not put into the printed bill because the committee was not at the time—several weeks ago—satisfied that this new observatory would be completed in time to make this expenditure necessary during the fiscal year. They are now convinced the observatory will be completed by the 1st of December next at the furthest. Hence, in the judgment of the committee, it is necessary to insert this $10,000 item in the bill, because from eight months to one year must of necessity elapse after the appropriation for this purpose shall have been made in order to have the instruments constructed and completed. They cannot be completed in a less period than from eight to ten months. The law will not allow any contract for this purpose to be entered into until the appropriation therefor shall have been first made. Hence, in the judgment of the committee, it was necessary to insert this provision in this bill; so that the contract for these instruments might be entered into and the order for their construction given within the fiscal year for which this bill makes provision. As to the amount, or the necessity for the appropriation, I may say there was not a particle of division of sentiment in the committee at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the result of building this railroad is to increase the aggregate expenses $10,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. This appropriation is to provide instruments for the new building, not for the old?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman misunderstands me. I will go further and say this: one of the three instruments in the old observatory is a very valuable instrument; the other two are totally inadequate to the wants of the institution. This same appropriation would be required whether this new building was made or not.

I am assured by the astronomical professor, who in my judgment, by his long and efficient service, has proved himself to be one of the most valuable men we ever have had in that Academy, that the dismounting of the instruments in the old observatory and the remounting of them in the new building would cost not less than $6,000. This appropriation is for $10,000 to provide new and suitable instruments for the new observatory building; that is, two out of the three instruments to be used. One of the instruments in the old building, the transit instrument, is admirably adapted for the purposes of the school.

Then we have as a credit against this appropriation of $10,000 whatever amount the two discarded instruments will bring. And from the best information I can get I feel that I am warranted in saying that they will bring from $3,500 to $6,000. Therefore this appropriation will be $10,000, less the value of these discarded instruments, which we cannot transport and rearrange in the new observatory at much less cost than the $10,000 asked for by this amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For continuing addition to cadet barracks, $21,190.54.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find that the item in the paragraph last read swells the aggregate amount of this appropriation very materially beyond the usual appropriations made for this institution. I suppose it must have reference to the same object for which the sum of $2,255 was appropriated in the bill for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. HOLMAN. That provision of the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year is as follows:

For completing repairing roof of cadet barracks, $2,255.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not so.

Mr. HOLMAN. And another provision is:

For completion of main building and one wing for the new hospital for cadets, $11,617.84.

Now, these were the two works that seemed to have been in progress at the time these appropriations were made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. HOLMAN. From the appropriation bill of the current fiscal year.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will look at that bill he will find that the last item in it is this:

For continuing addition to cadet barracks $25,000.

Now, for the same purpose the bill of this year appropriates $21,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then nothing is appropriated by the pending bill for the two items which I have read from the bill for the current fiscal year?

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is nothing in this bill for them.

Mr. HOLMAN. And this appropriation is in continuation of a work for which the bill of last year appropriated $25,000?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Some $4,000 less than was appropriated for the current fiscal year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. When I come to consider the last item of $25,000 in the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year I am not able to see how it occurs that the appropriations for this institution are so materially increased in this bill.

The appropriations for this institution were somewhat modified in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, so as to make the aggregate appropriations for that year for the support of the Military Academy $290,000 in round numbers. For the next fiscal year the aggregate appropriations were $286,000. I concede that last year, in consequence of the appropriation of $25,000 for addition to cadet barracks the appropriations ran up to $322,000.

But the effect of the amendment which has just been adopted, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will perceive, is to swell the appropriations under this bill from $286,000 to $328,000; and to make that amount it was necessary to include the large appropriation of $25,000 for this building for the current fiscal year.

Now, it is true that the appropriation for the next fiscal year for the continuation of the same work is only $21,190.54. Yet the total appropriations are but slightly diminished, and including the $10,000 just adopted they are materially increased. Therefore, this bill, containing no larger appropriations for improvements than the bill of last year, or not materially larger than the bill for the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, swells the total appropriations to large proportions.

Now, it seems to me that this is a branch of the public service which beyond the items for new improvements would not necessarily grow. The same number of pupils and the same number of professors are there, and they are of the same grades, except a slight change which I discover in this bill in regard to an appropriation for a second lieutenant instead of a first lieutenant.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. He cannot find any increase in this bill as compared with the bill of the last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Including the $10,000?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will hear me a moment he will be corrected. He may find an increase of $300 here and $200 there. There is one item of $30. But he will find that, except the item of $10,000 just adopted, the appropriations in this bill are smaller than the appropriations in the bill for the current fiscal year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I made that statement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Some four thousand dollars less than the appropriation of last year for the same object. Now if the gentleman will look at lines 200, 201, and 202, he will find one item amounting to something over $10,000, which has not been in any bill of this kind for thirteen years, and could not have been, because it is an appropriation to replace steam heating apparatus and boilers which have been in use for thirteen years, and have recently been condemned by the inspector of the insurance company in which the policies of insurance are held. Of course this appropriation, in the judgment of the committee, had to be made. The committee could not think of resolving themselves into an insurance office to take the responsibility for the destruction of property and the loss of life which might happen in the event of these boilers bursting.

Then, if the gentleman will look at a previous part of the bill he will find an item of $2,500 intended to bring about a change in the lighting and ventilation of the barrack buildings, an appropriation which in the judgment of the committee (including myself) was absolutely necessary. There has not been a superintendent of that Academy for perhaps thirty years, there has not been a board of visitors I take it for ten years, there has not been a Secretary of War for years past that has not recommended this change. Congress has been again and again assured of its necessity. It is necessary for the purpose of ventilation and light; for the north wing of that cadet building is so dark with the present cut-up, diamond-shaped windows that at noonday it is difficult for the cadets to study their lessons.

By items of this kind—and I might point to others—there is an increase of $12,500, and the amendment just adopted adds $10,000 more. Of course these items swell the bill to the extent of $22,500; yet in spite of this the bill will be less than $7,000 in excess of the appropriations for the present year. I do not think the bill is amenable to the charge made by the gentleman from Indiana, either as a whole or in its separate items; for instead of being swollen immoderately, it has been restricted, I think, to the utmost verge that caution and prudence would allow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only want to call attention to the fact that within six years the expenditures for the Military Academy, taking this bill as the data for the expenditures of the coming year, have grown from $286,604 to $328,857.04.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Three hundred and eighteen thousand, not three hundred and twenty-eight.

Mr. HOLMAN. I include the $10,000 just added by way of amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, that is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now this is a very important increase in the expenditures for a department so limited as the Military Academy naturally is. I trust the Committee on Appropriations are not going to permit the appropriations in all of the great appropriation bills to increase at this rate. If the increase in the other bills should be upon the basis of the present bill, we shall reach beyond even the extraordinary expenditures of the year 1873.

Mr. BLACKBURN. One word in response to the gentleman. I do not know why he goes so far back in selecting years for comparison. The tables before me do not extend further than two years back. I find, however, that the amount to be appropriated by this bill, including the $10,000 just added by way of amendment, will be in round numbers $328,000, while the amount appropriated for this establishment last year in the bill for the present fiscal year is $322,000, and the amount appropriated the year before is $316,000. I cannot for my life detect any frightful swelling of expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been an increase.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is an increase if no allowance be made for improvements that are being put up. There is another item in this very bill which looks to the remodeling of a building. Yet there will be but $6,000 difference between this bill and the bill making appropriations for the current year, and but $12,000 difference between this bill and the bill of two years ago. It seems to me that we are keeping down expenditures pretty closely when in appropriations of more than a quarter of a million of dollars annually—verging toward half a million of dollars, taking one year after another—we are not differing at the outside more than $10,000 or $12,000, while in the mean time we are supplying new steam boilers and heating apparatus that only have to be supplied once in thirteen years, equipping new observatories, which does not have to be done more than once in half a century, as well as conducting other improvements in the remodeling of buildings, &c., which certainly cannot happen every year. In the face of these unusual expenditures, the committee present to you now a bill coming within $6,000 of the appropriations for the present year, and within less than $12,000 of the appropriations made for the last year.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOGE. I move to amend by adding to the bill what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it is further provided, That section 1315 of the Revised Statutes be amended and re-enacted so as to read:

SEC. 1315. From and after the 4th day of March, 1883, appointments of cadets shall be made in the proportion of one from every two Congressional districts, one from every two Territories, including the District of Columbia as one of the Territories for the purposes of this act, and six from the United States at large. They shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the six cadets appointed at large, be actual residents of the Congressional or Territorial districts, or of the District of Columbia, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I have gathered it correctly, as the Clerk has reported it, it is certainly a change of existing law and does not of necessity on its face reduce expenditure. The gentleman offering it probably would argue that the reduction of the number of cadets would be a reduction of expenditure, I have no doubt, but I believe the present Speaker of the House ruled the other day—and I do not undertake to say his ruling was other than correct—that in order to come within the rule of the House the amendment itself, if changing existing law, must upon its very face and of necessity by means of its own operation show a reduction or retrenchment of expenditure. It certainly is not germane, sir, to any portion of this bill.

Mr. HOGE. I desire to say that under the existing law with the number of Congressional districts increased to three hundred and twenty-five, with ten appointed from the nine Territories and the District of Columbia, and ten appointed at large, the number of cadets would consist of three hundred and forty-five. The effect of this amendment is to reduce the number to precisely one-half of that number and one more. That settles the question raised by the gentleman from Kentucky, and the amendment is in order undoubtedly on its face, because while changing existing law it does reduce expenditure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman will answer the other branch of my point of order I made, that it is not germane to any section of the bill.

Mr. HOGE. I offer it as an independent section.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then under the rule it must be shown to be germane. If it changes existing law it must be germane to the paragraph of the bill, and must on its face reduce expenditure. I do not think this amendment is germane to the bill, because there is nothing in the bill which undertakes to regulate the method of appointment or the number to be appointed of cadets to this institution.

Mr. HOGE. This bill provides for the expenses of the Military Academy based upon a certain number of cadets. I propose as a matter relating to these expenditures to reduce the number of cadets one-half. That certainly is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that while the amendment may reduce expenditures, nevertheless it is not germane to the bill under consideration; and the point of order, therefore, is sustained.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move the committee rise and report the bill and amendment to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCOOK reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN demanded the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 8, at the end of line 162, add the following:
"For astronomical instruments to equip the new observatory, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The yeas and nays must be taken on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 4, not voting 74; as follows:

Mr. NORCROSS with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. DAVIS of Missouri.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, with Mr. WEBBER.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. CHALMERS. Although paired with Mr. WATSON, of Pennsylvania, supposing he would vote for the bill, I have voted in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2944) authorizing the Lancaster National Bank of Lancaster, Massachusetts, to change its location and name;

An act (H. R. No. 3210) in reference to the trustees of the Lincoln Monument Association; and

An act (H. R. No. 3550) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced concurrence in the resolution of the thanks of Congress to Hon. James G. Blaine, for his appropriate memorial address on the life and services of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States, before the two Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th of February, 1882.

It further announced the passage of a resolution for the printing of 1,000 additional copies of the list of merchant vessels, published under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for 1881, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. BECK as managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced the passage of the following bills, in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 83) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross; and

A bill (S. No. 293) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT SAINT CHARLES, MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4686) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point from five to eight miles above the City of Saint Charles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES WILLIAM BUTLER.

Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1533, a bill (H. R. No. 4687) for the relief of James William Butler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIS N. ARNOLD.

Mr. HOUK also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1597) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. HOUK also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1587) to pay Hiram Johnson, and other persons therein named, several sums of money therein specified, being the surplus of a military assessment paid by them, and accounted for to the United States, in excess of the amount required for indemnity for which it was levied and collected.

Mr. HOUK. I ask that this bill, with an adverse recommendation, be referred to the Private Calendar.

The bill, with adverse recommendation, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent at this time to present for adoption the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of House Report No. 473, to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 4198) to establish a postal savings depository as a branch of the Post-Office Department, be printed, one-half of which number shall be for the use of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House insist upon its amendments, disagreed to by the Senate, to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL LABOR-LEAGUE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced (by request) a bill (H. R. No. 4688) to organize the National Labor-League Railway Company of America, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent at this time to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. ALDRICH. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 6) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Pensacola, in the place of the one recently destroyed by fire; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I ask the House to hear me for a moment in regard to that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be referred to the committee.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I only ask to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. DAVIDSON. In the fall of 1880——

The SPEAKER. The bill is not to be considered.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. I am satisfied when he hears what I have to say, and if he will permit a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make a brief statement, that he will not object to the request I wish to make.

I wish to say, sir, that a bill similar to this has already been considered by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and a favorable report made. This building was destroyed by fire in 1880, and the Senate immediately appropriated money for constructing another, and at this session has passed another bill. The House committee have considered a similar bill and reported favorably upon it. Now, here is the Senate bill on the Speaker's table covering identically the same ground; and I simply ask, in view of the fact that a House committee has already favorably reported on the bill, that it be passed at this time.

The House a few days since considered and passed a bill for the erection of a public building in Colorado——

Mr. HOLMAN. They should all go to the appropriate committees.

Mr. DAVIDSON. But the committee has already considered a similar bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this reference to committees should be of universal application.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I hope the House will hear a statement from a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite willing to hear the statement, but the gentleman from Indiana has made an objection, and the Chair thinks the time of the House should not be taken up under the circumstances.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. All bills should go to the committees and have their consideration before them. I think it is for the interest of general legislation that this rule should be invariably adhered to.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his objection simply for the purpose of allowing me to make a statement, reserving his right to make the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is taking up unnecessarily the time of the House, unless the gentleman is making an appeal simply to the gentleman who objects.

Mr. ALDRICH. I demand the regular order.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to know what has become of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has been dispensed with by order of the House.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 308) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point within five miles above the city of Saint Charles, Missouri; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to offer an amendment to that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I was out of the House a few moments ago, when other gentlemen in the same category as myself were permitted to make explanations in regard to a matter of personal privilege. I desire to have that opportunity now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose at another time. The House is now engaged in considering another matter.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Very well.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the reference of the bill (S. No. 308) the title of which has been read. In the absence of objection it will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EASTERN SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1046) for the relief of the Eastern Shawnee Indians at the Quapaw agency, Indian Territory; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask for the present consideration of that bill. It is a bill recommended by the Department of the Interior, and provides that a small portion of the fund of these Indians be given them because of their present necessitous circumstances.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. I think it would be better to have all these bills referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid in cash per capita to the Eastern Shawnee Indians at Quapaw agency, Indian Territory, from their uninvested funds in the Treasury, the sum of $2,000, in order to relieve their pressing wants and necessities occasioned by the failure of crops during the summer and fall of 1881.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Kansas, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is this a proposition to take from the principal of the fund belonging to the Indians?

Mr. HASKELL. I understand the bill is framed to take the money from their principal fund, although they have an interest fund annually accruing.

Mr. HOOKER. I am opposed to intrenching on the principal if there is an interest fund accrued from which this amount can be taken.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY OF NEBRASKA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 17) to extend the northern boundary of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not understand that the bills are now being taken from the Speaker's table to be put upon their passage.

The SPEAKER. They are taken up either for reference or for passage, as is provided in the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill has only been read by its title. I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let it be referred.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

HALL OF RECORDS, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 817) making appropriation for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, of a building to be used as a Hall of Records; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MILLS. I think that bill ought to be referred. It raises a very important question.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S BANK PROPERTY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1092) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that that bill be considered now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has a motion been made to refer the bill?

The SPEAKER. A motion to refer has not been made. The question is on the third reading.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time in extenso, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase, for the use of the United States, all those lots and parcels of ground, with the improvements thereon, situated in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, on Pennsylvania avenue between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, and belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, known and described in the original deeds of conveyance to the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company as the west half of lot numbered three, all of lots numbered four, five, six, and seven, and the south half of lot numbered eight, in square numbered two hundred and twenty-one, as laid out and recorded in the original plat or plan of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, at a sum not exceeding $250,000, to be paid and by him placed to the credit of the commissioners of the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, or their successors, on the books of the Treasurer of the United States, for distribution among its creditors, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon proof of a perfect title and the execution to the United States of a deed good and sufficient in law, and in form approved by the Attorney-General; and said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order on that bill that it should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made too late, the bill having been ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill has not been considered at all in the House. I make the point of order that as it makes an appropriation it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCKNER. The reason I ask for the passage of the bill is that a similar bill, word for word, has been considered favorably by two committees of the House, the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on the point of order that as the bill makes an appropriation of money it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Speaker rules that my point of order cannot be entertained, I shall move that the House adjourn. We cannot pass a bill appropriating $250,000 without any consideration. We have had no consideration of the bill here, and I say we are entitled to consider a bill of this magnitude.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made his point of order after the bill had been ordered to a third reading. The Chair thinks the point of order was made too late.

Mr. SPRINGER. I could not hear what was going on. I did not understand the bill was up for action, but thought the reading was being had for information.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn. That will give us a chance to understand this question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX, of New York. A motion to adjourn is surely in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill is past the stage when it can be referred on such a motion as that of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the motion to refer is in order at any time before the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] inquired if a motion had been made to refer the bill, and the Chair stated that such a motion had not been made. Then the gentleman took his seat, and the bill was then ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. COX, of New York. I insist on my motion, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope my colleague will not press that motion for a little while.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman will insist on it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will make a motion which is in order. I move to reconsider the vote by which the third reading of the bill was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The motion which the gentleman from Illinois now makes is in order. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken there were—ayes 59, noes 75.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] to reconsider the vote by which the third reading of the pending bill was ordered.

Mr. CAMP. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion of Mr. CAMP was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. SPRINGER, to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to say a word or two——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is not debatable.

The motion of Mr. SPRINGER was then agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BUCKNER. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have already considered it, and so have the Committee on Banking and Currency. If the gentleman wants to consider this bill, let it go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAPO. I move to amend the motion to refer by substituting the Committee on Banking and Currency for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to amend.

Mr. SPRINGER. What has the Committee on Banking and Currency to do with this bill?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to decide.

The amendment of Mr. CRAPO was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. SPRINGER was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 67, noes 88.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now make the point of order that this bill makes an appropriation, and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Is not that point of order rather late?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is too late.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not care for this bill particularly, but I think it is a little unsafe practice to allow points of order to be made in this way.

Mr. HASKELL. The point of order would be too late, had not the House reconsidered the vote ordering the bill to a third reading. The motions to refer have been voted down and the bill is now clearly subject to a point of order in the ordinary way. I think the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole, and I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. COX, of New York. What has become of the point of order? Has the Chair decided it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided it. The Chair has intimated that the House having entered upon the consideration of this bill it is too late to make the point of order at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this bill had been referred——

Mr. HOOKER. I insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. I made the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

Mr. REED. That is not in order.

Mr. HASKELL. Why not? I desire to ask the Chair if that motion is out of order?

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill would not be in order for the reason that the bill is not now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist upon my motion to adjourn, which is always in order.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to give notice that if the motion to adjourn is voted down I will move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and upon a division there were—ayes 77, noes 96.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HOOKER called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 32 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were 35 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were ordered, and Mr. HOOKER and Mr. HISCOCK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 38, noes 110.

So (one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE ON URGENCY DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. Before the roll is called upon the motion to adjourn, the Chair will announce as the conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, the following: Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. COX of New York.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMP. I understand that our Democratic friends want to hold a caucus this evening, and I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. HOUSE. Before the roll-call is commenced——

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that the gentlemen on the other side of the House desire an adjournment because they wish to hold a caucus this evening. If that is true, this side of the House will not be so discourteous as to prevent their doing so.

Mr. HOUSE. We would like to have the use of the Hall this evening for a meeting, but we do not wish to interfere with the regular business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The call of the roll on the motion to adjourn can be dispensed with by unanimous consent. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the call of the roll is dispensed with.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will this be the unfinished business to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will be the unfinished business on the Speaker's table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the Senate of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 58) for the relief of William H. Gill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOUK, for one week from to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. ERMENTROUT, for the remainder of the week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BRUMM, until March 6, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. TUCKER, for the remainder of this week, on account of important business.

BETSEY A. MOWER.

Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4689) for the relief of Betsey A. Mower; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Before the question is put on the motion to adjourn I would like to say a word.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] withhold the motion to adjourn so as to allow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] to make a personal statement.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir; I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois desires consent to make a personal statement. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I should not, under ordinary circumstances, have troubled the House with any denial or explanation upon the subject of what has appeared in the New York Times, which has been referred to by several gentlemen to-day; but as others have felt it due to themselves that they should deny what is there charged, I have only to say that since I have been a member of this House I have, upon every occasion, voted with that party here who have opposed the star-route thieves, as they have been called. I have followed the lead of my distinguished colleague, [Mr. CANNON,] the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, [General HAWLEY,] who is now in the Senate, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] and all those who have united in opposition to what is commonly denominated the "star-route steal."

Mr. HOOKER. I now renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: The petition of the North Carolina Rolling Mill Company, relative to dredging dam at Calumet Harbor—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the resolutions of the Garden City Division, No. 422, Sons of Temperance, of Chicago, remonstrating against the proposed reduction of tax on alcohol—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers relating to House bill No. 3172, giving reasons why claims for materials, &c., furnished a vessel at her home port should be preferred to mortgage claims—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of members of Bow Creek Alliance and citizens of Phillips County, Kansas, for legislation to regulate charges for railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 1, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 30, 1882, a report of the Adjutant-General containing reports of the commanding generals of the divisions of the Missouri and the Pacific in relation to Indians held as prisoners under orders of the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the New York Historical Society in favor of the purchase by Congress of the Benjamin Franklin papers and documents, now in London; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. McDILL. I present joint resolutions of the Legislature of Iowa in reference to the patent laws, and I desire that they may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. I think they had better be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They can be read, but could be printed in the RECORD without reading. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Patents, as follows:

Joint resolution No. 3.

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, 1. That in view of the vexations, litigation, and extortions forced upon the people of this State by barb-wire, drive-well, and other patent-right monopolies, we do hereby earnestly request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence to have the patent laws of the United States so amended that while they will secure due and ample reward to the inventive genius of our country, they will also protect the people from the recurrence of such unjust exactions.

2. Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved February 23, 1882.

STATE OF IOWA,
Office Secretary of State:

I, J. A. T. Hull, secretary of state of the State of Iowa, hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of joint resolution No. 3 passed by the nineteenth General Assembly and on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at Des Moines, this 24th day of February, A. D. 1882.

[SEAL.] J. A. T. HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a petition of the Historical Society of New Jersey, praying Congress to make an appropriation for the purchase of the Benjamin Franklin papers; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. McPHERSON. I hold in my hand several petitions from glass-blowers and those engaged in the manufacture of glass, not only in New Jersey but in other States, praying Congress for some correction of the tariff laws. They state that "the tariff laws of this country were evidently formed for the protection of the manufacturing interests of the country, and the import duties imposed upon manufactured demijohns were wisely laid. Yet the spirit of this law is being constantly violated, and the law itself nullified, by the practice of certain importers of manufactured glass, who cause to be shipped to this country demijohns of various sizes filled with vinegar or other fluids, which are either free of duty or on which the duties are very low; on their arrival here they are emptied of their contents and sold in our markets, to the great disadvantage of our trade and detriment of the glass-manufacturing interest." This they also state to be true of wine, beer, ale, and mineral-water bottles.

The petition from which I read is numerously signed by citizens of Millville City, in New Jersey. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, together with one from Glassborough, New Jersey, another from Williamstown, New Jersey, another of like character from Ellenville, New York, and another from Stroudsburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of citizens of Indiana, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of H. W. Eldrege and 320 others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the abolition of polygamy in the Territory of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAIR presented a memorial of citizens of Concord, New Hampshire, condemning polygamous Mormonism, and in favor of legislation to effect its abolition; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a resolution of the San José Camp Army and Navy Republican League of San José, California, remonstrating against the repeal of the arrears of pensions act; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY presented a petition of James L. Stringham and 32 others, citizens of Michigan, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of ministers and elders of Presbyterian churches in New Jersey, praying for reform in the method of appointment to the civil service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1046) for the relief of the Eastern Shawnee Indians at the Quapaw agency, Indian Territory.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4454) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4680) to repeal discriminating duties on tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, insisted upon by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. S. S. COX of New York, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 58) for the relief of William H. Gill; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify lands for agricultural college purposes to the State of Kansas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1286) amending "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies,' approved March 13, 1874," reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1186) to provide suitable agricultural lands for the Southern band of Ute Indians in lieu of lands heretofore provided for allotment to them, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 297) for the relief of Mark Walker, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 536) to refer the claim of Captain Horatio Nelson, late master of the steamship Morning Star, to the Court of Claims for adjudication, have instructed me to report the same adversely, and ask that it be indefinitely postponed. The bill was originally referred to the Committee on Claims, and reported from the Committee on Claims, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1343) to place John Jones, late captain of the First Minnesota Battery, on the retired list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1344) for the relief of Myra Clark Gaines; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1345) granting pensions to Wilson W. Brown and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1346) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1347) for a public building at Opelousas, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1348) for a public building at Shreveport, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MCPHERSON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1349) to extend the corporate existence of the national banking associations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1350) to amend the general incorporation law of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1351) granting a pension to Lewis J. Blair; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1352) to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1353) to prohibit the issue of bank notes or currency by national banks which may be organized or reorganized after July 1, 1882; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST. I see from the papers this morning that the Attorney-General has delivered an official opinion to the effect that under existing laws, without any additional legislation by Congress, the national banks can continue their existence with the same privileges and powers now conferred by existing statutes. By the report of the Comptroller of the Currency it appears that three hundred and ninety-three of these institutions will go out of existence between the 1st day of May, 1882, and the 1st of February, 1883. Without some legislation on the part of Congress, the present banking system must continue for an indefinite period of time, according to the opinion to which I have referred.

I simply desire to bring this question fairly and squarely before the representatives of the people. For that reason I have introduced the bill, which provides that that feature of the present law which confers upon national banks the power to issue currency upon bonds of the United States shall cease as to all banks organized or reorganized after the 1st of July, 1882.

I believe, if I may be permitted to say so, that the present Committee on Finance are opposed to any such legislation—I presume that they are—but all I ask of them is that this bill shall not be sent to the tomb of the Capulets, as other financial measures of a similar character have been, but that at any rate they will accord me the courtesy and the Senate the privilege of a fair discussion and vote upon this bill, whether they report it favorably or unfavorably.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCDILL (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1354) to establish depositories and provide for the distribution of public documents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JONAS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1355) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLAIR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1356) for the relief of Betsey A. Mower; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1357) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

COMMON-SCHOOL EDUCATION.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Whereas the property and happiness of the people, the preservation of liberty and of the republican form of government, depend upon mental discipline and the general diffusion of knowledge, which in their turn depend upon the education of the masses of the community; and

Whereas the preservation of the National Government, republican in form, is as much dependent upon the education of the people as is that of the States; and

Whereas if ignorance is an evil the means for its removal should be most strongly directed where that evil is most extensive, especially since illiteracy and poverty exist together while wealth and intelligence also go hand in hand: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the duty of the General Government in self-defense and for self-preservation to provide the means necessary whenever the people of the States, as such, are unable or would be disproportionately burdened by the taxation requisite, or for any reason fail to give every child a good common-school education.

Be it further resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to report at an early day a bill, with suitable safeguards to secure its economical and proper application, making appropriation of such sums of money as shall be deemed, when combined with the revenues derived from local taxation and the income from local funds, sufficient to give to all the children of whatever race or color in all the States and Territories of the United States the opportunity to secure a good common-school education.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the resolution be printed and lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON AFRICAN TRADE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate the reports, or such parts of them as may be compatible with the public interests, of Commodore R. W. Shufeldt, United States Navy, of his cruise around the world in the United States steamer Ticonderoga.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLUMB. Let it be read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is suggested to me that as the words "as may be compatible with the public interests" are inserted, the resolution had better be addressed to the President; or perhaps it would be as well to strike out the words "as may be compatible with the public interests."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which does the Senator suggest?

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the words be stricken out.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the resolution be further amended by providing that if any portion of this report is necessary for the public interest, it be communicated, so as not to presume that any pleasure tour which the commodore may have taken would not be compatible with the public interests. It might be something which the public might have very little interest in.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let it be addressed to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Rhode Island will be read.

The resolution, as modified, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate the reports, or such parts of them as may be compatible with the public interests, of Commodore R. W. Shufeldt, United States Navy, of his cruise around the world in the United States steamer Ticonderoga.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I presume that these reports will be examined before they are ordered to be printed, because we ought certainly to know that they are of some public value before they are printed. I suppose the Committee on Printing, or some other committee of this body, will be expected to examine them in order to see whether they are of such a character as ought to be printed for public information.

Mr. ALLISON. They are not to be printed by this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Delaware that this is simply a request to the President to communicate the reports to the Senate, and then the Senate can dispose of the matter as it pleases after they come here.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have from the Senator from Rhode Island some statement as to the character of this report, so as to indicate its public necessity.

Mr. ANTHONY. Two or three years ago Commodore Shufeldt was sent to the coast of Africa on an expedition with a view of opening trade and commerce, and his report, I am assured by the Secretary of the Navy, whose communication I hold in my hand, is of very great value and importance. I thought it would not be amiss to have it presented to the Senate, and then the Committee on Printing can decide whether it is best to make it public or not. It seems a useless expense to send an expedition to a barbarous country for the purpose of opening trade and commerce, and then keep the report upon the files of the Department without giving the public any light upon it.

Mr. PLUMB. I would not care to follow one useless expense by another. It may be true, as the Senator from Rhode Island states, that this is a very interesting report. I do not doubt that; and I did not rise for the purpose of suggesting a doubt of it; but I rose to make an inquiry. There are classes of unofficial people in this world who are obliged to print their own books, and I want the class of official people who have the Government in their employ for that purpose to be limited as much as possible. I not only want the class limited as much as possible, but I want the character of the printing limited as much as possible, and limited, if possible, also to that which is of public utility, so as not to publish the general observations of the class in Government employ in competition with private people who have to pay for their own type-setting and their own paper.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator will introduce a resolution providing that officials shall be at the expense of printing their own reports, it would certainly save a great deal of public printing; but whether it would conduce to the public interest I doubt very much. When these reports come in they will be referred to some committee which will decide upon the propriety of publishing them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION REPORT.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the views of Senator Morton on the Chinese question, heretofore printed, be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

PICTURE OF GENERAL SCOTT.

Mr. VOORHEES offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the propriety of purchasing Noyes's equestrian picture of General Winfield Scott.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that it be ordered that the manuscript copy of the remarks of Miss Susan B. Anthony, made before the Judiciary Committee in a former year, now on its files, be transferred to the files of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, which desires the manuscript.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, there being no objection.

JOSEPH R. SHANNON.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the present session a bill (S. No. 74) to provide for the payment of the claim of Joseph R. Shannon, of Louisiana, was introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims. The bill was reported favorably by that committee, allowing him compensation for the value of the steamer A. W. Quarrier. Similar action had also been taken by the Committee on Claims in the Forty-sixth Congress, and I believe also in the Forty-fifth Congress. Each time the bill had been reported favorably. The bill was recently recommitted to the Committee on Claims. Some time ago I had certain information which led me to doubt whether the report made by the committee in the Forty-sixth Congress, at which time I was chairman of the committee, and also at the present Congress, was correct. I thereupon addressed a letter to the Secretary of War asking that the rebel archives might be thoroughly examined and that all data and information obtainable from them be reported to me with the opinion of the Department upon the merits of the case, sending the Secretary of War a copy of the bill and the report as made at the present Congress. I now hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary addressed to me and his accompanying report. I move that the letter and report of the Secretary of War, with the accompanying report of the Second Comptroller, be printed and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PERUVIAN, CHILIAN, AND BOLIVIAN COMPLICATIONS.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senate to consider the resolutions which I reported yesterday and which went over.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolutions, reported yesterday by Mr. WINDOM from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire into all the circumstances concerning the alleged loss or abstraction from the office of the Secretary of State of certain papers and documents mentioned in the message of the President sent to the Senate on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1882, and report thereon, with such recommendations as may appear to it proper in the premises; and that it inquire into all the circumstances of the alleged action of the diplomatic representatives of the United States at the Republics of France and Peru in being personally concerned in any contracts or arrangements of a public or private nature with the governments of either of said countries, or with corporations or associations having relations with or asserting claims against or grants derived from either of the same; and also whether any member of Congress or any other officer of the United States has had any personal interest or concern in any of the matters before mentioned, and report thereon, with such recommendations as may appear to it proper in the premises.

Resolved, That for the purposes named in the foregoing resolution any three members of said committee shall constitute a quorum.

Resolved, That said committee have power to send for persons and papers in regard to the before-mentioned inquiries, and that it have leave to sit during the sittings of the Senate.

Resolved, That the expenses incurred in the execution of the foregoing resolutions be paid on the certificate of the chairman of said committee out of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to move an amendment to the resolutions to embrace more specifically the object that I had in view in offering the resolution which was sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations upon the motion of the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I will send to the desk the language which I propose to incorporate in the first resolution of the committee, to be inserted after the word "mentioned," on the second line from the end of their first resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Delaware will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "mentioned," in next to the last line of the first resolution, it is proposed to insert:

And whether any one officially connected with the Government of the United States is interested directly or indirectly with any such alleged contracts, in which the mediation as aforesaid of the United States is recited to be a condition. And that the said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and make report of their proceedings in the premises to the Senate at the earliest possible day.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the committee believe that the first resolution as proposed covers all of the power proposed by the Senator from Delaware; but, as it does not materially change it in the estimation of members of the committee with whom I have consulted, I shall not oppose the addition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Delaware has got more in that amendment than he wants himself, about sending for persons and papers; all that is in a subsequent resolution of the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. I will state to the Senate that the Secretary has entirely misapprehended the amendment which I offered. I do not propose to repeat an inquiry as to the question of personal interest. That is amply and fully covered by the language of the committee. The point to which my amendment relates and which I consider after all the most important of these questions involved, is whether or not, with or without interest on the part of agents of the United States, intervention by the United States in the affairs of neutral governments has been impliedly or expressly pledged. There is the danger. The war-making power, the power of peace and war rests in the Congress of the United States; and to us it is a matter of the gravest moment that there should be no such implication or no such pledge of the great powers of this country by way of intermediation by any one except it be in accordance with the grave execution of powers under the Constitution.

I ask the Secretary, if my friend from Vermont will permit me, to read my language as I wish to have it.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Delaware having pointed out his amendment, I understood that read to be the amendment which he had shown to me; and hence I misunderstood the Secretary's reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is it to come in?

Mr. BAYARD. If the Secretary will read the language now as I have submitted it to him, the Senator will hear.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "mentioned," in the second line from the close of the first resolution, it is proposed to insert:

That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, instructed to inquire whether any promise or stipulation, by which the intervention by the United States in the controversies existing between Chili and Peru or Chili and Bolivia has been expressly or impliedly given by any person or persons officially connected with the Government of the United States; or whether the influence of the Government of the United States has been in any way exerted, promised, or intimated in connection with, or in relation to, the said alleged contracts, by any one officially connected with the Government of the United States, and report thereon with such recommendations as may appear to it proper in the premises.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that to come in?

Mr. WINDOM. After the word "mentioned," I understand, on the line next to the last of the first resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this is to come in after the word "mentioned" in the second line from the bottom of the first resolution, as I understand, and it will then read:

And also it is instructed to inquire, &c.——

Mr. WINDOM. "Inquire whether any promise or stipulation," &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "And whether any promise or stipulation," down to the word "condition." The instruction about sending for persons and papers is already in.

I only wish to say that the committee thought the explicit and sweeping language of the first resolution as reported, directing the committee to inquire into all the circumstances of these transactions in every aspect, embraced all that the Senator from Delaware had named in his resolution, and did not confine it to such a specific inquiry. The object of the committee was to make the inquiry so sweeping that no possible circumstance affecting the public interests of the United States could escape; but if the Senator desires to have that added, certainly I for one have not the least objection to it.

Mr. BAYARD. I so prefer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I see in the third resolution the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, but I see no provision for taking the testimony of the persons who may be sent for. I do not know but that that may be implied, but it seems to me in a matter of so much importance there ought to be some provision for taking the statements of these people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That rests upon the general principle of parliamentary law. A committee that is empowered to send for persons and papers is empowered by consequence with the right to examine those persons under oath and to read the papers.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand; but suppose this committee of three (because I see three are to act) do that, how will the Senate, unless a report is made of this examination, know what is done?

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we are instructed to report on every one of these topics.

Mr. ALLISON. Will you report the testimony?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just as it is in all cases of committees. The committee reports the testimony usually. If it does not, the Senate directs the committee to report the testimony; but as a matter of duty ordinarily every committee reports the testimony upon which its action is founded. The resolution is the usual form in that respect certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Should there not be an express authority to administer oaths?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The power to send for persons and papers covers every thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa propose an amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I do not propose any amendment. I do not see very well how the testimony can be taken in short-hand and reported to the Senate under the resolution as it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee have a short-hand clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolutions as amended.

The resolutions as amended were agreed to.

HERMAN BIGGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Proceedings under the Anthony rule will now commence.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask to take up Senate bill No. 173, which was laid over without prejudice some days ago in my absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 173) for the relief of Herman Biggs will be taken up at the request of the Senator from New Jersey, having been passed over without prejudice on account of his absence.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to authorize the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to place on the list of retired officers of the Army the name of Herman Biggs, with the rank of captain of staff, this being the actual rank in the regular Army held by him when, in action, he received the wound from which he suffers permanent disability. No pay or allowance is to accrue or be paid Biggs prior to his confirmation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Acting Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SEWELL December 13, 1881, from the Committee on Military Affairs, which appears in the RECORD, page 1006.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have the Senator who reported this bill state to us what the general principle of the committee is in cases of this kind. Here is a gentleman, no doubt worthy, who resigned his office in the Army at the close of the war, as the report says, and having been wounded undoubtedly receives a pension, like thousands of other soldiers, officers, and privates, who left the military service of their country at the close of the war. Now it is proposed in this case, after fifteen years, to put this particular gentleman, who was wounded and had been a good soldier and who terminated his connection with the Army at the close of the war, upon the retired list of the Army of the United States.

That list has now been increased up, I believe, to four hundred; and it is, as was stated the other day by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] full, and to it a great many officers of the Army of the United States who have served ever since the war, sick and diseased and waiting for rest, desire to go; but they cannot resign without going into poverty; they cannot render the service that they wish to, because they are sick and diseased and wounded and disabled; and they cannot go on the retired list because it is full. And yet here is a case of a worthy gentleman who resigned fifteen years ago, who is to add one more to this retired list, and thus delay by that much the regular retirement of the officers who have served all the time since.

For one I should be glad to understand the principle upon which this goes. Undoubtedly there are hundreds of other officers just as worthy—and that is saying a great deal—as this gentleman who left either the regular or volunteer service at the close of the war, who have been suffering ever since from wounds honorably received in it, and who are in need of the support that being placed on the retired list at three-fourths of the regular pay, I think it is, gives, just as much as this gentleman.

Is this then favoritism, pity and sympathy for a particular case that is brought to our notice, or is it intended to be a test and leader in a public system of treating everybody alike on the principles of fair play and providing retired pay for all the disabled officers and soldiers as well—but I will leave out the soldiers, because the retired list has not been made for them—all the disabled officers who have ever gallantly served their country and who now need it? If that is it, that is one thing; but if it is to make a special exception in favor of a particular gentleman who happens to have strong friends, then I do not believe in it. I believe in fair play and equality, and I do not believe in putting into the retired list of the Army gentlemen who have long since departed from the Army, to the exclusion—for that is what it amounts to unless you increase your retired list enormously—of worthy officers who have served ever since the war on the plains and elsewhere, and whose condition is such that the public service really requires that they should be retired, but that cannot be because we are continually filling up the retired list with somebody else.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I was unable to concur with the report of the majority. My mind led me to the same conclusion stated this morning by the Senator from Vermont. I believe that the retired list was designed and intended for cases of old worthy officers of the United States Army who had become worn out in the service, had passed the age when they could take up any pursuit in civil life and make a living; and the Government having got the benefit of the best years of their life, it would be unjust to turn them out to die when they got to be old. That was my view of it. That was what I believed the list was provided for. While I felt great sympathy for this gentleman—for the case is undoubtedly that of a most valuable officer—yet when his bill has been before the committee, as it has been several times, I have been constrained to vote against it, and for the reason which I have stated.

When the case came up which was discussed here a few days ago, (although I had known the gentleman whose case was presented for forty years intimately, and my feelings toward him were of the kindest character, and he certainly deserved the gratitude of the American people,) believing that it was a departure from the principle, from the idea, from the intent of the law, I was compelled to vote against that bill, and as a matter of course I voted in committee against this and shall do so here.

I only desired to make this statement that the Senator from Vermont and others might see that in this view the committee does not agree. I have expressed my individual views, and I desire to state that I am not influenced in the slightest degree by personal considerations, for had I been I should probably have voted for the bill the other day. I do it as a matter of justice. I think the retired list was designed and intended for worn out, disabled, and aged officers of the United States Army; and if that be the intent, then if you take one citizen up because he is meritorious and put him on that list, you can take any number of citizens who have performed valuable services in the late war and put them there, and the end of it will be that we shall have really a pension list at a high rate of pension that will break down the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, at the invitation of the Senator from Vermont I will state that the action of the committee was based on this fact: this officer was entitled to be retired in 1865; but supposing that he could get along without help from the Government he resigned the service. Since then his disability has increased to such an extent that to-day he is unable to support himself. By reason of the injuries received from wounds, he was entitled to be placed on the ordinary grade of pension, and he has been advanced from time to time, as his disability increased, to $30 a month, which is not near enough to pay half his doctor's bills, but it is all that the pension laws will allow.

This bill was before the Forty-sixth Congress and was passed in the Senate, after a very full debate on the floor of this body, by the very large vote of 45 to 5. There was a favorable report agreed on by the House committee, but the bill was not reached. It is an exceptional case in this particular, that the officer to-day, after seventeen years, only asks what he was entitled to then, under the rules governing the retirement of officers of the Army. The report contains a fair statement of the case, and in it will be found a letter from Quartermaster-General Meigs to Senator EDMUNDS, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1879.

MY DEAR SIR: Herman Biggs graduated at West Point in 1856. He was chief quartermaster of the expedition to North Carolina under command of General Burnside, and afterward of the forces at Fort Monroe, on the York and on the James, commanded by General Butler.

He expended faithfully, prudently, discreetly, and honestly $16,000,000 of the funds of Quartermaster's Department, and received and distributed much military material purchased and shipped to him by other officers of the Quartermaster's Department.

He gave in all this service entire satisfaction to his commanders, and rendered most laborious, efficient, and useful service to the country.

In October, 1865, the war being over, somewhat weakened in health, believing that he could make a living outside of the Army, and desiring to be entirely independent, he resigned.

He was then advised by his surgeon to go on the retired list, as he might ultimately suffer from a splinter wound received during the bombardment of Fort Johnston, at New Berne.

Preferring entire independence, and not then considering the injury important, he preferred to resign absolutely.

For thirteen years he has supported himself and family and the expenses of a constantly growing injury without cost to the United States.

He now finds that he has an open wound, and injured articulation; that a surgical operation, probably more than one, will be necessary. He has not the right to the skillful service of the Army surgeons, and the expenses caused by his wound and the disability resulting from it are grievous burdens.

He desires some relief from Congress, and he is anxious that you who will vote on his application may know the grounds of it.

I give him, an old officer of the Quartermaster's Department, reliance upon whom in those stirring times was a comfort to me, this letter, hoping that in the midst of your occupations you may be able to give him a few minutes' hearing, in order that he may be able to present his case fully to you.

I know the absorbing occupation of a Senator's time, but a few minutes may, I hope, be given to a good soldier and faithful servant of the country.

That he has not been an expense to the Government for thirteen years should not in equity prejudice his claim now.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General, Brevet Major-General, U. S. A.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
United States Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this probably is one of a dozen cases on the Calendar. We have already met two or three in the short time we have been operating under the Anthony rule. I think the Senate ought to determine the question involved by one definite vote. I can scarcely conceive a case where an officer who resigned at the close of the war and received his one year's extra pay under the operation of the laws as they then stood should come back after a period of fifteen or sixteen years——

Mr. SEWELL. Let me interrupt the Senator. The one year's pay did not apply to this case.

Mr. SHERMAN. He was entitled upon resignation, after the close of the war, to one year's extra pay, and no doubt drew it.

Mr. BUTLER. I think that was only where officers were mustered out on the reduction of the Army, not in a case of voluntary resignation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot be mistaken about the law authorizing in the reorganization of the Army all officers of the regular Army, then composed of about fifty thousand men, upon resigning voluntarily, one year's extra pay, whether this gentleman got it or not. This gentleman served, it seems, as a quartermaster, no doubt efficiently and well; but he resigned from the service. If he is now entitled to a pension he can get it under the law; if he is entitled to back pension he can get his arrears of pension under existing law; but to come in now and be placed on the retired list after the expiration of fifteen or sixteen years, and prevent some officer who has during all those years performed the severe labor of an officer in the regular Army on the western frontier, would be an act of gross injustice.

I will not in any case—though I know there are persons of that kind from my State whose interests I should be bound to protect and represent—vote to restore an officer who voluntarily resigned at the close of the war back to the Army, to take the place on the retired list of a man who has during all that long period of time served faithfully as an officer of the Army. The exceptional case mentioned by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] was that of General Grant, I suppose. I would not have voted for the bill placing General Grant on the retired list but for the fact that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] accepted an amendment which made that an exception, as it was, to all others and made it an addition to the regular number of three hundred on the retired list. General Grant ought not himself to have received a retiring pension so as to stand in the way of any other honorable soldier who had served during all this long period of time.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator will pardon me a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have but five minutes, and I want to get through.

Mr. MAXEY. The point I made was that whenever you break down the principle and let any citizen come in, there is no barrier.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think General Grant's case ought to have stood by itself. He was taken from the military service and promoted one degree by being made President of the United States. He did not resign his commission in the sense that this gentleman did. He was made Commander-in-Chief of the Army as President of the United States, and I believe the people of the United States ought, by a voluntary movement on the part of their Congress at the end of his term as President, to have restored him to his old place and have retired him from active service, so that he would not have stood in the way of those who had been promoted in the regular way. I think that would have been justified by the general sentiment of the people, but that case was peculiar. He does not stand in the way of any other officer.

I know of many cases of this kind, and if it is once settled that a former Army officer who is diseased or is disabled shall have the right to appeal to Congress to go on the retired list, not only will the retired list gradually be swelled far beyond the dimensions it has now, but gross injustice will be done to officers. As I said the other day, I know myself of men who have suffered by wounds and disease who are now stationed at frontier posts, having recently served in Indian wars, and they, disabled, sick, weak, feeble, unable to return home, are unable to go to the retired list simply because there is no room, there are no vacancies there, and they have to suffer and bear and have to remain far away from the comforts of home, sick and disabled. I will not by my vote crowd off any such soldier who has served in war after war in the military service, in the civil war and in the Indian wars since that time, from his honorable retirement on this list by restoring any one who fifteen or twenty years ago resigned voluntarily his office.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I entirely agree with the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Texas, because their remarks indicate to my mind that the judgment of the Senate is that there should be a halt on taking persons from civil life and putting them on the retired list. We did the other day take a civilian who was not in indigent circumstances or in feeble health, and not only put him on the retired list, but made a place to put him there the equal of the highest officer in the Army. I have no doubt the case now before the Senate is a more meritorious case than that of General Grant. I was opposed to putting General Grant on the retired list, notwithstanding he had been one of the most distinguished generals of this age or of any other age, and I am equally opposed to taking men who have been out of the service for any particular length of time, and simply because they are becoming old or decrepit, restoring them to the Army and placing them on the retired list.

Why, sir, if we keep on in the way we are going, pensioning everybody who wants a pension, putting everybody who wants to be placed there on the retired list, we shall before long have a very large percentage of the American people supported by the residue of the citizens of this country by taxation.

I am opposed to the multiplication of pensions and retired lists, and I hope this bill will not pass, and I hope, if I may be allowed to express that hope, that the bill which we unfortunately passed the other day will be killed at the other end of the Capitol. I think the judgment of the American people is, that we acted unadvisedly. I hope those in the other end of the Capitol who have to deal with that question will rectify the mistake we have made.

Mr. HAWLEY. I admit there is some force in what the Senator from Ohio has said, but I should be very glad if the Senate would give some advice to the Military Committee, or would indicate in some way what is to be done in a certain class of cases.

I stated the other day that this case of Captain Biggs was in my opinion a fair exception to a general rule. There are cases in which officers may very properly be restored to the service, as gentlemen call it, and put on the retired list. They are not really restored to the service. The disability in Captain Biggs's case was incurred during the war. It was a very serious disability. He was unfit for service, and he might have sought the retired list. I do not know what the pay would then have been, but he fancied that he would be able to take care of himself. He has done so for thirteen or fourteen years, but he is now utterly broken down. He would like the advantage of that which he might have taken, but from which he has saved the Government during all this period.

The Senator from Ohio says there are officers waiting to go upon the retired list, officers now in the Army who have been serving their country since the war, in Indian campaigns perhaps, and have become disabled there. I know it; I see the difficulty. I myself wish the retired list was enlarged. I do not know how that will strike Congress, but I myself wish that it might be enlarged. The Senator says these gentlemen have been serving the country since the war, while Biggs and others have been out. I say that Captain Biggs has been serving the country for seventeen years suffering under a severe wound, and there are very few officers who have been serving the country with so much suffering and pain to themselves as he has for these dozen years and more, and especially for five or six years during which this wound had become extremely painful.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. In a moment. Another point: something was said when this case was up before about the special favors given to officers, and a sort of contrast was made between the private soldier and the officer. Let me make one. The pensions for the soldier are very generous. I do not now go into the question of whether it might have been done better or not. I think it might have been in the case of the arrears bill. I think more might have been done by way of granting a good sum annually for relief, and less by way of giving a large sum in gross for past sufferings. But here is the difference between them, in which the private soldier has an advantage, and I do not complain of it: when a private soldier becomes disabled, as Captain Biggs is, he may go to any one of some half a dozen homes that are grand hotels, that are palaces of themselves, where the soldier lives with every natural want fully satisfied, pleasant rooms, pleasant quarters, clothing, and food.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many people can be accommodated at those homes?

Mr. HAWLEY. Substantially all who apply, and if they cannot, the Government will enlarge them. The Government has undertaken to provide a home for each absolutely disabled soldier, and it will be obliged to carry it out, and those hospitals will perhaps be enlarged. I do not know whether the present ones are large enough or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many people will they accommodate?

Mr. HAWLEY. I call attention to that distinction between the private soldier and the officer, that you take the private soldier who is in the situation of Captain Biggs and provide for his every want. Now Biggs receives not enough to pay his doctor's bills, absolutely bankrupt and broken down with his wound. He might have been placed on the retired list when he resigned; he ought to have sought that relief; but he thought he could save you the money, and now in his agony and poverty he finds he cannot longer do it, and he would like to go on the retired list.

That is the whole case. I admit the difficulties of it, but there has got to be some better provision made. Give the officer at least as good a chance as you give the private soldier.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is in order by unanimous consent. He has spoken once already on this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am perfectly willing to be in order by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the Senator from Vermont will proceed. ["Consent."] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut how many persons the present soldiers' homes of the United States will accommodate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I refer the Senator to the annual reports.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Connecticut is not really able to give any better answer, then I must take that. I supposed that I had a constitutional right to the annual reports without applying to my friend from Connecticut; still I am glad to go to them with his indorsement. Then I will venture to ask any other member of the Committee on Military Affairs who either is in better humor or is better informed than my friend from Connecticut, about how many people the present soldiers' homes can accommodate. I dare say my friend from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] can give me a little light on that subject.

Mr. MAXEY. I have not had occasion to make the investigation to enable me to give a correct answer. There is a sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs intrusted with the investigation of the soldiers' homes business. I believe the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] is a member of that sub-committee. Some one of that sub-committee might tell.

Mr. HARRISON. I heard some appeal to me, but I was not able to gather the direction of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana did not hear what the Senator from Texas said.

Mr. MAXEY. I stated that there was a sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs specially intrusted with looking into the business of the soldiers' homes, which can answer much more intelligently than I can, and I thought the Senator from Indiana was a member of that sub-committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I am a member of that sub-committee, but it has in its charge simply the Soldiers' Home in Washington for soldiers of the regular Army. Volunteer homes are not embraced in that inquiry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before this is ended I will take time to refer to the reports. I think there is a soldiers' home at Dayton, in the State of Ohio, I think there is one in the State of Wisconsin; there is one at Augusta, in the State of Maine, if I am not mistaken; I think there is one down at Norfolk or in that vicinity.

Mr. BUTLER. At Hampton.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And there is one in Washington for the regular Army, as has been stated, and not for the volunteers. Now, then, when you take the pension-roll of private soldiers of the United States amounting, as the chairman of the Committee on Pensions might tell me if he were here, to more than one hundred thousand, I presume, you would find probably that these five or six places that are now full and running over, as I believe, would hardly put the common soldiers on any better footing than the officers of the Army are. So I do not think the argument of the Senator from Connecticut is very well grounded upon the idea that the private soldier has a better chance than the officer, the private soldier getting for his pension eight dollars a month or fifteen dollars or twenty dollars according to the nature of his case, and the officer getting a much higher one for the same grade of disability.

There is another thing about this, besides the principle of it that we have already discussed, that it is worth while to know about. I have the impression that this gentleman, Mr. Biggs, is receiving a pension. I see by his military history that he was made brevet-colonel on the 13th of March, 1865, for faithful and meritorious service, and that he resigned on the 9th of October, 1865. If he had a pension, I take it he gets a pension therefore on the grade that he held when he resigned. How much that pension is we do not know.

Mr. SEWELL. The highest pension of any officer up to the grade of colonel is $30 a month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the Senator from New Jersey can tell us at what time Colonel Biggs received his pension, when he first was put on the pension-roll.

Mr. SEWELL. That I cannot say; but he gets a pension now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I find a letter from the then Secretary of War, Mr. McCrary, dated the 21st of January, 1879, in which he says that he thinks the case of General Biggs is such—he calls him general; that is higher still—

> It is my opinion that Congress should pass an act either permitting his name to be placed upon the retired list or upon the pension-roll.

That was in 1879. If the Secretary was sufficiently informed to write any thing upon the subject, it would seem that General Biggs was not then on the pension-roll. If not, why not? If he resigned in 1865 on account of a then existing disability or wound or illness, there was the pension-law then. I should be glad to be informed how it is that the obtaining of this pension was so much delayed.

Mr. SEWELL. My impression is that he had a pension for a period of years, commencing with the low grade of $8 a month and increasing every few years in proportion to the disability until he got up to the full limit of $30 a month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope by the time this bill comes up to-morrow the Senator from New Jersey will be able to ascertain exactly how the fact is.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4222) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4454) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburgh, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 4680) to repeal discriminating duties on tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese; but by an understanding of yesterday the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has a right to address the Senate on the bill proposed by him.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, in once more calling the attention of the Senate to the pressing and constantly increasing necessity for additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, I desire to state fully and distinctly every step taken by the committees on that subject up to the present time. This is due to the Senate as well as to the committees; it is also due to the intelligent people outside of Congress who are taking a deep interest in this work, and at the same time it will serve, I hope, to correct certain erroneous impressions which have led, in a few instances, to harsh and unfounded criticisms. It will be remembered that during the long session of the Forty-sixth Congress strenuous and persistent efforts were made on this floor to secure the favorable action of Congress in behalf of the Library in its overcrowded and dangerous condition. The result of our labors at that time was the enactment of the law of June 8, 1880, which I will read, in order that everybody's memory may be refreshed as to its precise terms and meaning:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a joint select committee, consisting of three Senators and three members of the House of Representatives, shall have power to employ, as soon as may be, at the expense of the United States, three persons of suitable skill and attainments, who, or a majority of whom, shall, with the approval of said committee, carefully examine and consider what practicable and beneficial changes can be made in and of the Capitol building, in the District of Columbia, for the better accommodation of the Houses of Congress and of the Congressional Library, having in view especially the need of better ventilation, light, and exposure to the open air of the legislative halls, and the convenience of communication between them, and between them and the Library, and the need of greater space and better arrangement thereof for the Library. They shall, if they find any mode or modes of accomplishing the ends aforesaid practicable and beneficial, cause proper plans, designs, and estimates of cost to be made thereof, and submit the same to said committee, which shall report the same to Congress at the earliest practicable time. And said committee shall in any case make a full report on the subject, and especially whether such mode of providing for the Library is preferable to the erection of a separate building for that purpose.

SEC. 2. That said joint select committee is also authorized and directed at the same time to examine the question of a site outside the Capitol for the Library of Congress, and report to Congress what locations would be most suitable for the Library and afford the highest advantages for its future growth and permanent accommodation, and also in the case of each site the probable cost of the same and of the building.

SEC. 3. The sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes named in this act, which shall be paid on vouchers approved by said committee.

Approved June 8, 1880.

By this act of Congress the committee for which I speak to-day was created, and all its powers and duties defined. The first power granted was "to employ, as soon as may be, at the expense of the United States, three persons of suitable skill and attainments" in architecture for the accomplishment of certain objects specified in the act. I wish to emphasize this fact. The Congress of the United States authorized the committee to employ three persons and no more, and to receive plans, designs, and estimates from them, and from nobody else, and to report such plans, designs, and estimates, and none other, back to Congress. I am satisfied now, after nearly two years' active experience on this subject, that the law is wise and right on this point. While there are many excellent architects in the United States, yet it was not difficult to select three who fairly represented the enlightened progress of the present age in that great art; whose long experience and meritorious works guaranteed their right to be considered among others at the head of their profession. To have authorized the employment of a greater number, or to have thrown the duties which devolved upon them open to everybody, would have defeated the end which Congress had in view; it would have stifled the committee in an accumulation of architectural imagery, some good, much indifferent, and vast quantities appalling to every element of taste or utility. Even with the law as it is in our hands, and calling special attention to the express limitation on our power to employ experts and to receive plans, the committee has been raided by volunteers from the architectural profession, and its room, at times, made an unwilling depository for strange designs which we had neither the power to receive, consider, pay for, nor report upon.

The committee having been authorized and appointed, however, proceeded at once to perform its specified duties under the law. It was called together on the 17th day of June, 1880, for the first time, consisting of Mr. GEDDES, Mr. COOK, and Mr. Claflin, of the House, and of Mr. MORRILL, Mr. Kernan, and myself, of the Senate. Upon full consultation and careful inquiry the following gentlemen were unanimously selected by the committee for employment as persons of suitable skill and attainments, as provided for in the act: Edward Clark, the superintending Architect of the Capitol; Alexander R. Esty, of Boston, and John L. Smithmeyer, of this city. It is not necessary for me to say to gentlemen of character and standing in their profession that the selection of these three architects was no more a reflection upon others than the appointment of one man to office under the Government is a reflection upon the millions who receive no official favor. We simply performed a duty imposed upon us by law according to our best judgment, and the committee has had no reason to regret its choice. The gentlemen selected, whom I will designate as experts, were at once notified, and each one received a letter of instructions. I will submit the letter addressed to Mr. Clark. The others were similar, except, as will be seen, Mr. Clark was designated as chairman of the board of architectural experts when in consultation.

ROOMS OF THE JOINT SELECT COMMITTEE ON ADDITIONAL ACCOMMODATIONS FOR THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1880.

SIR: The Joint Select Committee contemplated by the act of Congress approved June 8, 1880, (a copy of which you will find inclosed,) being duly organized, have directed me to notify you that you have been selected as one of the "three persons of suitable skill and attainments," provided for in said act to consider the questions therein named.

In making this communication to you the committee desire to call your attention to the provisions of the first section, relating to the examination of the Capitol building. This examination will be made in connection with your associates, Mr. Alexander R. Esty, of Boston, and Mr. John L. Smithmeyer, of this city.

It is not deemed necessary further to point out your duty in connection with the first section of said act, except to call your attention to the last sentence of the same. You will observe that provision is there made for a comparative examination and estimate of the advantages between library accommodations connected with the Capitol and the erection of a separate building for that purpose.

The object of the act is to empower "three persons of suitable skill and attainments" on the subject of architecture to determine whether it is "praticable and beneficial" to provide additional accommodations for the Library in connection with the Capitol building, or whether it is preferable to go elsewhere and erect a separate building. If you and your associates find adversely to the idea of building on the present Capitol, then the committee desire you and each of you to submit plans, specifications, and estimates for a building at some eligible point in the city disconnected from the Capitol. In doing this, the committee would advise that what is known as Judiciary Square and also the ground east of the present Capitol grounds be taken into consideration; but in designating these points the committee do not intend to be understood as excluding from your consideration other eligible sites that may occur to you.

If a new building should be decided on it is the judgment of the committee that it should be not less than four hundred and fifty feet in length and three hundred feet in width; that it should be constructed of material as durable as the two wings of the Capitol, and that the interior should be brick, iron, or other material as nearly fire-proof as possible. As to the interior arrangement and the practicability of its future extension and improvement, it is the desire of the committee that you consult with the Librarian of Congress.

It is proper in this connection to call your attention especially to that part of section 1 which looks to the improvement of the "legislative halls," "the convenience of communication between them," "their better ventilation, light, and exposure to the open air." That subject you will consider in connection, however, with the primary purpose of this legislation, which is to provide a structure for the better accommodation of the Library of Congress and for its future wants.

The committee earnestly hope that you and your associates will be able to meet at an early day and proceed with the duties pointed out in this act. They hope to receive a preliminary report from you if possible as early as the 1st of October next, and it is their expectation that they will have such reports from you as will enable them to report to Congress upon its meeting in December next.

The committee designate you as chairman of the board of architectural experts when in consultation.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

D. W. VOORHEES,
Chairman.

EDWARD CLARK, Esq.,
Architect of the Capitol.

It will be seen from these instructions to the experts that the committee interpreted the object of the act of June 8, 1880, to be twofold, but that its primary purpose was to provide for the present and future wants of the Library of Congress. It is true that in connection with that purpose the act provides that the experts shall carefully examine and consider what practicable and beneficial changes can be made in the Capitol building, for the better accommodation of the Houses of Congress; and this duty they have well performed and elaborately reported upon, but they are more especially directed by the terms of the act and by the tenor of the discussion at the time of its passage to point out a secure and commodious place for the great and rapidly swelling Library; in the Capitol building, if they thought it could be done, but outside of and away from the Capitol if they in their skill thought a separate structure necessary.

With this view of their duties impressed upon their minds by the instructions of the committee, and by the terms of the law itself, the experts proceeded in their labors during the vacation of Congress, and it affords me great pleasure to say that when Congress convened again in December following they laid before the committee an amount of solid and instructive information and a wealth of architectural designs which did them great honor as able, industrious, and conscientious employés of the Government. I do not think that I can commend their work, or the spirit in which it was done, too highly. I would be glad if each Senator would send to the document-room and get Senate Report No. 59, the report of the committee on this subject, containing also all the reports of experts to the committee. They are worthy the most serious and careful examination and study. On the question of what practicable and beneficial changes can be made in the Capitol with the view of providing better accommodations for the Library, they jointly and unanimously adopted the following resolution, and reported it to the committee:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this commission it is inexpedient, if not impracticable, to extend the Capitol building so as to provide additional space for the rapid growth of the Library without seriously interfering with the architectural proportions thereof, and also its conveniences for legislative purposes, but that practical and beneficial changes, such as mentioned in the act creating this board, can and should be made at no distant day in and of the Capitol for the better accommodation of the two Houses of Congress. We therefore recommend the erection of a separate edifice for the Library.

This unanimous and joint report of the experts was accompanied by their separate and individual reports, submitting their different plans and giving overwhelming and unanswerable reasons why the Capitol building cannot be made to accommodate the Library. Permit me to dwell briefly on some of these reasons. I have heard much bright and showy talk on this point. I have heard brilliant speeches made in this body in favor of readjusting this Capitol building; repudiating, as it were, its present grand simplicity, and so rearranging, remodeling, and torturing out of shape its original design as to make it a receptacle for all our books as well as our courts and Congress. I have listened to the subtle delineations of a Greek cross; and, with feelings something akin to the spell of a nightmare, have seen in my mind's eye this noble structure deformed by a new building running out from its east center about twelve hundred feet across the public grounds as the upright or stem of such a cross. And, then, again I have listened to airy eloquence in support of an airy dream that the great Dome might be induced to rise high enough toward the heavens to make room for a Library underneath its capacious canopy. Sir, these projects sound to the ear as distant scenes appear to the eye. There is a mist about them which is rapidly dispelled when you approach them and discover the facts.

On page 6 of the report to which I have alluded Mr. Clark, in assigning reasons for a separate building for the Library, says:

First. That to extend the Capitol so as to provide for the growing wants of the Library, even for a few years to come, would not only mar its architectural appearance, but would render it more inconvenient for legislative purposes.

Secondly. The inadequacy of the Capitol to contain the vast collection of books and other matter deposited in the Library under the present copyright law, if the collection should increase in the future as it has in the past.

In order to obtain a knowledge of the great space required for the increase of the Library, it should be borne in mind that by its records it is shown that the number of books in it has quadrupled in the last sixteen years, their number now being about 375,000.

Should this rate of increase continue for the next sixteen years—and it is not improbable that such will be the case—the collection will amount to 1,500,000 volumes, requiring, to afford them shelf-room, all the space contained within both Halls of legislation, the old Hall of Representatives, and the Rotunda.

If the same rate of accession should continue for another sixteen years, that is, thirty-two years from the present time, the entire available space of the Capitol would be required for the use of the Library.

It is true that during the past sixteen years there have been some extraordinary accessions, such as the "Force collection," and the transfer to the Library of the exchanges of the Smithsonian Institution, yet it is not improbable that such additions may continue to be made either by purchase or donation.

Amazing as the foregoing statements are relating to the probable growth of the Library, they are made only after careful calculation and measurement.

Such a statement as this, coming from one of the most accurate and reliable of our public officials, is sufficient to blight all the fancies which have been entertained in regard to a library in the Capitol. Upon our present system of gathering together the productions of the human mind for ourselves and for future generations, the idea of storing the Congressional Library in this building is a naked, manifest absurdity. Mr. Esty in his report, speaking of the action of the board of experts on this subject, uses the following language:

They would further say that a critical examination of the Library as at present, having in view the accommodations reasonably likely to be required therefor in the future, has led your commission to consider as of the greatest importance the past growth of the number of volumes, acquired from all sources, which is so clearly illustrated in the reports of the Librarian, and by which it appears this number has been more than quadrupled in the past sixteen years. By a careful perusal of these reports, no other conclusion can be reached but that the accumulation or addition, by purchase, copyright, Smithsonian Institution, donations, (including State and municipal,) exchanges, &c., will in the next equal period of years be at a greater percentage. There seems, therefore, to be no satisfactory method, in the minds of your commission, of estimating the space required for the Library in the future, except by approximation based upon a known increase, so that, taking for example the acquisitions of the last sixteen years, the conclusion is reached that in thirty-two years from this present the room needed for the contents of the Library would be equal in extent to the entire space now embraced in the Capitol building. Again, the extension of the building to accommodate a library of such dimensions even, as well as the Halls of Congress, with all the contingent space needed, would so interfere with the present structure as to most seriously mar its architecture externally, increase distances within, and make ventilation more difficult, heating more expensive, and leave a greater proportion of the building than at present unexposed to the light of day and the external atmosphere. Your commission can but believe that serious and careful investigation of the subject will lead to the conclusion that any extension of the Capitol requisite for the needs of the Library would be of the most questionable and inconvenient character, and at the best only applicable to the wants thereof for a few years at the most, and, furthermore, would render the building more inconvenient for the purposes of legislation, &c., open to the just condemnation of an appreciative community and the country generally.

But, in addition to the fact that sufficient space for the Library cannot be made in connection with the Capitol without destroying the original design of the building, it is conclusively shown that all, and indeed more than all, its capacity is already required for the transaction of public business by the two Houses of Congress. We are too apt on questions of this kind to overlook the tremendous growth and expansion of the American Government, and to shut out from our view the mighty certainties of the immediate and of the remote future. The founders of the Republic, though the wisest men in history, could not foresee the heights on which we stand to-day, for there was nothing in the past career of the human race to guide them to such a conclusion. But with our own history of the past century to instruct us as to the capacity of our people and our country for development, progress, and wealth, you and I, Mr. President, and Senators, have no excuse if we fail to anticipate and provide in our works for a future so full of national strength, resources, and glory that the whole earth will at no distant day look with wonder and awe at our marvelous condition. We are being borne swiftly forward to such a future as the eye of man hath not seen, nor his mind but imperfectly imagined. Happy is he who will live even one generation hence to behold the consequences of irresistible influences now at work! Ninety-one years ago, when Washington laid the corner-stone of the Capitol, there were thirty Senators, and one hundred and five members of the House, with the small basis of 33,000 inhabitants for each Representative. Now seventy-six Senators are here, and soon three hundred and twenty-five Representatives will assemble in the House, each with a constituency four times as numerous as a member was entitled to in the early days of the Government. Congress performed its duties four-score years ago with less than thirty committees; now it accomplishes, from year to year, but little more than one-half the business which comes legitimately before it by the aid of one hundred and ten permanent committees and a number of special committees lasting for temporary periods. It will not do to say that our forefathers worked harder than we do. They did not. The most overworked men in the United States are those in Congress who keep up with the business before them and make it a matter of conscience to discharge every duty.

It is the vast increase of the public business which crowds every moment of our time, day and night, and for the same reason the walls of this Capitol are so crowded this very hour that every inch of space now occupied by the Congressional Library is urgently needed for the legislative department of the Government. There are about eighty-five committee-rooms in the Capitol, in which the labors of about one hundred and twenty committees are to be performed. Insufficient, overcrowded, dimly-lighted document-rooms are found in different parts of the Capitol, always exciting wonder whether it is possible for them to contain any thing more. Every place looks full, packed, and uncomfortable; and it is only a question of a few years, at most, when every particle of space within these stately walls will have to be devoted to the uses of Congress in transacting the legislation of the country. All this is so fully and clearly set forth in the able and comprehensive reports of the experts, and especially in that of Mr. Smithmeyer, to the committee, that I earnestly recommend the perusal of that document to every Senator and member of Congress.

The committee, therefore, in considering and determining the question presented by the resolution of the board of experts in favor of a separate building for the Library, had but little difficulty and were all of one mind. The resolution was unanimously adopted by the committee. This conclusion being reached, it will be observed by reference to the second section of the act of June, 1880, that it then became the duty of the committee to examine and report upon the question of a site outside of the Capitol for the Library of Congress. In the discharge of this duty much time was consumed and many labors undergone. The committee met often, and gave full and frequent opportunities for the advocates of different localities to be heard by counsel, by briefs, and by themselves in person. I can most truthfully assure the Senate that these opportunities were all promptly and exhaustively embraced. The committee was enriched with instruction on the geography, the topography, and I might say the geology of this city. I doubt if the District engineers ever had so much information imparted to them. We were also greatly enlightened on the subject of values and titles. A real estate abstract office could hardly be more so.

After listening patiently to all that could be said, and after reading all that could be written, in behalf of the various localities urged upon us, a majority of the committee decided in favor of Judiciary Square, an open reservation owned by the Government, and containing a fraction less than twenty acres, as a site for the proposed new Library building. A minority of the committee, very able, if not very numerous, composed of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] decided in favor of the well-known locality on Capitol Hill, directly east of the Capitol building. The two reports were laid before this body during the closing session of the last Congress, and the Senate by a vote of perhaps five to one overruled the majority of the committee and declared in favor of the site on Capitol Hill.

The bill presented by the committee, being thus amended on motion of the Senator from Vermont, passed the Senate, full and complete in all its details, providing for the erection of an appropriate building for the accommodation of the Library of Congress. It passed this body February, 1881, but failed to be reached in the House before the final adjournment of the Forty-sixth Congress on that dismal and foreboding Friday, March 4, following. Thus for the time being it appeared that our labors were lost, but in fact they were not. Upon the convening of the Senate in the Forty-seventh Congress the committee on this important and interesting subject was again at once revived, and the labors of the former committee and the skill and industry of the experts were preserved for another effort in behalf of a civilized and decent home for our books.

The House also responded as soon as it was organized in December last by the appointment of an able and experienced committee to act jointly with the committee of the Senate. The Joint Select Committee on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress being thus again complete, there was no delay in beginning work. I wish to bear testimony to the prompt, energetic, and appreciative manner in which every member of the present committee took up the subject in all its parts at the present session of Congress. The result of their labors is before the Senate. I had the honor to present Senate bill No. 842, unanimously agreed upon and recommended by the committee, and I desire now to point out its provisions somewhat in detail, in order to show to the Senate and to the country how carefully every public interest has been scrutinized and guarded.

Whenever fault-finding stupidity or disappointed parties in interest can say nothing else against a measure pending before Congress they can always wag their heads and say there is a job in it. A job! How portentous this word often sounds in connection with legislation which has received the most rigid, scrupulous, and conscientious care! It is nearly always croaked forth when private property is about to be purchased for public use and when money is expended on public improvements. For this reason, and also in order to secure careful and prudent legislation, I choose to call the attention of the Senate to the bill under consideration in detail.

It will be seen that the first section provides that a fire-proof building for the Library shall be erected according to the plan adopted by the committee, and of the plan I shall speak further on. This section also fixes the site of the proposed building on six designated parcels of ground lying east of the Capitol and between certain streets named; puts the construction of the building in charge of a commission composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Architect of the Capitol Extension, and the Librarian of Congress; appropriates $1,500,000 with which to begin the work, and provides that all moneys appropriated for the building shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The second section simply declares that the grounds required shall be purchased or taken for public use by the Secretary of the Interior, and the third section appropriates a sum of money sufficient to pay for them, not to exceed, however, $1,100,000. By the fourth section the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase said grounds by agreement with their owners for their actual cash value, and to obtain a valid title to them according to the opinion of the Attorney-General; and by the fifth section it is provided that if, within thirty days after the passage of this act, the Secretary of the Interior is unable to purchase such grounds by agreement, he shall resort to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and secure the appointment of five properly qualified commissioners, who shall make a just and equitable appraisement of the grounds in question. This appraisement is made subject to ratification or rejection by the court.

Section 6 provides the manner in which the title to the grounds taken for public use by appraisement shall become vested in the United States, and then, after some minor details in sections 7 and 8, the ninth section declares "that before payment shall be made for any part of the grounds herein described the terms of all contracts therefor and the amount of all appraisals thereof shall be submitted to the President for his approval; and if in his judgment the sum to be paid for any parcel, either under contract or judicial proceedings, shall be unreasonable, he shall, in respect to the same, suspend all further proceedings under this act till further action by Congress." And, in addition to all this, the tenth and last section of the act makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to report a detailed statement of all the proceedings under its provisions at the commencement of each session of Congress.

Sir, this bill is as well guarded as any legislation in the history of this Government by which private property has ever been obtained for public use. Every proceeding under it must be as open as day. The premises to be acquired are so well known that there can be but little, if any, mistake as to their real value. If the Secretary of the Interior is able to purchase them by agreement, he does so in the face of an intelligent public opinion which will be made curious and active by a vigilant newspaper press. Every price agreed upon will be known and scrutinized. If the owners of the property and the Secretary, however, cannot agree, then five well-known and reputable citizens of the District, in no way interested in the subject, will be appointed by the court to ascertain the true value of the property by a sworn appraisement. But this appraisement is even then not final. It is to be reported to the six distinguished gentlemen who are on the Federal bench of the District, and they, with nothing to bias their judgment and with no possible motive except the public interest, are called upon to examine and ratify or reject the decision of the appraisers. And then, as if all this was not enough to insure an honest transaction, before a dollar of money can be paid out all the appraisals of the grounds and their improvements and the terms of all the contracts for their purchase shall be inspected and passed upon by the President of the United States.

Sir, if there is a job provided for in this bill in the purchase of the private property contemplated, as I have seen stated, it is not worth while to commit public trusts to the highest and most honored officials in the Government. If such proposed legislation as this cannot be enacted with safety, then we know not where to turn or who to trust, and all that is left for us is to stand still and do nothing. I am satisfied that this poor and impotent conclusion will not be reached by the present Congress.

As to the mere question of locality, with a view to convenience and beauty of display, much has been said and written. Of course it is not doubted that other locations might be selected affording reasonable facilities for the library. The committee was of that opinion when it determined upon Judiciary Square in the last Congress. Time and reflection, however, have convinced me, as it has the present committee, that there is no other site which combines so fully all the advantages desired as the one provided for in the bill now under consideration. Its proximity to Congress and its commanding elevation seem to designate it as a proper place for a structure dedicated to instruction in literature, the arts, and the sciences.

A glance at the topography of this city and at the locations of Government buildings already erected discloses to the eye a curious spectacle. There are four important official edifices, besides the Washington Monument, located on what may be termed without impropriety a river marsh, a larger portion of which was wholly inundated within the last year by an overflow from the Potomac. When looking from the windows of this Capitol I saw boats paddled to and fro over the grounds of the Smithsonian, the Museum, the Botanical Gardens, and also along portions of Pennsylvania avenue, and reflected upon the beautiful elevations beyond the reach of swelling floods and away from pestilential quagmires, I was brought seriously to wonder at the extent, the variety, and the mystery of human tastes.

On the first slight elevation sloping up from these low and sometimes submerged bottom lands, we find the Treasury and the State Departments, located in deep trenches or side-hill excavations, much after the manner in which we so often see a Pennsylvania barn constructed. The barn, however, is a work of wisdom compared to these buildings, for its basement story always presents a south-side shed for the comfort of stock in the winter time. Between the Treasury and the State Department stands the Executive Mansion, fronting to the ill-odored and malarial Potomac flats, and through whose front door no human being ever passes, while as if in satire on office-seeking thousands of people from day to day and from year to year go in at the back door and climb the back stairs to find the face of official favor. Whether this circumstance has had an evil effect on American politics I leave to the casuists to determine. The Department of the Interior and the Post-Office are well located, but in the whole range of building sites I think the unbiased and intelligent traveler visiting this city for the first time would without hesitation indicate the spacious resources of Capitol Hill as the best in every respect.

At this point, however, arises a question which was fully considered by the committee, and which I must briefly notice here. It has been, and may be again, seriously urged that but one Government edifice is entitled to stand on this high and beautiful plateau whose western brow is crowned by the Capitol; that the capacity of all this broad and noble space is already exhausted, and that the stately structure in whose walls we are now deliberating is of such poor proportions and uncertain merit, that it is in danger of being put to shame by a building of less than one-half its dimensions. It has been insisted that the Capitol could bear no rival anywhere on Capitol Hill; that any other public building in its neighborhood would detract from its own commanding consequence.

I can see no reason for this objection to the proposed site for the Library. It is a matter of sentiment and fancy rather than of judgment which can be expressed plainly in words. Why two buildings of architectural excellence standing in close proximity should detract from each other in the eyes of the beholder is a problem which others may explain; I cannot. There is but a narrow street between those two imposing structures, the Interior and the Post-Office, and but a square between the State Department and the Treasury, and yet I have never heard that one made the other less attractive, or that their frowning rivalry shocked the taste of critical Senators and members in Congress. Nor will the supremacy and grandeur of this Capitol be any more disturbed by the erection of the Library in its vicinity than the glory of Jupiter was tarnished by the discovery of one of his satellites near by. Nor is there any inexorable law of taste or common sense which requires a dead, monotonous uniformity of style in all the public buildings of this city for fear they shall reflect on each other.

Is there to be no variety, no progress, no improvement in our national architecture while there is improvement in every other branch of knowledge? And this brings me to speak of the plan adopted by the committee as a question intimately connected with the location agreed upon. I need hardly assure the Senate that the plan of the proposed Library has been the subject of earnest, protracted study and investigation on the part of the committee. Each of the experts employed for that purpose submitted carefully executed designs both for the exterior elevations and the interior arrangements for the accommodation of a great collection of books. These designs were minutely examined and compared in connection with the plans and drawings of all the great libraries of this country and of Europe. They also fell under the observation of many persons very intelligent on this subject outside of the committee. During the past year the National Association of Librarians held its annual meeting in Washington City, and the librarians of Yale, Harvard, and all the great college libraries of the United States made a close scrutiny of all the works submitted by the experts, and we had the benefit of their experience and observation and warm approval.

But above all others the committee is indebted to Mr. Spofford, the accomplished Librarian of Congress, for his great and enlightened assistance in arriving at what we deem a safe conclusion. It gives me the greatest possible pleasure to speak of this gentleman's wonderful knowledge of libraries, their needs, their uses, their proper arrangement and management, and the architectural designs which will best accommodate them; also to bear testimony to his constant and untiring labors with the committee and with the experts to promote the great object we all had in view. It is very safe to assume that a plan of building which has his approval after so much vigilant industry will not fall short of its purposes. It is proper also to say that the plan adopted was selected with great unanimity by the committee. It can be seen and it speaks for itself. It is a Gothic renaissance, and will delight the eye, while the interior will constitute a marvelous receptacle for all the products of the human mind.

But, sir, there is a history of legislation and attempted legislation in reference to additional accommodations for the Library which throws a strong light on the proposed plan and location, as well as upon the dilatory and indifferent manner in which Congress has treated a great question of immediate and pressing necessity. The wants of the Library, and its wretched condition for lack of room, increasing from year to year, and constantly urged upon the attention of Congress by the Librarian, became at last so conspicuous that in March, 1873, now nearly nine years ago, the first step was taken, looking in a slow and cautious way to a remedy for the crying complaints of the books. At that time the following enactment was made:

> For a plan of a new building for a Library of Congress, $5,000, and the selection of a plan, together with the location and supervision of such building, shall be in charge of a commission, to consist of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, and the Librarian of Congress.

The commission created by this provision addressed themselves to the subject with remarkable circumspection and care. It was composed of the late Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Howe, now Postmaster-General; the Senator from Vermont, Mr. MORRILL, and the present able Librarian. They advertised for a plan of architecture to accommodate the Library and meet its future growth, and in doing so they invited public and unrestricted competition among architects of this and other countries. Specifications were issued by the commission for the guidance of those who might wish to submit designs, and among them the following were made prominent:

> That the general plan of the contemplated building should embrace a circular reading-room, in the center of the structure, of one hundred feet in diameter, with alcoves radiating from the circumference of the inner circle concentrically outside. * * * That all parts of the building were to be of fire-proof materials. * * * That besides the interior circular reading-room, provision was to be made for eight rooms not less than forty by sixty feet each, and from twenty to twenty-five feet high, for maps, newspapers, copyright records, works of art, catalogue-room, and packing-room, * * * and that the building should have a capacity of not less than two millions of books.

And I may observe that these specifications have been substantially adhered to in all subsequent work, and that they are contained in the plan now reported to Congress. The commission, however, in 1873, in order to insure the attention of architects of skill and standing, offered a prize of $1,500 for the best design. The competition was quite general, twenty-eight different plans being submitted to the commission, one or more of them being from architects in Europe. From the well-known and high character of the commission, the Senate does not need to be assured that all these plans underwent the most vigilant and intelligent examination. They were patiently considered in all their parts; and it is not improper to state that the fifteen-hundred-dollar prize was then awarded to the same gentleman whose plan has been adopted in the bill now under consideration.

It seems that nearly two years were consumed by the commission in securing and agreeing upon a satisfactory design, for it is not until February, 1875, that we find any further action proposed in Congress. At that time, and during the second session of the Forty-third Congress, Senator Howe reported Senate bill No. 1250, providing for the erection of a Library building on Judiciary Square. It did not meet with favor, and it perished by the wayside.

Again, after about the usual interval, the subject of the Library received another evidence that it was at least still remembered. In June, 1876, the Joint Committee on the Library reported Senate bill No. 910 and recommended its passage. It provided for the erection of a suitable structure, and located it this time on the low grounds west of the Capitol, now occupied by the gardens. Of course this measure came to grief. A call was made upon the Chief of Engineers of the Army, which was at once fatal to the bill. He was asked to examine the nature and quality of the grounds in that locality, with a view to the foundation of the proposed building. His official report was to the effect that such an edifice could not with safety be erected there; that the grounds were mainly composed of a rotten, soft soil, and were full of treacherous bogs.

I believe the bill was never called up for consideration after the Engineer's report was made. Since that time the conclusions of that officer have been most amply verified. In the erection of that pile of tombstone statuary now standing at the foot of Capitol Hill, and which ought to be in a cemetery, an excavation nearly forty feet in depth had to be made in search of a foundation to sustain its weight. Laborers dug from week to week, through mud and mire, through spouting quicksands and the alluvial deposits of former floods, with pumps all the time going to prevent the men from being drowned at their work. All this we saw with our own eyes within the last five or six years. The fact is that there is not a low wet prairie in the West where the waters gather more rapidly at three or four feet below the surface than they do in nearly all the grounds from Capitol Hill west and southwest to the Potomac River.

The slight elevations presented may afford foundations for such comparatively light structures as the Museum, the Smithsonian, the Agricultural Bureau, and the Bureau of Printing and Engraving; but it is well known that the foundation of the Washington Monument has given more concern to engineers and has cost more labor and more money, perhaps, to revise, reconstruct, and render it secure than the entire work besides. And even now whether it is permanently safe for all the future is a question which spongy earth close to the bank of a great river may at any time decide in the negative in spite of the best engineering talent in the world. Sir, it is obvious to my mind that the Potomac, which is rather an estuary than a river from here to the ocean, at no very distant period of the past covered with the flow of the tide all or nearly all that part of Washington City sometimes spoken of as the Island. Large portions of it have all the characteristics of a swamp reclaimed by the processes of time and made serviceable for some purposes by the skill and industry of man. As a location for such a building as our Library requires it is more unfit in every respect than any other spot in the District of Columbia. Therefore, I repeat that the bill to locate the Library there fell still-born, and has never shown any sign of life since.

The next movement on this subject was the introduction of a bill in February, 1877, by the Senator from Vermont, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase certain lands east of the Capitol on which to construct the new Library building. This locality is that Senator's first love, and he has been constant to it. In January, 1878, he was re-enforced by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] who introduced a bill of similar import. All this time, however, nothing was done, and the books were crying for room. It seems to me that at times I can hear their voices, like captives in an overcrowded and ill-ventilated prison, appealing for more room, a better light, and fresh air. Perhaps the late Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] thought he heard them. At any rate, apparently in despair of getting a separate building authorized, in February, 1878, he introduced a bill for the appointment of a commission to consider and report upon the necessary measures for the enlargement of the present quarters of the Library, so as to meet its present and future wants. This commission was appointed, and was composed of the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on the Library, the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Librarian of Congress. Investigation began at once, architects of the highest reputation were consulted. The great wish of the commission was that the Library could be retained in these walls; and yet they were compelled to report, and did report, that—

> Notwithstanding their earnest desire to keep the Library within the Capitol building, and in the face of several plans which had been submitted to them for accomplishing this object, the commission had concluded that no such plan was practicable, and that the Library, if enlarged, could not be made a part of the Capitol without serious detriment to its architectural effect and other grave disadvantages.

The commission then recommended the erection of a separate edifice, and in June, 1878, Mr. Howe, returning to his first love as to a location, introduced the following resolution, which I believe was never voted upon:

> Resolved, That the commission recommend an appropriation of $150,000 to lay the foundation for a new Library building on or near the center of Judiciary Square, to be erected according to a plan to be submitted to and approved by Congress.

I wish to add in this connection that during all these years of investigation, research, and labor, extending from 1873 to the present time, Mr. Smithmeyer, the architect whose plan has now been adopted, was engaged a large portion of his time under the auspices and at the request of the various committees in making the different plans which were from time to time under consideration, and in making observations in this country and in Europe upon the architectural arrangements of leading libraries. His skill, his acquirements, and his manner of work are all, therefore, well known to all who have had this matter so long in charge.

And now, Mr. President, after all these tribulations and disappointments of the past we are once more face to face with this pressing question. The bill on your Calendar and now under discussion is really the result of nine years' care and investigation on the part of repeated commissions and committees. No measure ever came before Congress with more careful consideration or with as much skilled labor bestowed upon it. It is plain that some concessions have always to be made on a subject like this. Men's minds will differ on the locality and the style of architecture, and it is easy to refuse to do anything if each one cannot have things exactly to suit him. I beg Senators, however, to consider what will become of the Library if we are to wait until every question of taste is settled.

Ten years ago there were less than 250,000 volumes, with shelving room wholly insufficient to accommodate them; now there are over 400,000 volumes, nearly one-half of them, together with the maps, charts, and works of art, almost wholly inaccessible; corded up, as it were and packed away in piles, without value to anybody. Is this state of things to last? Can we legislate on every thing else, and yet be incapable of building a becoming house for our books? I know of nothing more humiliating at this time to the character of Congress, or indeed to our national character, than the present deplorable condition of our great and invaluable Library. Its commanding merits and its shameful state evoked from the President of the United States, in his last annual message, a special recommendation to Congress in its behalf. There is but one description in the history of libraries which will be appropriate to our own if it is left to its fate a few years longer by the inaction of Congress.

When Charles the Second of England appointed William Prynne, whom he styled "the Cato of the age," keeper of the records at the Tower, a post with the duties of a librarian, the grizzly old bookman, who had been in the pillories, and the prisons, and had his ears cut off by English courts for speaking and writing with a free mind, made the following report to the king of the condition of the royal library:

> No sooner received I your royal patent for the custody of your ancient records in the Tower of London, even in the midst of my parliamentary and disbanding services, but I designed and endeavored the rescue of the greatest part of them from that desolation, corruption, confusion in which they had for many years bypast lain buried together in one confused chaos, under corroding, putrifying cobwebs, dust, and filth, in the darkest corner of Cæsar's chapel in the white tower, as mere useless reliques not worthy to be calendared or brought down thence into the office amongst other records of use. In order thereunto, I employed some soldiers and women to remove and cleanse them from their filthiness, who soon growing weary of this noisome work left them almost as foul as they found them. Whereupon, immediately after the Parliament's adjournment, I and my clerks spent many whole days in cleansing and sorting them into distinct but confused heaps, in order to their future reducement into method, the old clerks of the office being unwilling to touch them for fear of endangering their eyesights and healths by the cankerous dust and evil scent. In raking up this dung-heap—

Continues the plain-spoken old man—

> according to my expectation I found many rare, ancient, precious pearls and golden records; with many original bulls of popes, (some of them under seal,) letters to and from popes, cardinals, and the court of Rome; besides sundry rare antiquities, specially relating to the Parliaments of England, and no less than ninety-seven parcels of original writs of summons, (from Edward I to Henry VI,) confusedly intermixed with many thousands of other writs and records.

Such is the graphic description of a neglected collection of books and papers which two hundred years ago became the nucleus of the present great library of the British Museum, and while there is no danger that the Library of Congress will quite sink into a similar condition of squalor and wretchedness, yet the example is full of force and meaning. It shows that books of richest merit are of no value unless their habitation is made pleasant and accessible to their votaries; that precious pearls, golden records, and rare antiquities may be buried out of sight and reach by heaps piled on heaps for the want of space in which to unpack and display the treasures of the intellectual world. It shows also that the progress of a people from darkness into light, from barbarism and semi-barbarism toward civilization is marked and measured by their care for the recorded products of the human mind in all its stages of development.

We boast of our advancement, and justly so in many respects, but there is not a reading nation on the globe to-day whose assemblage of books is in a condition so disgraceful as ours. We stand alone as a Government which seems powerless to act on such a subject, which confesses itself, by its conduct, an imbecile, in the face of duties so plain that every eye sees and every tongue admits them.

But we sometimes hear strange shifts and devices proposed by which to relieve the present enormous plethora of the Library, and at the same time to avoid the necessity of furnishing it with a respectable domicile of its own. Among others a sort of warehouse system has been suggested, various buildings, plain and cheap, in different parts of the city, not with a view to the use of books after the manner of libraries, but for the purpose of storing them for safekeeping. This plan proceeds upon the idea that the great mass of literature of the present enlightened age is not worth reading, and yet a trifle, perhaps, too valuable to throw away.

The separation of the contents of libraries into different localities when they belong to the same general collection has excited the righteous wrath of students from the earliest period of written thought to the present hour. Edwards, in his valuable modern work on libraries, in pointing out the difficulties in the way of obtaining historical knowledge in England, says:

> Only a few years have elapsed since the records kept within the metropolis alone had to be sought in some twenty different parts of London, ranging east and west from the Tower to the Abbey, and north and south from Pentonville to Lambeth.

The writings of ancient authors are also full of anathemas against the vagabond and dissipated lives which libraries were sometimes made to lead by the ignorance and caprice of their owners. Indeed, the character and the utility of a library are destroyed when it is broken up into parcels and scattered about in different places. Such is the testimony of history on this point.

There is another plan, however, for the better accommodation of the Library of Congress, which I have often heard advanced, and which fills me with even greater aversion and dismay than the one I have just noticed. It is held by a certain class of minds that we have too many books; that the present contents of the Library ought to be depleted by hauling them out and applying the torch, and that for the future a grim warder should be placed at its doors to prevent an over stock of intelligence on its limited and barren shelves. This proposition has at the least the merit of being easily understood. If adopted it would be a quick, long stride backwards, carrying us to the very rear, and among the stragglers of that glorious column of human progress which we are so well qualified to lead.

When the Vandals sacked Rome and wreaked their brutal hate on her works of art and civilization, they made their name a synonym for acts of destructive ignorance in all the ages since. The American name would stand but little better in coming times if we should pollute it by such an act of vandalism as that to which I allude. The destruction of books is associated in my mind with the destruction of life; it is a crime which I think of in connection with murder. The breathing thoughts which animate their pages make them seem as living, thinking, speaking beings, entitled to our love and veneration.

But if some books are to be destroyed, and more hereafter rejected, who or what manner of man is to be the mighty censor for such a great and perilous work; who is to draw the line and say what shall be kept and what shall be given over to dust and ashes; who has the hardihood now to declare what materials may be useful to the historian of the future, and what can with safety and propriety be cast aside; who will undertake to winnow and sift the mental product of this age of marvelous discoveries, amazing activity, and daring speculation? He who would assume such a task might safely be assigned to that class of persons who are said to rush in where angels fear to tread.

The writings of all the historians and philosophers who have lived admonish us that every achievement of the human intellect, from grave to gay, from ponderous tomes to frivolous pamphlets, from the massive and blazing offspring of Homer's genius to burlesque pasquinades and comic verses, from the Principia of Newton to the latest patent on a lead-pencil, all have their uses in making an estimate of the different conditions of mankind at different periods, of the advancement which has been made in the past and which is likely to be made in the future. For our own sakes, and for the sake of our posterity, we dare not despoil our Library and make it less than a complete record of the workings of the human mind in all the ages.

Sir, if I am reminded of the expense of a noble and commodious edifice for the great National Library of the United States, I am at the same time also reminded that we are building for all time, and that distant centuries will look upon our work. We are proud now of a census showing a population of fifty millions. The structure we propose will contain the library of a government with 200,000,000 inhabitants by the time the American Republic is as old as many of the youngest nations of Europe of the present day. It will shelter the most stupendous collection of educated thought and labor known to the annals of mankind, and those who aid in rearing it need not fear the criticism of future generations as they resort to its treasures for instruction, strength, and light. The revenue of this Government for one week will build and finish it, then to stand as long as American civilization is upheld by the power of knowledge.

Among the Greeks the first libraries were deposited in the temples of the gods as the only places of sufficient honor for the sacred trust, and from the days of Aristotle, the first known collector of a library, to the present hour the intelligence and the virtue of every people have been measured by their preservation of books and archives. Sir, let us, too, erect our temple without further delay, not for mythological deities, but for the indwelling of the accumulated learning of all countries and all ages; over whose alcoves, corridors, and galleries will preside the genius of history, science, art, and literature in all their various and beautiful branches, and from whose hallowed precincts a light as enduring as the constellations in the sky will shine on all the multiplying centuries of the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The Senate will resume the consideration of its unfinished business.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know whether any other members of the Committee on the Library desire to discuss this important measure, after the elaborate and interesting speech of the Senator from Indiana; but would there be any objection to putting the bill upon its passage now? As the Senator from Indiana has said, it is the fruit of the labors of many years of the past, conducted very largely under the immediate supervision of the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] The bill is, as I understand, the accumulation of years of experience, and the urgency for action by Congress in this respect can scarcely be overstated.

If, therefore, there is no further disposition to debate the bill, I ask my friend from Indiana why he may not now call for a vote upon it, and see if we cannot pass it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to address the Senate upon the bill which comes over from yesterday as the unfinished business; but I of course would cheerfully yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware if the Senator from Indiana desires to put the bill on its passage without debate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am situated just in this way, I will say to the Senator from Delaware: I spoke to-day by the kindness and courtesy of the Senators from California primarily and the Senate generally. I asked that the pending order, which is the anti-Chinese bill, be laid aside that I might present my views upon the Library bill to the Senate. Consequently I am not in a position to press this question unless it can be done by their consent.

Mr. BAYARD. It was entirely my own suggestion that I stated, not that of the Senator from Indiana at all.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to thank the Senator from Delaware very much. I appreciate his kindness and would be glad to avail myself of his suggestion. If it would not lead to debate, I should be very glad to have a vote on the bill; but that I can hardly hope.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the Chair ask for unanimous consent that a vote be now taken on the bill of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MORRILL. I should be very glad to have the bill voted upon now. I have discussed it often heretofore, and I do not desire to discuss it now, unless it should be necessary. I think that the opinions of the Senate have been sufficiently concentrated upon the bill, it being the same bill, or nearly the same bill, that was passed last year.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say that while I have no disposition myself to participate in the discussion of the Library bill, I am satisfied there are other Senators who do; and I belong to that class of Senators who are by no means satisfied to vote to-day upon the views so eloquently and ably expressed by the Senator from Indiana. I shall, therefore, object to proceeding to a vote without further debate.

Mr. INGALLS. I am opposed unalterably to the construction of an independent building for the purposes of a library. I also believe if a site is to be selected for that purpose, the one that has been designated in the bill called up and discussed by the Senator from Indiana is the worst that could possibly have been selected. I believe that the proper plan for additional accommodations for the Library is by an enlargement of the Capitol building.

I rose at this time for the purpose of saying that in the room of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be found plans, drawings, and specifications looking toward this object. When the bill comes up for debate, after a proper presentation of the subject to which I have called attention, I shall move that it be recommitted to the committee, with a view to reporting a bill for the purpose of furnishing additional accommodations by the enlargement of the Capitol upon the plans to which I have referred. With this explanation, of course it is understood that I shall object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the further consideration of the Library bill, the Senate will resume the consideration of its unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bil and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 112) authorizing the appointment of Humphrey H. Lemon upon the Capitol police force.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1046) for the relief of the Eastern Shawnee Indians, at the Quapaw agency, Indian Territory; and

A bill (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, a hundred years ago the American people founded a nation upon the moral law. They overthrew by force the authority of their sovereign, and separated themselves from the country which had planted them, alleging as their justification to mankind certain propositions which they held to be self-evident.

They declared—and that declaration is the one foremost action of human history—that all men equally derive from their Creator the right to the pursuit of happiness; that equality in the right to that pursuit is the fundamental rule of the divine justice in its application to mankind; that its security is the end for which governments are formed, and its destruction good cause why governments should be overthrown. For a hundred years this principle has been held in honor. Under its beneficent operation we have grown almost twenty-fold. Thirteen States have become thirty-eight; three million have become fifty million; wealth and comfort and education and art have flourished in still larger proportion. Every twenty years there is added to the valuation of this country a wealth enough to buy the whole German Empire, with its buildings and its ships and its invested property. This has been the magnet that has drawn immigration hither. The human stream, hemmed in by banks invisible but impassable, does not turn toward Mexico, which can feed and clothe a world, or South America, which can feed and clothe a hundred worlds, but seeks only that belt of States where it finds this law in operation. The marvels of comfort and happiness it has wrought for us scarcely surpass what it has done for other countries. The immigrant sends back the message to those he has left behind. There is scarcely a nation in Europe west of Russia which has not felt the force of our example and whose institutions are not more or less slowly approximating to our own.

Every new State as it takes its place in the great family binds this declaration as a frontlet upon its forehead. Twenty-four of the States, including California herself, declare it in the very opening sentence of their constitutions. The insertion of the phrase "the pursuit of happiness," in the enumeration of the natural rights for securing which government is ordained, and the denial of which constitutes just cause for its overthrow, was intended as an explicit affirmation that the right of every human being who obeys the equal laws to go everywhere on the surface of the earth that his welfare may require is beyond the rightful control of government. It is a birthright derived immediately from him who "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation." He made, so our fathers held, of one blood all the nations of men. He gave them the whole face of the earth whereon to dwell. He reserved for himself by his agents heat and cold, and climate, and soil, and water, and land to determine the bounds of their habitation. It has long been the fashion in some quarters, when honor, justice, good faith, human rights are appealed to, and especially when the truths declared in the opening sentences of the Declaration of Independence are invoked as guides in legislation to stigmatize those who make the appeal as sentimentalists, incapable of dealing with practical affairs. It would be easy to demonstrate the falsehood of this notion. The men who erected the structure of this Government were good, practical builders, and knew well the quality of the cornerstone when they laid it. When they put forth for the consideration of their contemporaries and of posterity the declaration which they thought a decent respect for the opinions of mankind required of them, they weighed carefully the fundamental proposition on which their immortal argument rested. Lord Chatham's famous sentence will bear repeating again:

> When your lordships look at the papers transmitted to us from America, when you consider their decency, firmness, and wisdom, you cannot but respect their cause and wish to make it your own. For myself I must declare and avow that in all my reading and observation—and it has been my favorite study, I have read Thucydides, and have studied and admired the master states of the world—that for solidity of reasoning, force of sagacity, and wisdom of conclusion, under such a complication of difficult circumstances, no nation or body of men can stand in preference to the general Congress assembled at Philadelphia.

The doctrine that the pursuit of happiness is an inalienable right with which men are endowed by their Creator, asserted by as religious a people as ever lived at the most religious period of their history, propounded by as wise, practical, and far-sighted statesmen as ever lived as the vindication for the most momentous public act of their generation, was intended to commit the American people in the most solemn manner to the assertion that the right to change their homes at their pleasure is a natural right of all men. The doctrine that free institutions are a monopoly of the favored races, the doctrine that oppressed people may sever their old allegiance at will, but have no right to find a new one, that the bird may fly but may never light, is of quite recent origin.

California herself, owing her place in our Union to the first victory of freedom in the great contest with African slavery, is pledged to repudiate this modern heresy, not only by her baptismal vows, but by her share in the enactment of the statute of 1868. Her constitution read thus until she took Dennis Kearney for her law giver:

> We, the people of California, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure its blessings, do establish this constitution.
> DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.
> SECTION 1. All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and defending property, and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness.
>
> SEC. 17. Foreigners who are or who may hereafter become bona fide residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property, as native-born citizens.

In the Revised Statutes, section 1999, Congress in the most solemn manner declare that the right of expatriation is beyond the lawful control of government:

> SEC. 1999. Whereas the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and
> Whereas in the recognition of this principle this Government has freely received emigrants from all nations, and invested them with the rights of citizenship.

This is a re-enactment, in part, of the statute of 1868, of which Mr. Conness, then a California Senator, of Irish birth, was, if not the author, the chief advocate.

The California Senator called up the bill day after day. The bill originally provided that the President might order the arrest and detention in custody of "any subject or citizen of such foreign government" as should arrest and detain any naturalized citizen of the United States under the claim that he still remained subject to his allegiance to his native sovereign. This gave rise to debate.

But there was no controversy about the part of the bill which I have read. The preamble is as follows:

Whereas the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, for the protection of which the Government of the United States was established; and whereas in the recognition of this principle this Government has freely received emigrants from all nations and vested them with the rights of citizenship, &c.

Mr. Howard declares that—

The absolute right of expatriation is the great leading American principle.

Mr. Morton says:

That a man's right to withdraw from his native country and make his home in another, and thus cut himself off from all connection with his native country, is a part of his natural liberty, and without that his liberty is defective. We claim that the right to liberty is a natural, inherent, God-given right, and his liberty is imperfect unless it carries with it the right of expatriation.

The bill containing the preamble above recited passed the Senate by a vote of 39 to 5.

This doctrine, planted forever in the fundamental law of the Republic by the very act which gave it birth, imbedded in the constitution of nearly every State, was solemnly reaffirmed in the most important act of our diplomacy since America assumed her place as the principal power of the Pacific. The treaty of 1868, known as the Burlingame treaty, is the first occasion when she appears in the diplomacy of the oriental world in the character which belongs to her. Before that time the American had been known in the East only as a feeble and inferior Englishman. "American No. 2 Englishman," was the Chinese proverb. It was fitting that in that treaty we should affirm our traditional faith and incorporate in the first great act which was to give law to the nations of the Pacific this great unchanging truth. The flag bore the same legend, whether seen from the East or from the West. The Burlingame treaty was wholly our act. The commissioners who negotiated it were Americans on both sides. We have lately made one which seems to have had Chinese on both sides. The fifth article of the Burlingame treaty is as follows:

The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from the one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents.

An influential English newspaper has lately, with a taunt, put the question what the United States have ever done for mankind, and has intimated that we ought to interfere by diplomacy and, if need be, by force, to protect the menaced independence of weak states in the eastern hemisphere. This criticism of the policy impressed upon us by the farewell counsel of Washington is not new. We have been accustomed to answer it by the claim that our example of adherence to the great doctrine of human equality affirmed in our Declaration of Independence has been of more value to mankind a thousandfold than any service we could render by entangling ourselves with the diplomacy or engaging in the armed conflicts of the Old World. We have pointed to the fact that we have established our Government upon the principle of equality of human rights, that we have been governed by that principle in all our public conduct. Human rights—not policies, to be altered or modified by existing governments at their discretion, according to their own conceptions of their interest or safety—but human rights having their origin in the moral law, beyond the reach of any government or any alliance, holy or unholy, of governments. We have been wont to affirm that there were some things that Government had no right whatever to do, and that the undertaking of them by any government was of itself good cause for its overthrow. We have especially claimed that the assertion of this doctrine in behalf of that largest proportion of mankind whose destiny compels them to labor for their support was our conspicuous distinction and crowning glory.

Mr. Webster, in his oration of June 17, 1843, at the completion of Bunker Hill monument, after stating as one of the four distinguishing elements of the American system of government "equality of rights," proceeds:

Few topics are more inviting or more fit for philosophical discussion than the effect on the happiness of mankind of institutions founded on these principles, or, in other words, the influence of the New World upon the Old.

After mentioning some of the natural productions which America has given to mankind in partial repayment of her debt to Europe for science and art, laws, literature, and manners, he proceeds:

But America exercises influences of a much higher, because they are of a moral and political, character.

America has furnished to Europe proof of the fact that popular institutions, founded on equality and capable of maintaining governments, are able to secure the rights of person, property, and reputation.

America has proved that it is practicable to elevate the mass of mankind—that portion which in Europe is called the laboring or lower class—to raise them to self-respect, to make them competent to act a part in the great right and great duty of self-government. She holds out an example a thousand times more encouraging than ever was presented before to those nine-tenths of the human race who are born without hereditary fortune or hereditary rank.

Nothing is more in conflict with the genius of American institutions than legal distinctions between individuals based upon race or upon occupation. The framers of our Constitution believed in the safety and wisdom of adherence to abstract principles. They meant that their laws should make no distinction between men except such as were required by personal conduct and character. The prejudices of race, the last of human delusions to be overcome, has been found until lately in our constitutions and statutes, and has left its hideous and ineradicable stains on our history in crimes committed by every generation. The negro, the Irishman, and the Indian have in turn been its victims here, as the Jew and the Greek and the Hindoo in Europe and Asia. But it is reserved for us at the present day, for the first time, to put into the public law of the world and into the national legislation of the foremost of republican nations a distinction inflicting upon a large class of men a degradation by reason of their race and by reason of their occupation.

The bill which passed Congress two years ago and was vetoed by President Hayes, the treaty of 1881, and the bill now before the Senate, have the same origin and are parts of the same measure. Two years ago it was proposed to exclude Chinese laborers from our borders, in express disregard of our solemn treaty obligations. This measure was arrested by President Hayes. The treaty of 1881 extorted from unwilling China her consent that we might regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers into this country—a consent of which it is proposed by this bill to take advantage. This is entitled "A bill to enforce treaty stipulations with China."

It seems necessary in discussing the statute briefly to review the history of the treaty. First let me say that the title of this bill is deceptive. There is no stipulation of the treaty which the bill enforces. The bill where it is not inconsistent with the compact only avails itself of a privilege which that concedes. China only relaxed the Burlingame treaty so far as to permit us to "regulate, limit, or suspend the coming or residence" of Chinese laborers, "but not absolutely to prohibit it." The treaty expressly declares "such limitation or suspension shall be reasonable." But here is proposed a statute which for twenty years, under the severest penalties, absolutely inhibits the coming of Chinese laborers to this country. The treaty pledges us not absolutely to prohibit it. The bill is intended absolutely to prohibit it.

The second article of the treaty is this:

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as traders, students, or merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers, who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nations.

Yet it is difficult to believe that the complex and cumbrous passport system provided in the last twelve sections of the bill was not intended as an evasion of this agreement. Upon what other nation, favored or not, is such a burden imposed? This is the execution of a promise that they may come and go "of their own free will."

In the beginning of the negotiations the Chinese plenipotentiaries informed those of the United States that "last year the foreign office consented to enter upon negotiations with Mr. Seward to prohibit the four classes of cooly laborers, criminals, prostitutes, and diseased persons from going thither," and that "they were now ready to discuss further the proposition of Mr. Seward, with the hope that an equitable solution may be reached." Our commissioners replied:

We feel it best to inform your excellency that these propositions in no wise represent the wish or purpose of the United States Government, and that the appointment of a new minister and our presence here with full powers to negotiate ought to be to you sufficient evidence of what value you should attach to such representations. We are entirely unaware of any authority or approval given by the Government of the United States to the proposal submitted on his own responsibility by Mr. Seward to the Chinese Government.

At the conference of Wednesday, October 13, the commissioners on both sides in substance agree that the Burlingame treaty permits unrestricted immigration of Chinese to the United States, and that the purpose of the present treaty is to authorize the United States to limit that immigration. Our representatives said:

The Burlingame treaty gives to the subjects of China the right of unrestricted immigration into the United States; at least the Government of the United States have hitherto acquiesced in that construction of the treaty.

The Chinese commissioners replied:

The propositions of Mr. Seward amounted to a modification of the Burlingame treaty; for under that treaty all Chinese, good or bad, could at their own will go to the United States, and the government of neither country could interfere.

Here is an emphatic affirmance on one side and a substantial concession by the other that the Burlingame treaty prohibits the United States from protecting itself against the entrance of these four classes. Yet the new treaty makes no provision for such exclusion in future except as to laborers.

It is clear from this brief narrative that there is not even a decent covering drawn over the transaction. Our commissioners declare that the United States has hitherto acquiesced in an interpretation of the Burlingame treaty which deprives this Government of the right to protect itself against the introduction of the four enumerated dangerous classes, and explicitly disavow the purpose of obtaining that right for the future. The commissioners say in the clearest manner:

We do not stand on an assertion of the right of self-protection against dangerous characters. We are here to obtain an assertion of the right to distinguish between Chinese and other races, and the right to distinguish between laborers and other classes, and we will be content with nothing else.

The treaty of 1881 not only does not exclude or reserve to the United States the right to exclude prostitutes, criminals, and diseased persons, but it expressly declares that their coming shall be without limit or restraint, unless they are included in the class of laborers. The instrument does three things only. For the first time, as far as I know, it places in the public law of nations a denial of the right declared by the treaty of 1868 to be "the inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance." It establishes a distinction between races in respect to the right to pursue their happiness in lawful ways anywhere on the face of the earth, affirming a difference degrading to the Chinese. It affirms, also, a distinction between laborers and all other persons degrading to labor. This it has done at the persistent demand of the American Republic, overcoming the reluctance of the Asiatic despot.

The purpose of the framers of this treaty to strike their blow at labor, without regard to character, intelligence, or skill, is fully disclosed in an interview with Mr. Swift, one of the commissioners, reported by a San Francisco paper, and never, so far as I have heard, disavowed. This is from the account of the interview as published at the time:

Mr. John F. Swift, one of the commissioners to negotiate the Chinese treaties, was recently interviewed by a San Francisco Chronicle reporter. Mr. Swift says, in answer to one of the questions of the reporter:

WHAT ARE "LABORERS?"

"The objection has been raised," said the reporter, "that the word 'laborer' in the treaty will admit of dangerous latitude."

"There is no such possibility," replied Mr. Swift, "and for three reasons: first, the construction placed by Congress upon the word will be decisive; second, the Chinese commissioners conceded the point by leaving out the word 'mechanic,' upon which they had laid much stress; third, there are only two kinds of laborers, skilled and unskilled, and the word laborer covers both. To call a hod-carrier a laborer and not to call a weaver one is to use the word in its narrowest sense. The likelihood is that Congress will stretch it to include even physicians and those who labor with their brains. Why, the Chinese commissioners raised the issue, and suggested that the term would include even consuls."

THE TREATY WILL BE CONFIRMED.

"Then you think, Mr. Swift," said the reporter, finally, "that the treaty will be confirmed by the Senate?"

"I have no doubt of it," he answered; "and that not by any party vote, for I am of the opinion that both Republican and Democratic Senators will be of accord as to the treaty. What they will do afterward as to enacting laws to enforce it I have no idea."

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him from what paper that is an extract?

Mr. HOAR. I am not able to answer the question at this moment. It was a very full interview with Mr. Swift, given evidently verbatim, not in substance by the reporter, but the actual language, and copied all over the United States and never disavowed. The Senator himself, I think, moved an amendment to the bill to carry out Mr. Swift's prophecy, by proposing to add a section that the word "laborers" should be held to include all laborers, whether skilled or unskilled.

Mr. FARLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. That amendment was offered by the honorable Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon myself. I was thinking at the moment that the Senator from California offered it. Here is a declaration made by a compact between the two greatest nations of the Pacific, and now to be re-enforced by a solemn act of legislation, which places in the public law of the world and in the jurisprudence of America the principle that it is fit that there should hereafter be a distinction in the treatment of men by governments and in the recognition of their rights to the pursuit of happiness by a peaceful change of their homes, based not on conduct, not on character, but upon race and upon occupation. You may justly deny to the Chinese what you may not justly deny to the Irishman. You may deny to the laborer what you may not deny to the scholar or to the idler. And this declaration is extorted from unwilling China by the demand of America. With paupers, lazzaroni, harlots, persons afflicted with pestilential diseases, laborers are henceforth to be classed in the enumerations of American public law.

Certainly, Mr. President, this is an interesting and important transaction. It is impossible to overstate or to calculate the consequences which are likely to spring from a declaration made by the United States limiting human rights, especially a declaration in a treaty which is to become the international law governing these two great nations. As my friend from California [Mr. MILLER] well said, it is of the earth earthy. The United States within twenty years has taken its place as the chief power on the Pacific. Whatever rivalry or whatever superiority we may be compelled to submit to elsewhere, our advantage of position, unless the inferiority be in ourselves, must give us superiority there. Are we to hold out two faces to the world, one to Europe and another to Asia? Or are we to admit that the doctrine we have proclaimed so constantly for the first century of our history is a mere empty phrase or a lie?

For myself and for the State of Massachusetts, so far as it is my privilege to represent her, I refuse consent to this legislation. I will not consent to a denial by the United States of the right of every man who desires to improve his condition by honest labor—his labor being no man's property but his own—to go anywhere on the face of the earth that he pleases.

I have said that this bill seems to me to violate the provisions of the treaty it professes to execute. It does more. It confers on every collector of customs the authority to seize and forcibly remove from the country, without trial or legal process, every person of Chinese race whom he shall determine to be in the United States in violation of its provisions. The alien laws of June 25 and July 7, 1798, passed when war was deemed imminent, at a time of great and dangerous excitement, conferred upon the President of the United States for a period limited to two years the power to order out of the country aliens whose presence he might judge dangerous to its peace, and gave him the further authority in case of actual war to cause the removal of resident aliens, natives or citizens of the hostile nation.

These acts, passed against the protest of Hamilton, went far to cause the downfall of an administration. The alien law was overthrown because it intrusted the highest officer of the Government, the great constitutional lawyer and lover of liberty, John Adams, with the power for two years to order the removal of a single person whose presence for good cause he deemed dangerous to the public peace. But here a local officer of the smallest customs district may, yes, must, forcibly seize and expel, without trial or judicial hearing, the Chinese whom he finds within his precinct, however excellent his character, however advantageous his presence. We have experienced evils which required legislation to regulate immigration from other countries. But we have hitherto directed our remedy to the complaint.

There may be much that is wrong connected with the coming of these people from China, especially the importation of coolies. But let us in our statute use language which fitly describes the evil and would prevent, not language which strikes at the prerogative with which Government has no right to interfere. It is not importation, but immigration; it is not importation, but the free coming; it is not the slave, or the apprentice, or the prostitute, or the leper, or the the thief, but the laborer at whom this legislation strikes its blow.

What has happened within thirteen years that the great Republic should strike its flag? What change has come over us that we should eat the bravest and the truest words we ever spoke? From 1858 to 1880 there was added to the population of the country 42,000 Chinese.

I give a table from the census of 1880 showing the Chinese population of each State:

By the census of 1880 the number of Chinese in this country was 105,000—one five-h ndredth part of the whole population. The Chinese are the most easily governed race in the world. Yet every Chinaman in America has four hundred and ninety-nine Americans to control him.

I desire to read a letter written me by Edward Cunningham, esq., of Milton, Massachusetts, a high authority, which is full of information on this as on other points connected with our Chinese policies:

EAST MILTON,
January 25, 1881.

MY DEAR MR. HOAR: Mr. Forbes thinks you would take the trouble to read the letter if I wrote one about Mr. Angell's treaty and even that I might communicate something useful. I doubt it, but will write the letter, as you probably have an open fire-place and sit near it.

I cannot myself see why the United States had need to ask anything of China, supposing restrictions on immigration were necessary; but as that seems to be taken for granted, it is only open to object to the way in which it was asked.

Any one acquainted with the course of the long-continued negotiations with China by foreign ministers and envoys, now covering nearly forty years, would say, I am sure, that what we wanted could have been got from China as a favor to her, without any talk of concessions on our part.

Take, for instance, one lever, which the commissioners would have heard of at once if they had talked with any resident or well-informed person on Chinese affairs—the government dread of secret societies. China is filled with secret societies and they are always being pursued by the government and are always a source of anxiety. If our commissioners had approached their business in a diplomatic way, feeling their way, all these matters would have come to the surface. If they had said that the habit of the Chinese in banding together for purposes of immigration, and especially the existence of secret societies among them, made it necessary for their own protection against violent men in the United States that we should have especial regulations, they would have accorded the right without an objection, without asking whether the regulations were to cause "restrictions," or prohibition even.

But, granting that they knew too much for this, did commissioners ever give themselves so entirely away for a comparatively empty equivalent? The Chinese Government were asked for something about which they notoriously did not care two cents. They have never encouraged or liked emigration, and they do not now. They hate it when it is to countries from which the emigrants return with (to them) revolutionary ideas. For this unsubstantial thing the commissioners in their generous zeal for China hasten to give away our privilege in the favored-nation clause, and leave Americans out in the cold in every branch of local trade. For that is the meaning of the opium clause. Opium, from its high value and the very slender margin of profit on which it is conducted, is almost more a medium of exchange than an article of commerce to the nations outside of England and China. If used at all as a branch of trade it is used as a remittance from one port to another; and were new and small ports opened, too small for the establishment of branch banks, the prohibition to buy and sell opium would, I have no doubt, prevent Americans from participating in the trade of such places. The effect of such disability is certainly trifling as China's trade is now conducted, but the point remains the same that our own negotiators have willfully and with open eyes placed us at disadvantage.

In the matter of the carrying trade the injury is positive and sensible, since American vessels can no longer compete with English, German, or Chinese in a carrying trade which was opened to us after being opened to the English, and has been bragged of by American diplomates as a great achievement and concession, though due solely to the English. Apparently it is now thought too good for us, and is taken away.

The article about the law of the defendant, if it have any effect, will be one injurious to Americans. The treaties were intended to be so interpreted, but also intentionally were made slightly obscure—say rather, the point was slurred over, for they are not obscure, because while the negotiators could not demand that a Chinese defendant on his own ground should be subjected to English law they saw that an English creditor would never get anything from a Chinese debtor in a Chinese court.

So they slurred it over, trusting to after arrangements—a wise trust. What they soon did and established by convention was to institute a mixed court, where an English consul and a Chinese judge sat together. As was foreseen, the Chinese, having no legal laws and forms of inviolable rule, and the English having them, these mixed courts became in point of fact foreign courts where justice and not injustice was administered, and where bribery was reduced to the lowest point possible where Chinese officials are present.

I suppose that is now upset by this formal enactment. Taking the whole thing, it looks as if pomposity was at the bottom of the miserable failure.

Political considerations demanded that something should be done about Chinese immigration, and Mr. Evarts wanted to make a treaty, and Mr. Angell, Mr. Trescot, Mr. Swift wanted to show how raw American stuff would work into first-class negotiators. So every thing is as pompous as possible. Pomp without the circumstance.

As for opium, when one knows that China raises double the opium she imports, unchecked by the authorities; that India produces two and a half times as much as she sends to China, the residue being consumed in India, the straits, and adjacent countries, (quite as much, if not more, per capita, than in China,) that no one has the ghost of a grain for all those consumers, simply because there is no chance there for a slap at the Britisher, he begins to set at its proper value the sympathy thrown away on China for her sad trials under the tyranny of the English poppy grower.

But the whole thing is to me so mean and disgusting, that I half wish that all our relations with China, trade and all, should go to ruin. That Chinamen should never come here would be no matter. But that they should not come because our Republic of workingmen is afraid of their industry, frugality, and thrift, is too shameful for consideration.

It is that, of course, for there is no difficulty in controlling and governing them. In the foreign settlement at Shanghai we had (and they now have) a Chinese population of about seventy thousand living under one municipal government administered by a council composed of residents and backed up by the consular body, the police force being, if I recollect rightly, under one hundred men. They are kept in perfect order and the structure of houses and the drainage are made part of municipal affairs. In Hong-Kong a similar population, only much more turbulent owing to the presence of a considerable piratical population, is equally easily governed.

Yours, very truly,

EDWARD CUNNINGHAM.

P. S.—I wrote a letter published in the Nation of January 20, which perhaps gives other points, and is at all events more concise than this.

The immigration also was constantly decreasing for the last half of the decade. The Bureau of Statistics gives the numbers as follows, (for the first eight years the figures are those of the entire Asiatic immigration.)

The number of immigrants from Asia, as reported by the United States Bureau of Statistics is as follows, namely:

For the year ended June 30—
1871		7,236
1872		7,825
1873		20,326
1874		13,857
1875		16,498
1876		22,943
1877		10,640
1878		9,014
Total		108,339
And from China for the year ended June 30—
1879	9,604
1880	5,802
Total		15,406
Grand total		123,745

Very respectfully,

C. S. MIXTER, Chief of Division.

See also, Mr. President, how this class of immigrants, diminishing in itself, diminishes still more in its proportion to the rapidly increasing numbers who come from other lands. Against 22,943 Asiatic immigrants in 1876, there are but 5,802 in 1880. In 1878 there were 9,014 from Asia, in a total of 153,207, or one in seventeen of the entire immigration; and this includes all persons who entered the port of San Francisco to go to any South American country. In 1879 there were 9,604 from China in a total of 250,565, or one in twenty-six. In 1880 there were 5,802 from China in a total immigration of 593,359, or one in one hundred and two. The whole Chinese population, then, when the census of 1880 was taken, was but one in five hundred of our people. The whole Chinese immigration was but one in one hundred and two of the total immigration; while the total annual immigration quadrupled from 1878 to 1880, the Chinese was in 1880 little more than one-half what it was in 1878, and one-fourth what it was in 1876.

The number of immigrants of all nations was 720,045 in 1881. Of these 20,711 were Chinese. There is no record in the Bureau of Statistics of the number who departed within the year. But a very high anti-Chinese authority places it above 10,000. Perhaps the expectation that the hostile legislation under the treaty would not affect persons who entered before it took effect stimulated somewhat their coming. But the addition to the Chinese population was less than one-seventy-second of the whole immigration. All the Chinese in the country do not exceed the population of its sixteenth city. All the Chinese in California hardly surpass the number which is easily governed in Shanghai by a police of one hundred men. There are as many pure blooded Gypsies wandering about the country as there are Chinese in California. What an insult to American intelligence to ask leave of China to keep out her people, because this little handful of almond-eyed Asiatics threaten to destroy our boasted civilization. We go boasting of our democracy, and our superiority, and our strength. The flag bears the stars of hope to all nations. A hundred thousand Chinese land in California and everything is changed. God has not made of one blood all the nations any longer. The self-evident truth becomes a self-evident lie. The golden rule does not apply to the natives of the continent where it was first uttered. The United States surrender to China, the Republic to the despot, America to Asia, Jesus to Joss.

The advocates of this legislation appeal to a twofold motive for its support.

First. They invoke the old race prejudice which has so often played its hateful and bloody part in history.

Second. They say that the Chinese laborer works cheap and lives cheap, and so injures the American laborer with whom he competes.

The old race prejudice, ever fruitful of crime and of folly, has not been confined to monarchies or to the dark ages. Our own Republic and our own generation have yielded to this delusion, and have paid the terrible penalty. I do not mean to go over the ground which Mr. Sumner, with his accustomed industry and learning, so thoroughly traversed in his lecture upon caste. But I wish to plant myself upon the greatest authority in modern science, himself perhaps the most perfect example of the greatness of the capacity of the human intellect under the most favorable conditions. Listen to Alexander von Humboldt, as quoted by Mr. Sumner:

> While we maintain the unity of the human species, we at the same time repel the depressing assumption of superior and inferior races of men. There are nations more susceptible of cultivation, more highly civilized, more ennobled by mental cultivation, than others, but none in themselves nobler than others.—Alexander von Humboldt, quoted in Sumner's Works, volume 13, page 157.

What argument can be urged against the Chinese which was not heard against the negro within living memory? The visionary of the East, as he was called, was taunted with meddling with social arrangements of which he had no experience, and standing at a distance to watch evils from which he was safe. The negroes were savages, heathens, wild beasts. The master and the owner could judge much better how to deal with them than these sickly philanthropists. I do not need to go to the holders of slaves for examples of this prejudice. The Attorney-General of Massachusetts, in Faneuil Hall, compared the negroes to caged wild beasts. He charged Dr. Channing and his associates with the purpose of letting them loose to cut their masters' throats, when they demanded free speech for the abolitionist. The great political parties vied with each other in pandering to this prejudice. How completely has the experience of a single generation vindicated the justice of the Creator and the truth of the immortal declaration. An eminent citizen of my own State has recently published an account of an interview with the grandsons of John C. Calhoun:

In the course of a conversation upon the events preceding the war, with two grandsons of John C. Calhoun, the writer was somewhat startled by a remark substantially to this effect:

"If my grandfather and his associates had known as much about the negro as I know, and could have had the same faith in his capacity for progress which I have attained from my own experience, there would have been neither slavery nor war."

"Do you mean to tell me," I asked, "that your grandfather feared liberty for the black, however compassed?" "Of course I mean that," said he; "what other justification could there have been? He and his associates believed that the two races could not exist together upon the same soil except in the relation of masters and slaves."—Edward Atkinson, in Scribner's, for February, 1882.

Who now so bold as to deny to the colored race fitness for citizenship. Twenty years have not passed by since the children of the African savage were emancipated from slavery. In that brief space they have vindicated their title to the highest privileges and their fitness for the highest duties of citizenship. These despised savages have sat in the House and in the Senate. I have served with them for twelve years in both branches. Can you find an equal number, chosen on any principle of selection, whose conduct has been marked by more uniform good sense and propriety? I have seen most accomplished debaters unhorsed with as much dexterity as courtesy by one of this despised race. Coming to his place in the community, he has shown no memory of his centuries of wrong. Revenge and hate, those fires of hell, can find no fuel in the negro's breast. When Massachusetts desired to provide for a fitting eulogy to her great Senator she summoned to her service two of the most famous orators in the country. It is no injustice to those accomplished gentlemen to declare that their masterpieces did not surpass the address delivered in Faneuil Hall on the same theme by Robert B. Elliott, of South Carolina, a full-blooded African. One of this people has but lately left the Senate. We have all of us seen him here. I have seen him sitting in the chair where you now preside. In courtesy, modesty, dignity, wisdom, tact, in what other needed quality did he fall below the character of an American Senator?

There have been few scenes to me more impressive than when, in a single sentence, he uttered the protest of his own people against this legislation. Mr. Bruce said:

Mr. President, I desire to submit a single remark. Representing as I do a people, who but a few years ago were considered essentially disqualified from enjoying the privileges and immunities of American citizenship, and who have since been so successfully introduced into the body-politic, and having large confidence in the strength and assimilative power of our institutions, I shall vote against the pending bill.

It is scarcely forty years since the Irishman, who has been such a source of wealth and strength to America, began his exodus across the sea. There are men in this body, whose heads are not yet gray, who can remember how the arguments now used against the Chinese filled the American mind with alarm when used against the Irishman. He comes, said the honest bigotry of that day, only to get the means of living, and then to return; he will drive the American to starvation by the competition of his cheap labor; he lives in squalor and filth; he wants only a few potatoes for food; he is blindly attached to the Popish religion; he owes allegiance to a foreign potentate; he is incapable of intelligent citizenship.

Let me read a passage from Carlyle's Chartism, first published in 1839:

Crowds of miserable Irish darken all our towns. The wild Milesian features, looking false ingenuity, restlessness, unreason, misery, and mockery salute you on all highways and byways. The English coachman, as he whirls past, lashes the Milesian with his whip, curses him with his tongue.

I do not know whether that happens in California—

The Milesian is holding out his hat to beg. He is the sorest evil this country has to strive with. In his rags and laughing savagery, he is there to undertake all work that can be done by mere strength of hand and back, for wages that will purchase him potatoes. He needs only salt for condiment; he lodges to his mind in any pig-hutch or dog-hutch, roosts in outhouses; and wears a suit of tatters the getting off and on of which is said to be a difficult operation, transacted only on festivals and the high tides of the calendar. The time has come when the Irish population must either be improved a little or else exterminated.

De Quincy points out—

The hideous extent to which Irish intruders upon Scotland had taken the bread out of her own children's mouths.

Even the humane and liberal John Stuart Mill says:

If there were no other escape from that fatal immigration of the Irish—which has done and is doing so much to degrade the condition of our agricultural and some classes of our town population—I should see no injustice and the greatest possible expediency in checking that destructive inroad by prohibitive laws.

In the early edition of his Political Economy, Mr. Bowen, the learned and able professor at Harvard, expresses the same fear for America. He says the annual addition to our population of 400,000 foreigners, of whom one-fourth are Irish, is likely to effect a general and great depreciation in the price of labor.

Throw down the little that is left of our protective system—and let the emigration from Great Britain and Ireland to our shores increase to half a million annually, and within the lifetime of the present generation the laborer's hire in our Atlantic States will be as low as it is in England. This we should regard as the greatest calamity which the folly of men or the wrath of Heaven could bring upon the land.

These are but temperate expressions of opinions which drove less intelligent persons to frenzy and crime. The streets of Baltimore and of New Orleans ran with Irish blood. A great party was founded, and swept some States, on a platform of opposition to foreigners.

I suppose no person now would like to repeat the arguments which were addressed to the Know-nothing party in 1855. The Irishman has contributed by his labor to cover our land with railroads, which in their turn create cities, give value to land, and open new opportunities for labor. His sons and daughters are found in large numbers in our factories. He is acquiring land. He is a large depositor in our savings banks. He rendered indispensable service in war. More and more every year he ceases to be the dupe of demagogues, and is learning the higher duties of citizenship. Meantime, the wage of the American workman is higher and not lower for his presence. While he has bettered his own condition he has raised to a higher grade of social life and wealth the American laborer whose place he has taken.

We have another race problem still unsettled in this country. The history of Indian wars, of broken treaties, of a thousand million of dollars lavished in ninety years on a people of a fourth of a million in number illustrates the folly of dealing with savages by the methods of savages. Let me cite a single witness to the result of the method prescribed by the author of Christianity.

Hear the last thanksgiving proclamation of D. W. Bushyhead, the present principal chief of the Cherokee Nation:

Last year the census of the population and possessions of the Cherokee Nation was first taken within their history. We have now counted our treasures and know for what and for how much we should feel grateful as a family of people having and occupying one home in common. From this authentic source we find our people blessed with one hundred and two primary schools for a rapidly-increasing population of 20,300 citizens; two high schools, male and female; an orphan asylum, an asylum for the unfortunate—insane, blind, and helpless; forty-five churches and as many native ministers of the gospel; one hundred and fifty native teachers by profession; a written constitution and code of laws; a government consisting of executive, legislative, and judicial branches, well understood and administered; a people peaceful and progressive, and in all material regards more than self-supporting; and having but five fishermen and fifteen hunters by occupation left among them as the last vestige of a savage state from which we have been rescued within the memory of men yet living by the goodness of an overruling Providence.

"Such is the situation of the Cherokee Nation to-day, in a fair and ample country secured to them by treaty and by patent, and of which the honor and honesty of their great earthly protector, the United States Government, is pledged to guard their possession.

"Such are the blessings for which our thanks are continually due, among which blessings the first and best of all is saving knowledge whence they come and a sense of obligation which restrains pride.

"Therefore I, D. W. Bushyhead, principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, do hereby, in pursuance of an ancient Christian custom and the recommendation of the President of the United States, appoint Thursday, November 24, A. D. 1881, as a day of public thanksgiving throughout this nation, and call upon the Cherokee people to devote the time designated to the giving of expressions and evidences of their thankfulness to the Supreme Being for his kindness and love, in such ways and by such observances as shall become a Christian, orderly, and conscientious people. Let us thank Him for all His dispensations, as gifts of his goodness for our good, never forgetting that blessings are such indeed only when used in the cause of the Great Giver, which is the happiness of all alike; and that the results of our shortcomings are but benevolent cautions against evil—no less blessings, if we so regard them, than the happy consequences of virtuous life."

There is another most remarkable example of this prejudice of race which has happily almost died out here, which has come down from the dark ages and which survives with unabated ferocity in Eastern Europe. I mean the hatred of the Jew. The persecution of the Hebrew has never, so far as I know, taken the form of an affront to labor. In every other particular the reproaches which for ten centuries have been leveled at him are reproduced to do service against the Chinese. The Hebrew, so it was said, was not a Christian. He did not affiliate or assimilate into the nations where he dwelt. He was an unclean thing, a dog, to whom the crime of the crucifixion of his Saviour was never to be forgiven. The Chinese quarter of San Francisco had its type in every city of Europe. If the Jew ventured from his hiding place he was stoned. His wealth made him the prey of the rapacity of the noble, and his poverty and weakness the victim of the rabble. Yet how has this oriental conquered Christendom by the sublimity of his patience? The great poet of New England, who sits by every American fireside a beloved and perpetual guest, in that masterpiece of his art, the Jewish Cemetery at Newport, has described the degradation and the triumph of these persecuted children of God:

How came they here? What burst of Christian hate,
What persecution, merciless and blind,
Drove o'er the sea—that desert desolate—
These Ishmaels and Hagars of mankind?
They lived in narrow streets and lanes obscure,
Ghetto and Judenstrass, in mirk and mire;
Taught in the school of patience to endure
The life of anguish and the death of fire.

* * * * * * *

Anathema maranatha! was the cry
That rang from town to town, from street to street;
At every gate the accursed Mordecai
Was mocked and jeered, and spurned by Christian feet.

Pride and humiliation hand in hand
Walked with them through the world where'er they went;
Trampled and beaten were they as the sand,
And yet unshaken as the continent.

Forty years ago—

says Lord Beaconsfield, that great Jew who held England in the hollow of his hand, and who played on her aristocracy as on an organ, who made himself the master of an alien nation, its ruler, its oracle, and through it, and despite of it, for a time the master of Europe—

Forty years ago—not a longer period than the children of Israel were wandering in the desert—the two most dishonored races in Europe were the Attic and the Hebrew. The world has probably by this discovered that it is impossible to destroy the Jews. The attempt to extirpate them has been made under the most favorable auspices and on the largest scale; the most considerable means that man could command have been pertinaciously applied to this object for the longest period of recorded time. Egyptian Pharaohs, Assyrian kings, Roman emperors, Scandinavian crusaders, Gothic princes, and holy inquisitors have alike devoted their energies to the fulfillment of this common purpose. Expatriation, exile, captivity, confiscation, torture on the most ingenious and massacre on the most extensive scale, a curious system of degrading customs and debasing laws which would have broken the heart of any other people, have been tried, and in vain.

Lord Beaconsfield admits that the Jews contribute more than their proportion to the aggregate of the vile; that the lowest class of Jews are obdurate, malignant, odious, and revolting. And yet this race of dogs, as it has been often termed in scorn, furnishes Europe to-day its masters in finance and oratory and statesmanship and art and music. Rachel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Disraeli, Rothschild, Benjamin, Heine, are but samples of the intellectual power of a race which to-day controls the finance and the press of Europe.

I do not controvert the evidence which is relied upon to show that there are great abuses, great dangers, great offenses, which have grown out of the coming of this people. Much of the evil I believe might be cured by State and municipal authority. Congress may rightfully be called upon to go to the limit of the just exercise of the powers of government in rendering its aid.

We should have capable and vigilant consular officers in the Asiatic ports from which these immigrants come, without whose certificate they should not be received on board ship, and who should see to it that no person except those of good character and no person whose labor is not his own property be allowed to come over. Especially should the trade in human labor under all disguises be suppressed. Filthy habits of living must surely be within the control of municipal regulation. Every State may by legislation or by municipal ordinance in its towns and cities prescribe the dimension of dwellings and limit the number who may occupy the same tenement.

An argument is based on the character of the Chinese. You should take a race at its best, and not at its worst, in looking for its possibilities under the influence of freedom. The Chinese are in many particulars far superior to our own ancestors as they were when they first came forth into the light of history. Our British forefathers, at a time far within the historic period, remained in a degradation of superstition and a degradation of barbarism to which China never descended. Centuries after the Chinese philosopher had uttered the golden rule, and had said, "I like life and I like righteousness; if I cannot keep the two together I will let life go; and choose righteousness," the Druids of Britain were offering human sacrifices to pagan deities. We must take a race at its best in determining its capacity for freedom. This race can furnish able merchants, skillful diplomatists, profound philosophers, faithful servants, industrious and docile laborers. An eminent member of the other House told me that he had dealt with Chinese merchants to the amount of hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, and that they had never deceived him.

Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Pacific coast, writes a letter giving the result of his observation as a magistrate for four years, every word of which is worth reading:

To the Editor of The Tribune:

SIR: Fearful that the President of the United States may be induced to sign the Chinese anti-emigration bill, I beg to submit to his consideration the following brief statements: In the first place it is claimed that this is a bill which the Pacific people have deeply at heart. I venture to assert that not half of the solid wealth and worth of the far West, outside of the politicians, favor this bill. I have many letters protesting against it as a coarse and cruel measure. My parents, all my people, my heart and my home are there. I know the hardy, honest-hearted settlers there, and I know that they protest against this measure which politicians are trying to compel through Congress in their name. And why is this being done? As early as 1854 this cry against the Chinese began to be heard along the wharves and about the hotels of San Francisco. It came from Irish laborers and porters, but the cry was equally loud against the negro and the Mexican. In a few years it became more loud, and centered on the Chinaman, for the Mexican had melted away before us and the negro had gravitated back home. But the cry now came also from the Irish "help," who, by extortionate wages, had brought the Chinamen in competition. These chambermaids, &c., had brothers, lovers. These brothers and lovers were voters—makers of Congressmen. The Chinamen did not vote, and so had no champion. This is the key to the whole question. This outcry against the Chinamen has from that day been a polititical shibboleth. No man yet, so far as I have known, has gone to Congress and had the manhood to rise in his place and bravely tell the truth and speak a fearless word for this silent and friendless stranger.

About 1856 the Chinaman began to take hold of the placer mines alongside of the miners of the Sierras. Up to that time he had confined himself, as a rule, to the pan and rocker and kept in the wake of the white miner; but now he took to the long tom, sluice, and flume, and bought and worked mines on a large scale. He never ventured to "take up" a claim, but timidly held his ground by bill of sale from some speculator, who had sold it to him at a fabulous price. The honest men of the Sierras welcomed them, and side by side they worked together for many years; and I am certain that every miner of those days who has no selfish ends to serve will gladly testify to the honesty, industry, and neighborly good-nature of these silent little brown men. These people, at the same time, were terribly taxed by the county authorities; but they always came up promptly, and without a word of complaint paid what was demanded of them. At Cañon City, Grant County, Oregon, this monthly tax was $5 a head for every Chinaman. They had to constantly endure wrongs from every drunken ruffian or reckless "hoodlum" who saw fit to impose upon them; yet they were the most peaceful people we had among us. I sat on the bench as judge of this county for four years, and I will state on the honor of a magistrate that the calendar, both criminal and civil, showed the names of at least ten white men to one Chinaman, although the Chinese population, during the most of this time, outnumbered the whites. Let me here say that I never, during all my years of intercourse with this people as miner or magistrate, saw a single drunken Chinaman. I never saw a Chinese beggar; I never saw a lazy Chinaman. They are perhaps the most industrious people in the world. It is a part of the Chinaman's religion that in the sweat of his face he shall eat his bread.

Can the United States afford to fear these patient and simple people? They will not harm us. They are not strikers, rioters, and burners of cities. But there is something more in this than the selfish question of our own security. The Chinaman who returns home carries something more than our gold to his land; he takes with him and disseminates there all the art, civilization, freedom, or truth which he found here. These are the real missionaries to China. This bill must not become a law. This bold attempt to make it so ought to condemn to everlasting infamy every one of the great names that advocated it. The little men who stand as ciphers to dignify and add to these great figures in Congress are not, perhaps, so much to blame. But it is pitiful to see these great minds prostituted to such selfish aims. They pay a poor compliment to the intelligence of the people of the Pacific coast if they think they are not perfectly understood. No; the Creator of us all opened the Golden Gate to the whole wide world. Let no man attempt to shut it in the face of his fellow-man.

JOAQUIN MILLER.

NEW YORK, February 23, 1879.

One of the ablest of the writers against the Chinese, Mr. James A. Whitney, sums up his opinion thus:

The Chinese intellect, the Chinese character, is strong, vigorous, patient, and far-sighted. As diplomates, the statesmen of China have held their own with those of every nation in the world.

Indeed, a large part of the argument of the Senator from California is based, not on Chinese inferiority, but on his dread of Chinese superiority in most of the occupations of life. Their civilization, he says, will be too strong for ours, if the two come in conflict in a fair field.

Let me read from the statement of Mr. Pixley, counsel for the municipality of San Francisco, before the Congressional committee in 1876:

What kind of labor do they perform?—

This was one of the questions put by the committee to this gentleman representing the anti-Chinese side. I think Mr. Pixley now is, or has been, attorney-general of the State of California—

I will only say that they perform all kinds of light labor, and that particularly which requires no capital; and they are expert in that which requires dextrous manipulation of the fingers—as the assorting of wool, working in silks, the rolling of cigars, and such matters as that. They are imitative and quick to learn, and they have monopolized many of the branches of our industry. Laundry-work, cigar-making, slippers, sewing-machine labor, they have very nearly monopolized. They are largely employed as domestic servants and as office-boys.

These filthy people!

In assorting and repacking teas, in silk and woolen manufactories, in fruit-picking, in gardening, in harvesting, in building levees for the restoration of tule lands, in railroad building, in placer mining, in basket peddling of vegetables and fruits, in fishing and peddling fish, are among the most noted of their industries, and from these industries that I have named they have nearly driven out the entire white labor.

* * * * * * * *

What is their character as laborers? Many of them are most excellent and good laborers. It would be unwise for us to assume what is not recognized as a truth in relation to this fact. Many of the Chinese are very good laborers indeed. They do not, as a rule, work as rapidly, nor do they perform their work as well as white laborers—and this is especially true of those pursuits requiring skill. They are imitative, industrious, and patient.

* * * * * * * *

They are good farm laborers; they are good railroad builders; they are good levee constructors, and many of them are excellent domestic servants. They fill the menial positions of the country well, and I remember once, in the earlier times, to have heard Senator Casserly in a speech say—it was when John Parrott was building, or shortly after he had built, his grand block at the corner of California and Sixth streets, out of blocks chiseled in China, marked, numbered, and sent here, and put up as the building now stands—that the danger of Chinese immigration was because they were good laborers. I thought it was a heresy at the time, but I have become convinced that Mr. Casserly was wiser than I, and that one of the dangers to our laboring population is because the Chinese do labor so well.

* * * * * * * *

In response to question 9—"What rate of wages do they receive?"—the Chinaman begins to work for what wages he can get. A domestic servant will go into your family upon his immediate arrival in San Francisco for $3 a week.

I can remember when the best Yankee girl that ever lived was glad to get one dollar a week for her wages.

If the mistress of the house will teach him English, or if the benevolent maiden lady of his neighborhood will invite him to her class in Sunday-school until he can speak a little English, he will increase his wages; and as he learns to cook and learns to talk, he learns to demand a higher and better compensation for his labor, until he finally reaches the highest point that his labor will demand, from $3 at first to $8 a week.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask what he reads from?

Mr. HOAR. I read from the report of the Congressional committee of which Senator Morton was chairman, from the argument of Mr. Pixley, attorney-general of California, in stating the case which, having the charge of putting in the entire evidence against the Chinese, he proposed to establish.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the honorable Senator do me the favor to read from the same report what Mr. Pixley says further in his testimony before that committee?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; I think I should prefer to go on in my own way.

Mr. FARLEY. It is a very short paragraph.

Mr. HOAR. I am putting in an admission of the person charged with the presentation of the case which has led to this legislation. I do not think it is quite fair to ask me to read something else.

Mr. FARLEY. I will take occasion, then, to show what Mr. Pixley did say.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, but the Senator will not question the entire accuracy of what is said here. I admit that he is still blind, notwithstanding this admission. Now I wish to read a sentence or two from the report of Senator Morton, the last dying legacy of this great Senator and lover of human liberty, published since his death and left by him unfinished as his last public work. He says:

If the Chinese in California were white people, being in all other respects what they are, I do not believe that the complaints and warfare made against them would have existed to any considerable extent. Their difference in color, dress, manners, and religion has, in my judgment, more to do with this hostility than their alleged vices or any actual injury to the white people of California.

* * * * * * *

As a rule, they are industrious, temperate, and honest in their dealings. Some thousands of them are employed as household servants in the cities and in the country. In this capacity the testimony generally concurs in giving them a high character. They very readily learn to perform all kinds of household duty, are devoted to their employment, and soon become exceedingly skillful. The testimony proved that they went to all parts of the State to serve in that capacity, when other servants or help of that kind could not be obtained from the cities, and that if they were banished it would be very hard, in fact, as many of the witnesses said, impossible to supply their places. As laborers upon the farms and in the gardens and vineyards nearly all of the witnesses speak of them in the highest terms.

* * * * * * *

In the construction of railroads and other public works of California the Chinese have been of the greatest service and have performed the largest part of the labor.

* * * * * * *

That they have injuriously interfered with the white people of California or have done them a serious injury may well be doubted.

That I will speak of a little later. I have here extracts from the committee's report, which I find in a petition before me; I will read a few, but they are all in the Congressional report, and are from men of high character:

Charles Crocker, president of the Southern Pacific Railroad, testified, "that without Chinese labor we would be thrown back in all the branches of industry, farming, mining, reclaiming lands, and everything else." (Report, page 67.)

George D. Roberts, main officer of the Tide-land Reclamation Company: "I do not think we could get the white men to do the work of reclaiming these lands. It is a class of work that white men do not like. In my opinion the aggregate product of the wealth produced by Chinamen in the State is equal to our mines, including the mines of Nevada and Dakota; probably they produce sixty, eighty, or ninety millions a year in wealth. (Report, pages 437–38.)

Alfred Wheeler, attorney at law, resident of California for twenty-seven years, said: "I think that the immigration of Chinese has been vastly beneficial to the growth of California, and think it vastly beneficial to every white man, woman, and child in the State. Take the making of boots and shoes; before we had much labor here, or any manufactures of them, or any other manufactures in the State, we imported mostly from Massachusetts. The money went out of the State to contribute to the manufacturers of Massachusetts, and every man paid a hundred per cent. more for boots that he wore in this State and the blankets he used than he pays to-day. (Report, page 515.)

W. W. Hollister, resident of California since 1852, a large landholder and employer of Chinese: "The Chinaman is good in everything, I do not care where you put him, and owing to the demoralized condition of American labor he is the best man in California for work." (Report, page 770.)

John H. Hill, resident of California since 1850, a farmer, and employer of Chinese: "I find them (the Chinese) from experience, to be temperate, industrious, honest, and good laborers, creating no disturbance whatever." (Report, page 790.)

Rev. Otis Gibson, Methodist minister, formerly a minister to China for ten years: "The standard of Chinese morals is higher and better than that of any other heathen nation in the world." (Report, page 401.)

Solomon Heydenfeldt, ex-justice of the supreme court, for twenty-seven years resident of California: "I think they (the Chinese) are the best laboring class we have among us." (Report, page 504.) "As far as concerns their industry, and their frugality, and fidelity, and general intelligence, and their cleanliness, I think those who have been in the habit of employing them, and know something about them, place them above the corresponding classes of other people." (Report, page 505.)

Herman Heyneman, importer and manufacturer of woolen goods for fifteen years, whose operators are about one-half Chinese: "I think that so-called white people, if we could have them thoroughly examined, and one thing and another, might be preferable, but I would a good deal sooner have the Chinese than a good many of them." (Report, page 541.)

W. F. Babcock, resident of California since 1852, connected with the commercial house of Parrott & Co.: "Mr. Parrott did all their (the Chinese) banking business here for years, and he told me that he had never lost one dollar of principal or interest from any Chinaman while he was in the business." (Report, page 712.)

F. W. Macondray, merchant, resident of California over twenty-four years: "Q. To what extent in round numbers do you deal with the Chinese in a monetary point annually? Perhaps $500,000 or $600,000 a year—we have never lost a dollar by them to my knowledge in twenty-four years." (Report, page 853.)

Here are a great many of the good qualities of Chinese laborers admitted by anti-Chinese testimony.

Maurice C. Blake, (anti-Chinese,) ex-judge of the municipal court, now mayor of San Francisco: "My impression is that they (the Chinese) are very good, as far as mere work is concerned. I think they are very industrious."—(Rep. page 273.)

H. H. Haight, (anti-Chinese,) ex-governor of California, replied to the following questions: Q. "Are the Chinese generally industrious?—A. Generally industrious. Q. Are they not generally law-abiding?—A. I think they are."—(Report, page 290.)

But they will not assimilate with us, says the Senator from California.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to inquire, I should be glad to know if it would be agreeable to him to yield to me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, so that he may conclude to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I think I shall want to occupy about twenty minutes more, and I suppose it would be more agreeable to the Senate to have me conclude to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. Would the Senator prefer to conclude at the present time, or will he allow me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. HOAR. It would be more agreeable to me to proceed this evening, unless disagreeable to other gentlemen. If any gentleman prefers an adjournment, I of course would not ask him to stay here to listen to me. I think I can finish by a quarter before five o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I desire to consult the wishes of the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to make my statement as compact as I can.

But the Chinese, it is said, will not assimilate with us. It is said the two races have been side by side for thirty years and no step taken toward assimilation. It is admitted that they have learned our industries rapidly and intelligently. That they do not incline to become Christians or republicans may perhaps be accounted for by the treatment they have received. They are excluded by statute from the public schools. They have no honest trial by jury. Judge Blake, of the San Francisco criminal court, testifies:

It is true that as a rule when a Chinaman's case goes to a jury there is no help about it, the jury must convict him.

They are said to be "without sense of the obligation to tell the truth." They have failed to profit by the example of their white instructors and models, testified to by Judge Blake of the San Francisco criminal court, who says:

It is true that as a rule when a Chinaman's case goes to a jury there is no help about it, the jury must convict him. And further, they are the poorest witnesses I have ever seen.

What he means by a poor witness comes next:

Is not perjury committed daily by whites?—Undoubtedly, white or black. White witnesses will do that to almost any extent. If you will turn to page 404 of the report you will find it quoted as a statement of one of California's eminent judges, Stanley, that "perjury in our courts by white witnesses is as common as smoking in our streets."

That is not my statement; yet the Chinese do not assimilate with these excellent Christians!

But, Mr. President, what special inducements have the Chinese to become republicans in a State which has established a constitution which in article 2, section 1, says:

Every native male citizen of the United States, every male person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every male naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he claims his vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law: Provided, No native of China, no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, and no person hereafter convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money, shall ever exercise the privileges of an elector in this State.

And in article 19, section 2:

No corporation now existing or hereafter formed under the laws of this State shall, after the adoption of this constitution, employ, directly or indirectly, in any capacity, any Chinese or Mongolian. The Legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to enforce this provision.

And in section 3, of the same article:

No Chinese shall be employed on any State, county, municipal, or other public work, except in punishment for crime.

Then in section 4, same article:

The Legislature shall delegate all necessary power to the incorporated cities and towns of this State for the removal of Chinese without the limits of such cities and towns, or for their location within prescribed portions of those limits; and it shall also provide the necessary legislation to prohibit the introduction into this State of Chinese after the adoption of this constitution.

An eminent and learned judge of the Supreme Court of the United States gave a judgment on an ordinance of the city of San Francisco directing that the head of every person convicted of crime should be shaved, should be "cut or clipped to a uniform length of one inch from the scalp thereof"—an ordinance directed against the Chinese only, intended to impose upon them cruel and degrading punishments. Judge Field says, after pointing out the iniquity of this ordinance:

It is not creditable to the humanity and civilization of our people, much less to their Christianity, that an ordinance of this character was possible.

I take from a pamphlet by Samuel E. W. Baker, secretary to the Bishop of Wilmington, Delaware, late professor in the University of Virginia, this statement, which is based on proof before the committee:

The "cubic-air law, under a penalty of $50 to $500 or imprisonment or both, forbids any one sleeping in a room where there is less than 500 cubic feet of air for each occupant, carefully exempting from the operation thereof all prisons, hospitals, &c., so that the spectacle is often presented of men (Chinese) dragged by the hundred from their apartments, (which may or may not have had the requisite amount of air,) taken perspiring along the street and thrown into cells under the city hall, where they did not average confessedly the one-twentieth amount of air that the ordinance called for. One policeman tells rather boastingly of having himself 'nailed' over 1,100 Chinese."

There is a mass of evidence on this point. I might present many extracts from the report of the Congressional committee of 1876, but I will not, in order to save the time of the Senate. I wish, however, to read one statement of Mr. Pixley, who represented the anti-Chinese side. After summing up the qualities of the men such as he has described, he says:

In other words, I believe * * * that the Chinese have no souls to save, and if they have they are not worth the saving.

But it is urged, and this, in my judgment, is the greatest argument for the bill, that the introduction of the labor of the Chinese reduces the wages of the American laborer. "We are ruined by Chinese cheap labor" is a cry not limited to the class to whose representative the brilliant humorist of California first ascribed it. I am not in favor of lowering anywhere the wages of any American labor, skilled or unskilled. On the contrary, I believe the maintenance and the increase of the purchasing power of the wages of the American workingman should be the one principal object of our legislation. The share in the product of agriculture or manufacture which goes to labor should, and I believe will, steadily increase. For that, and for that only, exists our protective system. The acquisition of wealth, national or individual, is to be desired only for that. The statement of the accomplished Senator from California on this point meets my heartiest concurrence. I have no sympathy with any men, if such there be, who favor high protection and cheap labor.

But I believe that the Chinese, to whom the terms of the California Senator attribute skill enough to displace the American in every field requiring intellectual vigor, will learn very soon to insist on his full share of the product of his work. But whether that be true or not, the wealth he creates will make better and not worse the condition of every higher class of labor. There may be trouble or failure in adjusting new relations. But sooner or later every new class of industrious and productive laborers elevates the class it displaces. The dread of an injury to our labor from the Chinese rests on the same fallacy that opposed the introduction of labor-saving machinery, and which opposed the coming of the Irishman and the German and the Swede. Within my memory in New England all the lower places in factories, all places of domestic service, were filled by the sons and daughters of American farmers. The Irishmen came over to take their places; but the American farmer's son and daughter did not suffer; they were only elevated to a higher plane. In the increased wealth of the community their share is much greater. The Irishman rose from the bog or the hovel of his native land to the comfort of a New England home and placed his children in a New England school. The Yankee rises from the loom and the spinning-jenny to be the teacher, the skilled laborer in the machine shop, the inventor, the merchant, or the opulent landholder and farmer of the West.

I wish also to read in this connection what Mr. Morton says as his conclusion:

> That they have injuriously interfered with the white people of California, or have done them a serious injury, may well be doubted. The great fact is that there is to-day and always has been a scarcity of labor on the Pacific coast. There is work for all who are there, both white and Mongolian, and the State would undoubtedly develop much more rapidly were there more and cheaper labor. There was much intelligent testimony to the fact that the Chinese by their labor opened up large avenues and demand for white labor. The Chinese performed the lowest kind, while the whites monopolized that of a superior character. This was well stated by Mr. Crocker, a very intelligent witness, largely interested in the Central Pacific and Southern California Railroads. In answer to a question as to what was the effect of Chinese upon white labor, and whether it was to deprive white men of employment, or had that effect at any time, he said: "I think that they afford white men labor. I think that their presence here affords to white men a more elevated class of labor. As I said before, if you should drive these 75,000 Chinamen off you would take 75,000 white men from an elevated class of work and put them down to doing this low class of labor that the Chinamen are now doing, and instead of elevating you would degrade the white labor to that extent."

Then again:

> For any man to ride through California, from one end of this State to the other, and see the miles upon miles of uncultivated land, and in the mountains millions of acres of timber, and the foothills waiting for some one to go and cultivate them, and then talk about there being too much labor here in the country, is simply nonsense, in my estimation. There is labor for all, and the fact that the Chinamen are here gives an opportunity to white men to go in and cultivate this land where they could not cultivate it otherwise. Other evidence showed that by Chinese labor over 1,000,000 acres of tule lands have been reclaimed. This was work of the hardest and most unhealthy character, requiring them to work for a large part of the time in mud and water; but the lands, when reclaimed, were occupied and cultivated by white men, furnishing a great many homes, and were in fact the richest and most productive in California. They also chiefly performed the work in constructing irrigating canals for farming purposes, and dams and canals for supplying the mines with water, by which a very large extent of country was made exceedingly productive, furnishing homes and employment for thousands of white men, and by which, also, the mines were made profitable, and created a large demand for white labor. The evidence further showed that the railroads, chiefly constructed by these people, were the pioneers in settlement and agriculture; that the settlements followed the railroads; that wherever a railroad was constructed the lands were taken up and converted into farms and homesteads. While there was complaint that the Chinese, by their cheap labor, took it from white people, inquiry failed to show that there was any considerable number of white people in California out of employment, except those who were willfully idle; that there was work, and remunerative work, for all who chose to perform it.

California has a population of 700,000. She can support seventeen million. Will it be claimed that these seventeen million will not be better off by finding there the wealth and the improvements which Chinese labor will prepare for their possession; by finding the railroad built, the swamp drained, the highway smoothed, the harbor dredged?

Will it be maintained that if California could have for nothing what she gets cheaply from Chinese labor, she would not be better off? If the swamp lands had been made prairie lands by nature; if the ravines had been filled and mountains tunneled by nature, so that the road-bed was ready for the rail; if every man, instead of buying shoes from Massachusetts, had a pair left gratis at his door, that the State would not be better off. Is barren land or productive land best for a State? Then surely the laborer who does these things at least cost does most for the community, and gives the people who occupy the State opportunity for better profit in other fields of industry.

But the statements as to the cheapness of living and cheapness of wages of the Chinese are greatly exaggerated.

I have here a statement giving the prices of wages in California in 1878:

CARPENTERS' WAGES.

The price paid to carpenters in California ranges from $3 to $3.50 per day. This is the general rule throughout the city. But there are many cases where unemployed men will work for less, ranging from $2 up to $3 per day. In Providence, Rhode Island, during the past year the wages of carpenters have averaged from $1.50 to $1.75 per day.

BRICKLAYERS.

In this city bricklayers get from $4 to $5 per day, only the ordinary workmen receiving the former price. The ruling price is probably not far from $5. The exact price paid to this labor in the East is not known, but it is undoubtedly much lower than the rate paid here.

PAINTERS.

Painters receive here $3 per day, plasterers $3.50, mortar-mixers and hod-carriers $3, but there are undoubtedly many men who would willingly work for less, although probably not for a less sum than is paid East. The wages of this class of labor have been greatly reduced in the Eastern States during the past two or three years.

STONE-CUTTING.

The regular price paid stone-cutters in this city is $4 per day, but the price of the same kind of labor in the East is lower. There workingmen are working for what they can get. In this city at present there is little work, and there are many stone-cutters out of employment. But when the work in the cemeteries again starts up nearly all will find employment.

MACHINISTS AND BRASS-FOUNDERS.

The prices paid machinists in this city range from $3 to $4 per day. The great majority of this class of workmen receive $3.50 per day. Many receive the highest price, $4. The wages of this class of labor is more than 50 per cent. higher here than in the East. In the Eastern States machinists get from $1.75 to $2.50 per day. Brass-founders East receive $3 per day; here $4.50.

COMMON LABORERS.

Common labor is much higher here than in the East. The ruling price here is $2 per day, and it was proposed by Supervisor Foley to fix the price paid by the city at that figure. It is true that there are many laborers at this time working temporarily for $1 per day, but $2 per day has been the almost universal price, and is now paid by a great many large employers of labor. In the East, however, the price of this kind of labor is far less, averaging probably not much over $1. In many instances men are working for a ninety cents, and even less. On some of the great railroads only ninety cents is paid. In the great manufactories of New England the average price of ordinary labor is not many cents over $1 per day. Working, as they do in many instances, by the hour, the rate paid will average about eleven cents.

WOOLEN-MILL HANDS.

In our woolen mills common labor is paid $2 per day. Skilled labor averages from $2.50 to $3.50 per day, depending upon the kind of work preferred. In the East, mule-spinners receive as high pay as any of the operatives, and their wages do not average much over $1.50 per day, but here the remuneration is greater. The weavers—girls and women—range from ninety cents to $1.50 per day, the average being about $1. On ordinary work in eastern cotton mills women will not average much over $22 per month. Boys and girls are paid from three to six cents per hour, laborers and watchmen ten to eleven cents.

THE CIGAR BUSINESS.

In the cigar manufacturing business the wages are higher here than East. Chinamen receive from $6 to $6.50 per 1,000, while for the same work East $4 are paid. Cigar manufacturing does not require many adult workmen, many boys being employed. Going into a cigar manufactory here one will see many diminutive Chinamen, apparently from eleven to fifteen years old. The wages of such a manufactory will average about $6.50 per week.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKERS.

In the boot and shoe manufacturing business California is paying for white labor from 50 to 60 per cent. more than is being paid East. For some kinds of work our manufacturers are paying 65 cents where 30 cents are paid East, and $1 against 62½ cents. Wages here average from $12 to $20 per week, depending upon the kind of work. In the East complaints are made that workmen will average from $5 to $10 only. In Toronto, workmen say that they receive from $4 to $8 per week, and they have struck for higher wages. Leather will average less in price here than East, yet much of the material used by eastern boot and shoe manufacturers is shipped from this coast, manufactured, and sent back to us to be sold at as great, if not greater, profit than can be made on the same articles manufactured here.

DOMESTICS.

In the matter of servants, wages are from $25 to $30 per month, and even then the girls are not willing to go to places where there are more than two or three children, and are very particular as to the work to be done. They are not willing to go into the country, and seem to be determined to accept no place except that in which the work is light. A few days ago a gentleman in Sacramento sent an order for a cook, at $20 per month. The manager of an employment agency tried to get one of over forty girls to take the place, but none would go. The Ladies' Protection and Relief Society could not get a Protestant cook for $30 from among the same lot of girls waiting for a situation. No one would go to San Luis Obispo to do general house-work at $25. No one would go to Emerton as cook at $20, and several refused to work at $25 in a family not far from the new City Hall. A girl who had been out at house-work for only four months, and could not cook, would not accept anything less than $20.

There are a great many families who would willingly give $15 per month, a high rate of wages East, but it is almost impossible to find a girl who will work for that sum. Many families willing to give $20, not being able to find girls willing to accept that amount, prefer to do their own work, sending their washing to laundries. If domestics were willing to take from $15 to $20 per month, the demand would far outrun the supply. The wages paid Chinamen as house-servants are about the same as those paid to white help in the East, where the average wages is about $3 per week.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. HOAR. I am reading from the San Francisco Bulletin of the 9th of February, 1878, giving the prices of different labor at that time. It is a synopsis of the report.

I wish to read to the Senate one most remarkable example from a California paper of the 23d of February, 1882, in regard to the claim that the Chinese live on rice, cheap and filthy food, and thereupon reduce the standard of the necessaries of life for American labor. It seems that a Chinaman left a will, by which he required his executor to run a restaurant for a year of which he was the proprietor, and the account and execution of that will has just been rendered in the court:

[Daily Alta Californian, February 23, 1882.]

A CHINESE EXECUTORSHIP.

Yesterday Maurice C. Blake, who was appointed referee last November to examine the annual account of Ohong Que, executor of the will of Choy Poi, submitted his report, which was approved. The order approving the accounts shows that the amount of money in the hands of the executor November 1, 1881, was $500. The amount received by him as such executor in twelve months was $31,953.60, making the total receipts $32,453.60. The full amount expended was $31,105.70, leaving a balance in his hands of $1,347.90. The estate consists of a Chinese restaurant conducted on Asiatic principles, and is insured for $10,000. The classification of expenditures shows, among other items, for the twelve months from November 1, 1880, to October 31, 1881: rent, $4,832, or $236 a month; gas, $1,241.50; water, $192.45; wood, $1,436; wine, $3,571.85.

Who says they are not civilized?

Coffee, $58.85; tea, $498.20: sugar, $1,125.50; rock-sugar, $1,193.60; rice, $1,875; flour, $516.80; meat, $3,759.15; poultry, $5,848.15; sundries, $1,785.40; wages, $3,828. The wages amount to $319 a month throughout the year, showing that the fifteen employés receive each about $21 a month. A letter from F. A. Bee, Chinese consul, approving the management of the estate, accompanied the report of the referee.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate by reading the abundant testimony, of which this is but the sample, of the possession by the people of this race of the possibility of a development of every quality of intellect, art, character, which fits them for citizenship, for republicanism, for Christianity.

Humanity, capable of infinite depths of degradation, is capable also of infinite heights of excellence. The Chinese, like all other races, has given us its examples of both. To rescue humanity from this degradation is, we are taught to believe, the great object of God's moral government on earth. It is not by injustice, exclusion, caste, but by reverence for the individual soul that we can aid in this consummation. It is not by Chinese policies that China is to be civilized. I believe that the immortal truths of the Declaration of Independence came from the same source with the Golden Rule and the Sermon on the Mount. We can trust Him who promulgated these laws to keep the country safe that obeys them. The laws of the universe have their own sanction. They will not fail. The power that causes the compass to point to the north, that dismisses the star on its pathway through the skies, promising that in a thousand years it shall return again true to its hour, and keeps His word, will vindicate His own moral law. As surely as the path on which our fathers entered a hundred years ago led to safety, to strength, to glory, so surely will the path on which we now propose to enter bring us to shame, to weakness, and to peril.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this occasion to lay before the Senate some House bills for reference.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 112) authorizing the appointment of Humphrey H. Lemon upon the Capitol police force was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The bill (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado, was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill be laid on the table instead of referring it to the Committee on Commerce, inasmuch as the Senate committee has reported a bill identical with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, in relation to the request of the Cherokee Indians in Indian Territory for payment for lands belonging to them in said Territory ceded to the United States by the sixteenth article of their treaty of July 19, 1866, for the settlement of friendly Indians.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of May 19, 1881, a communication, with accompanying papers, from the Secretary of State, respecting the collection by consular officers of certain official fees in connection with the authentication of invoices, and the compensation of such officers.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1882.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MAXEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED AMERICAN CONGRESS.

Mr. CALL. I wish to give notice that on Monday next I shall ask to take up the resolution submitted by me on the subject of Chili and Peru, for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

JOSEPH R. SHANNON.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 74) to provide for the payment of the claim of Joseph R. Shannon, of Louisiana, be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 1, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. MUTCHLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4690) to authorize the purchase of a site and erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices at the city of Allentown, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 4429) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture be made the special order for Saturday, March 25, immediately after the morning hour, and from day to day until the same is disposed of, not to interfere with the general appropriation bills. This request is concurred in, I believe, by every member of the Committee on Agriculture. The bill affects the whole farming interest, and I hope there will be no objection to the request.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will include the pleuro-pneumonia bill I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that Saturday, March 25, be fixed for the consideration of House bill No. 4429, to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANNING. Not to interfere with general appropriation bills.

Mr. ANDERSON. Not to interfere with appropriation bills, but to be a continuous order.

The SPEAKER. To continue from day to day. What hour of the day does the gentleman propose to fix?

Mr. ANDERSON. After the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand this order is to include the bill in reference to pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is in this bill a provision in respect to animal industry, which will naturally bring up the subject of the bill referred to; but I am perfectly willing to include that bill in the order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KASSON. I ask that this order be made subject to the priority of revenue and appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, that is included in the request. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

OXFORD, MARYLAND, A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. COVINGTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4691) making Oxford, in the State of Maryland, a port of entry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES H. CONARD.

Mr. COVINGTON also, by unanimous consent, (by request,) introduceda bill (H. R. No. 4692) granting a pension to Charles H. Conard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DENVER, COLORADO, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Public Calendar, and to put upon its passage now, House bill No. 2192, to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado. I would like to make one statement in reference to this bill before any gentleman makes objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to take from the Calendar for present consideration the bill the title of which has just been read.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGGS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and also some executive communications and resolutions of the Senate in reference to printing at this time.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. No.

1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas; when the Speaker signed the same.

REPORT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of Julius E. Hilgard, superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1881, for distribution by said superintendent.

LIST OF MERCHANT VESSELS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 1,000 additional copies of the list of merchant vessels (published under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury) for 1881 be printed for the use of the Department of State.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. JADWIN for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

CIVIL-SERVICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

In reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 24th ultimo, I transmit herewith copies of letters from the Secretary of the Treasury and the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, dated the 3d and 13th instant, respectively, from which it will be seen that the appropriation of $15,000, made at the last session of Congress for the promotion of efficiency in the different branches of the civil service, is still unexpended, and that in order to execute the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes an annual appropriation of $25,000 would be necessary.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

SUPERINTENDENT OF YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith for the consideration of Congress a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a petition of Mr. P. W. Norris, for compensation for services and expenses incurred by him as superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park from the 18th of April, 1877, to the 1st of July, 1878.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

TRANSIT OF VENUS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with a copy of the letter from the Superintendent of the United States Naval Observatory, accompanied by a draft of a bill, with estimates for an observation of the transit of Venus on the 6th of December, 1882.

The matter is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February, 1882.

SENECA NATION OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a memorial and papers from the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, embodying a resolution and remonstrance against the passage of Senate bill No. 19, to provide for an allotment of lands in severalty to Indians upon various reservations, &c., together with a report thereon of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending an amendment to the seventh section thereof excluding the lands of said Indians.

The accompanying papers are transmitted with the message to the Senate.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1882.

DENVER, COLORADO, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] having withdrawn his objection, I now ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce, be taken from the Calendar and put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The title will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear what is going on in consequence of the confusion in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the bill to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Denver, in the State of Colorado, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a port of delivery; and that the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise conferred by the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said port. And there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall receive a salary, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $1,500 per annum.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLISS. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. BRIGGS. I call for the regular order. I have not withdrawn the demand, and I insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. Other business having intervened, the Chair did not understand the gentleman as insisting upon the demand. The Chair will now recognize the demand.

The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. RYAN. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. HAZELTON. I hope that motion will not be adopted. We have gone by two or three days already without a call.

The motion was not agreed to, (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.)

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees.

ELLA CARROLL.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4693) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TRADE-DOLLARS.

Mr. McCLURE, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1202, a bill (H. R. No. 4694) to provide for the exchange of the trade-dollars for legal-tender silver dollars and to stop the coinage of the trade-dollars, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCLURE also, from the same committee, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1056) concerning the trade-dollar; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCLURE also, from the same committee, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 618) to provide for retiring the trade-dollar, for its recoinage into the standard silver dollar, and for the redemption of fractional silver coins; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COINAGE.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2456, a bill (H. R. No. 4695) in reference to the coinage, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT LITTLE TRAVERSE BAY, MICHIGAN.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2424) appropriating money for the erection of a light-house at Little Traverse Bay, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INSPECTORS OF HULLS AND BOILERS.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bills Nos. 1933 and 4223, a bill (H. R. No. 4696) amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the several districts of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the bill be referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill makes an appropriation necessary if it increases the compensation of these officers. In that case, on a point of order being made, the Chair must hold it should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not understand that the bill makes an appropriation necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not had time to read the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. It makes no appropriation necessary.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TOWN OF BRASHEAR, LOUISIANA.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with an adverse recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 18) directing all the Departments of the Government to call the town of Brashear, Louisiana, by the name given to it by the General Assembly of Louisiana, namely, Morgan City; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALE OF LANDS IN MINNESOTA AND WISCONSIN.

Mr. POUND, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to restore to market and sale certain lands in the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin and to authorize their sale subject to the right of flowage; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the amendments and report ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONER OF GENERAL LAND OFFICE, ETC.

Mr. POUND. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report by bill in response to a message of the President of the United States, of date January 24, 1882, which was referred to that committee.

The bill (H. R. No. 4697) to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to create the offices of inspectors of offices of surveyors-general and district land offices was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. POST AND OTHERS.

Mr. POUND also, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4655) granting to John A. Post, R. W. Berry, D. P. B. Pride, James H. Hawley, and John M. Ballou the right of way and other privileges to aid in the construction of a bed-rock flume in Moore's Creek, Elk Creek, Grimes's Creek, and Granite Creek, in Boise County, Idaho Territory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendment and report ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICTS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. STRAIT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1893, a bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask that the bill be referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proper reference of this bill is to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It authorizes the appointment of officers who will have to be paid, and there will necessarily be an appropriation.

Mr. STRAIT. The bill does not provide for the appointment of officers, but simply for the creation of the land districts.

The SPEAKER. But the fourth section in the original bill expressly provides for the appointment of a register and a receiver.

Mr. STRAIT. The substitute provides the metes and bounds of the district.

The SPEAKER. Does not the substitute provide for appointing a register and a receiver?

Mr. STRAIT. If it does their compensation is fixed by law.

The SPEAKER. They are additional officers, however. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LANDS APPROPRIATED FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

Mr. DWIGHT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1634) to amend an act passed February 15, 1843, chapter 33, to authorize the Legislatures of certain States to sell certain lands appropriated for school purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendment and report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF STATUTES.

Mr. DWIGHT also, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 1888) to amend chapter 248 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, approved June 16, 1880; which was placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAGINAW AND MOUNT PLEASANT RAILROAD, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HEPBURN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 776, a bill (H. R. No. 4699) granting right of way to the Saginaw and Mount Pleasant Railroad Company, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DELAWARE INDIANS.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4593) to authorize the payment to the Delaware Indians of the amount awarded to them under the provisions of the treaty of July 4, 1866.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that that bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPAULDING. I think it should be referred to the Committee on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It provides for the payment of a class of persons.

Mr. SPAULDING. It is for the relief of certain individuals whose names are specified in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the list is referred to in the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION, DAKOTA.

Mr. DEERING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2748) to authorize the survey of that portion of the Sioux Indian reservation in the Territory of Dakota lying west of Big Stone Lake, and making an appropriation therefor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CROW INDIANS, MONTANA.

Mr. AINSLIE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4700) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Crow Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in the Territory of Montana required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPAULDING. I was out when the Committee on Military Affairs was called, and I desire to submit a report from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The report will be received.

MILITARY BARRACKS.

Mr. SPAULDING. I am instructed by the committee to report back Executive Document No. 95, to accompany plans and estimates for barracks and quarters in the military division of the Pacific and at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 745, a bill (H. R. No. 4701) to provide for the erection of a public building at Detroit, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LANCASTER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1396, a bill (H. R. No. 4702) for the erection of a public building at Lancaster, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BUILDINGS TO BE RENTED FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4703) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent, from year to year, the building at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Thirteenth street northwest, or other suitable building or buildings, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BEACH. I ask leave, on behalf of the minority of the committee, to submit a minority report hereafter.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection permission will be granted.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

STATE DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3040) in reference to the State Department building; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I was in the committee-room when the Committee on Ways and Means was called this morning. I desire to submit some reports from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The reports will be received.

P. F. LONERGAN.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2984, a bill (H. R. No. 4704) for the relief of P. F. Lonergan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

METER FOR DISTILLERIES.

Mr. DUNNELL also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House joint resolution No. 40, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 146) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed and tested an automatic meter to measure the quantity and test the specific gravity of distilled spirits and malt liquors, and to make an appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TAX ON NATIVE WINES.

Mr. DUNNELL also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 920) to amend section 328 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the tax on native wines; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MILITIA.

Mr. STRAIT, from the Committee on the Militia, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2143, a bill (H. R. No. 4705) to amend title 16 of the Revised Statutes relative to the militia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PATENTS.

MARY C. MURRAY.

Mr. PARKER also, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3549) granting a pension to Mary C. Murray; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CITIZENS OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4706) for the relief of certain citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

O. E. GLEASON.

Mr. TAYLOR also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2593) for the relief of O. E. Gleason; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS M. BELL.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4236) for the relief of Francis M. Bell; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

WILLIAM MADEN.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, the Committee on Claims was also discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2570) for the relief of William Maden; and the same was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MILTON B. DUFFIELD.

Mr. PEELLE, from the Committee on Claims, reported back adversely the petition of Milton B. Duffield, late marshal of the United States for the Territory of Arizona; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. P. WRIGHT.

Mr. PEELLE also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of J. P. Wright for relief; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES B. WHITE.

Mr. PEELLE. I am also directed by the Committee on Claims to report back adversely House bill No. 289, for the relief of James B. White. At the request of my colleague, [Mr. COLERICK,] I ask that this bill be placed on the Private Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

THEODORE DEHON.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4707) for the relief of Theodore Dehon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROBERT PEYSERT.

On motion of Mr. OATES, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3083) for the relief of Robert Peysert; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

J. H. ADAMS.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4708) for the relief of J. H. Adams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM K. CARVER.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1461, a bill (H. R. No. 4709) for the relief of William K. Carver; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF HENRY K. SANGER.

Mr. MASON also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the petition of the estate of Henry K. Sanger; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SIDNEY P. GAMBIER.

Mr. MASON. I am also directed by the committee to report back the petition of Sidney P. Gambier, late postmaster, San Antonio, Texas, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. That will be done through the petition-box.

ROCK STREET, GEORGETOWN.

Mr. DEZENDORF, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4710) to vacate a certain part of Rock street in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN G. TAYLOR.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of John G. Taylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF PURE VACCINE VIRUS.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on the Public Health, reported back the bill (S. No. 1004) for the distribution of pure vaccine virus to the people; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EDUCATION OF COLORED RACE.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported back adversely the bills (H. R. No. 878) and (H. R. No. 2677) to encourage and aid the education of the colored race in the several States and Territories; which were laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now expired.

PENSION AND BOUNTY LAND REVIEW.

Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4711) to establish a board of review of pension and bounty-land warrant claims rejected under existing laws, and to prevent fraud or injustice in the granting of pensions and bounty-land warrants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

CREEK AND SEMINOLE INDIANS.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4712) for the relief of the Creek and Seminole Indians; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOOKER. The President has forwarded, through the Secretary of the Interior, an estimate showing that there is due the Creek Indians $175,000 for 175,000 acres of land purchased of them for the use of the Seminoles under act of March 3, 1873, and the Secretary has recommended an appropriation therefor. I am directed by that committee to move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations in order that the item may be included in the deficiency or sundry civil appropriation bill.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANTS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. DEZENDORF, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4713) to regulate the pay of certain officers of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MOVABLE TORPEDOES.

Mr. DEZENDORF also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4714) appropriating a certain sum of money for the purchase of movable torpedoes by the Secretary of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. WAIT. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Elections. The Clerk will read the resolution accompanying the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contest of B. H. Lanier vs. J. F. King, of the fifth Congressional district of Louisiana, be dismissed for the first reason assigned in the motion of contestee to dismiss, to wit: "That the said case has not been duly prosecuted according to law, and that no testimony whatever therein has been taken by the contestant, nor has any notice been served upon the contestee that any testimony was proposed to be taken."

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WAIT. If in order, I ask that the resolution be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. WAIT. It is the unanimous action of the committee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. MOULTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4715) to extend the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1855, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HUMPHREY H. LEMON.

Mr. HOGE, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back joint resolution (H. R. No. 112) authorizing the appointment of Humphrey H. Lemon upon the Capitol police force.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the board of Capitol police be authorized and directed to place upon the roll of the Capitol police, as an additional member thereof, Humphrey H. Lemon, formerly belonging to said force, who was maimed for life while in the discharge of his duties, and that when appointed under the authority of this resolution the said Humphrey H. Lemon be assigned to the duty now performed by him as a watchman in the Dome of the Capitol.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HAZELTON. I desire at this time to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ask for its present consideration. This is a resolution from the committee in reference to the bill (H. R. No. 4155) to create a sinking fund for the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to examine the bill (H. R. No. 4155) entitled "An act to create a sinking fund for the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes," and report to this House:

First. Whether said bill conflicts with any laws enacted by any Congress of the United States now in force applying to any other railroad or railroad corporation and germane to the purpose of said bill.

Second. Whether in his opinion said bill covers the legal points necessary to fully accomplish the purpose of creating a sinking fund for said railroad company to be applied in the manner therein stated.

Third. That he also be requested to make such suggestions of alterations or amendments as may in his opinion be required to perfect said bill to the end that it may fulfill the purpose intended.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR OF ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND.

Mr. CHAPMAN, by unanimous consent, submitted joint resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland in relation to the harbor of Annapolis; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HENRY M. HANNON'S HEIRS.

Mr. CHAPMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4716) for the relief of Henry M. Hannon's heirs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD F. TUCKER.

Mr. CHAPMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4717) granting arrears of pension to Edward F. Tucker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH HAMILTON.

Mr. CHAPMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4718) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hamilton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

C. W. COOMBS.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit at this time a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, and ask its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of this House is hereby directed to place on his roll the name of C. W. Coombs, as Department messenger for the members of this House, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and that he be furnished desk-room in the folding department for his use, said Coombs to be in addition to the present force of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. CANDLER. That was the original resolution referred to the committee. The committee have reported a substitute for this, which I ask may be read.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House is hereby directed to place on his roll the name of C. W. Coombs, as Department messenger for the members of this House, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and that he be furnished desk-room in the seal-room of the House, and be entitled to be upon the floor of the House during its sessions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I would like to hear the last clause of the resolution read again. As I understand from the reading of it it is proposed to admit some other person to the privileges of the floor.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think it is unnecessary to bring another gentleman upon the floor of the House——

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope that will be omitted from the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think it unsafe for us to open our doors to the admission of others not now included in the terms of the rule.

Mr. COX, of New York. That also changes the rule of the House and is subject to the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Unless there is some substantial reason for it I think it should not be allowed.

Mr. CANDLER. I think it better that the report of the committee should be read. If that is done the House will be able to understand more clearly the necessity for this part of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the resolution changes the existing rule, and that being so, it would have to go over for one day.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to amend the resolution by striking out that portion of it. I hope the gentleman presenting the resolution will accept that amendment, and if he does I think we can pass the resolution without delay.

Mr. CANDLER. It is decidedly a matter of convenience to the members of the House to have this messenger within easy reach of the members. If, however, the House desires to strike it out, the committee will have no objection. This man is well known to the members of the House as a messenger to the Departments, and in the opinion of the committee it seemed to be for the convenience of all to have him upon the floor.

Mr. WILSON. All the old members know the value of this man.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the resolution so that this gentleman's place shall be in the folding-room. The resolution as it now stands provides for bringing him into the seal-room.

Mr. O'NEILL. And that is where you want him, that members may reach him easily.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This same gentleman has been in the employment of the House ever since I have been here. I have had no occasion for his services, and if members have used him they have had no difficulty in finding him in his place at the folding-room. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "seal-room," and insert "folding-room," and strike out the words "and be entitled to be on the floor of the House during its session."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman who reports this resolution from the Committee on Accounts if this is a new officer?

Mr. CANDLER. He is a new officer in this sense, that we propose to change his position from the roll of the Doorkeeper to the roll of the Clerk. Had the report been read the whole matter would have been thoroughly understood. I will state the reason now why we propose this change. We found him on the Doorkeeper's list. He seemed to be a messenger directly for the use of the members of the House; there was not room in the Doorkeeper's department for him and there was objection on the part of the Doorkeeper to have him attached to his roll. But it seemed there was no objection on the part of the Clerk and that the purpose of the original resolution could be better obtained by the substitute we offer. Had it not been for these reasons we should have allowed the resolution referred to us by the House to stand, retaining him in the Doorkeeper's department.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Does the Clerk recommend this?

Mr. CANDLER. The Committee on Accounts recommend it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. My question related to the Clerk. Does the Clerk recommend it?

Mr. CANDLER. The Clerk did not recommend it. The House sent to the Committee on Accounts a resolution, which the House had adopted, appointing this man as a messenger to the Departments, and placing him on the Doorkeeper's list. When the Committee on Accounts considered that resolution which expressed the wish of the House they thought it advisable that this man should be appointed, but that his position should be changed from the roll of the Doorkeeper to that of the Clerk. I do not know that the Clerk either requested or objected to this. It was the House that sent the resolution to the committee and desired the man should be appointed. We believed it was better in giving the House the messenger they desired to simply change his location. That is the opinion of the Committee on Accounts as expressed by the substitute it has reported.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Is it the fact that the Doorkeeper did not want this man and discharged him, and that this is making a place for him?

Mr. CANDLER. It is not the fact that the Doorkeeper discharged him.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Did the Doorkeeper express a desire not to have him? Did he state that he was about to discharge him, and is this a resolution to take care of him?

Mr. CANDLER. The Committee on Accounts are greatly obliged to gentlemen who put words into their mouths and state what they desire. I wish to have it distinctly understood that it was voted by the House this man should be appointed a messenger in the Doorkeeper's department. For good and sufficient reasons the House believed him to be undoubtedly one of the most useful men on the roll. That resolution adopted by the House was sent to the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts revised it and considered it as it was their duty to do, and they indorsed unanimously the opinion originally expressed by the House, that this man is a useful officer and that his services aid effectually the members of the House in the work of legislation.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this officer was recommended by the Clerk of the House, or if he was asked for by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. CANDLER. I answer he was not, so far as I know.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. As I am advised at this moment his services are not needed by the Clerk of the House; he does not want him.

Mr. CANDLER. It is for this House to decide whether they want this man or not. They passed a resolution placing him on the roll of the Doorkeeper. They sent that resolution to the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts report here unanimously that they believe this man to be a useful officer and that he will do good service. If the House in its wisdom decides it does not want him then it is its duty and privilege to vote down the resolution.

Mr. MOORE. I am informed by the Doorkeeper that the services of nobody are wanted for the place indicated. If the services of anybody are wanted I desire that they shall be rendered in the person of a Republican. This Republican House has already voted a special office for a special Democrat. I am for one inclined to be honest with my friends on the other side, and I say I am opposed to a Republican House making a special place for a special Democrat that is not specially needed or wanted.

Mr. CANDLER. It is not the purpose of the Committee on Accounts to argue for this man or to urge his being placed on the rolls of the House against the wish of the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] But we have to say that we believe he is of service and will prove an efficient messenger. But all the members of the House know whether he is of service or not and if they do not desire to have him appointed the Committee on Accounts have no other desire than to have their opinion emphasized as presented in their report, leaving the decision to the House.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WILSON. The Democrats during the last Congress permitted the Republicans to have two or three employés of their own faith for their convenience in the selection of documents and keeping up their organization, and I hope the courtesy thus heretofore extended by Democrats will now be reciprocated.

[Cries from all parts of the Hall of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 80.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. DINGLEY called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish this House would lay aside this order of business, so that we might go on with the regular business of the House.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the pending resolution upon the table.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 39 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 74, nays, 133, not voting, 85; as follows:

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to inquire how I am recorded on this vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the gentleman is not recorded as voting.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire the RECORD to show that I am here, and if I had heard my name called I would have voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the resolution as amended.

Mr. CANDLER. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WILSON. Why not call the previous question?

Mr. MILLER. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. BROWNE, of January 11, 1882, providing—

"That the Doorkeeper of the House is hereby directed to place on his roll the name of C. W. Coombs, as Department messenger for the members of this House at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and that he be furnished desk room in the folding-room for his use; said Coombs to be in addition to the present force of the Doorkeeper," respectfully report that, in the consideration of said resolution, they have consulted with the Doorkeeper and inquired of him as to the necessity for additional force in the folding-room, and have been informed that he does not require an increase of force there at this time. But the committee are advised that the object of the resolution was not to furnish assistance to the Doorkeeper in the discharge of his duties under the rules of the House, but to provide a "Department messenger for the members of this House." The committee are assured that Mr. Coombs possesses a familiarity with the various publications of the Government, the reports of departmental and other officers, &c., acquired by years of special application such as few, if any, persons have ever heretofore acquired. The knowledge thus possessed by Mr. Coombs makes his services peculiarly valuable and his appointment has been urged by many members.

Since the office of the Doorkeeper has been moved to the folding-room that room will not conveniently accommodate an additional desk. And inasmuch as Mr. Coombs's services are required for the personal convenience and assistance of members, it is desirable that he be furnished with desk-room nearer to the floor of the House than the folding department. The committee therefore present the following resolution as a substitute for the one referred to them, and recommend its adoption.

The substitute had been amended by the House to read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to place on his roll the name of C. W. Coombs, as Department messenger for the members of this House, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and that he be furnished desk-room in the folding-room of the House.

Mr. CANDLER. I should have called for the reading of that report when the resolution was first reported had it not been the clear impression of the Committee on Accounts that it was the desire of this House on both sides that this man should be continued in the service of the House.

I have to say, as one member of the Committee on Accounts, that a large number of the most prominent members of the Republican side of the House came to that committee and requested that this man should have this appointment, because he had peculiar fitness for the services he had to perform. It was said that there were very few if any men they had ever met who had the capacity to serve members of this House so efficiently in seeking old books, in looking up old reports, in doing various things for the assistance of members of the House, overtaxed as they are by their duties here. As a member of the committee I reported this resolution as the unanimous action of the committee, believing from the representations made to us that it would be accepted by the House. But it is not my desire, and I do not think it is the wish of the committee, that the valuable time of the House should be taken up in discussing such matters as this; and in the present condition and situation of the report it is advisable that it should be recommitted, to be presented at a future time if it should seem best to the committee to do so. I therefore move that the report be recommitted to the Committee on Accounts. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The question being taken, there were—ayes 86, noes 69.

Mr. MCKENZIE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCKENZIE and Mr. CANDLER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 90.

So the motion of Mr. CANDLER to recommit the report was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RYAN obtained the floor.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

Mr. RYAN. I must object. We must stop somewhere.

Mr. BROWNE. I am sorry the gentleman from Kansas stops on me, after having let in everybody else.

Mr. RYAN. I regret very much that I cannot yield. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. REED. I ask the gentleman from Kansas to permit me to present from the Committee on Rules some proposed amendments to the rules, to be printed, so that members may have opportunity to consider them before they are called up for action. We desire to bring them up on Friday or Saturday next.

Mr. RYAN. As this is a report of the Committee on Rules, I suppose I must yield; but I cannot yield further.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] whether the report of the Committee on Rules which he now proposes to submit is based upon any resolution referred to the committee by the House, or whether this report is submitted upon an original suggestion of the committee itself?

Mr. REED. I am unable to state positively, but I think there are resolutions before the committee on which this report could be based.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If this report is not predicated upon any resolution sent to the Committee on Rules by the House, then I reserve the point as to the right of the committee to present its report in the nature of gratuitous suggestions to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that resolutions relating to the subject-matter of the report have been referred to the committee. The Chair is also of the opinion that under a resolution adopted by the House the committee was expressly authorized to report at any time on any subject relating to the rules. On the latter point, however, the Chair might withhold its opinion for the present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to have that done. I merely wish to reserve my right, as this is a majority report and there is a minority opposition in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine submits a report from the Committee on Rules, to be printed and to lie over under the rules.

Mr. REED. I desire that the report may be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing of the report in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILSON. I object to this report coming in, because the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has been appealed to by other gentlemen to yield but has refused.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged report, and the gentleman from Kansas having yielded, an objection cannot prevent its presentation. The Chair hears no objection to printing the report in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Rules report that they recommend the following changes in Rule XXIV:

That clause 2 of Rule XXIV be amended so as to read as follows:

"2. On all days other than Monday, as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for the disposal of reports of committees which shall be appropriately referred and printed and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate: Provided, That during such morning hour it shall be in order to consider such bills as would otherwise go to or are already on the House Calendar, if the committee in charge when called shall so request. The Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order and then select committees, and if the Speaker shall not get through the call of committees before the House passes to other business he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the report last under consideration, but whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on one day it shall not be in order for such committee to report further until the other committees shall have been called in their turn."

That clause 4 be so amended as to read as follows:

"4. After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees it shall be in order to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or to the House Calendar, motions therefor having priority in the order named. The morning hour shall continue until the House determines to go to other business."

That clause 5 be so amended as to read as follows:

"5. When the House proceeds to the Speaker's table the business shall be disposed of in the following order:

"First. Messages from the President and other executive communications.

"Second. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

"Third. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading. That they be referred to committees or put on their passage; and the motions so to refer shall have precedence of all motions touching their disposition.

"Fourth. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading."

That clause 6 be amended so as to read as follows:

"6. When a motion is made that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it shall be in order, pending that motion, to make one motion to designate a bill to be first considered, to which latter motion only one amendment shall be in order. If no bill be designated, the committee shall consider first bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills and then other business on its Calendar."

That there be added to Rule XXIV the following clause:

"7. Before the morning hour it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of unfinished business other than that in the morning hour or on the Speaker's table, and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4679) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] that the gentleman from New York [Mr HEWITT] desires to introduce a bill, which will take but a moment.

Mr. BROWNE. I have appealed to the gentleman from Kansas for similar permission. I object unless I can have the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 1046) for the relief of the Eastern Shawnee Indians at the Quapaw agency, Indian Territory.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RYAN. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. PAGE in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4185) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. RYAN. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOKER. I think the gentleman should let the bill be read. It is an important bill; and many members have not had time to examine it.

Mr. RYAN. It seems to me the first reading of the bill would be an unnecessary consumption of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi object to dispensing with the first reading?

Mr. HOOKER. I desire that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. One objection is sufficient.

Mr. ATKINS. This a very long bill; its reading will occupy a great deal of time, and I am sure will do no good, as members will not hear it. I appeal to the gentleman from Mississippi to withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] in charge of the bill proposes to give no time for general discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill should be read.

Mr. ATKINS. It will take up half an hour.

Mr. RYAN. It will take two hours. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his objection. The bill has been printed, I think, for about three weeks, and every member has had full opportunity to examine it. It will take the rest of the afternoon and practically consume it if we proceed with the reading, which is entirely unnecessary. I do not think it will subserve any good purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I objected upon the ground there might be some gentlemen who wished to hear the bill, not having had opportunity to examine it; but as I am informed it has been printed for some time I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no further objection, and the reading of the bill for information is dispensed with. The bill will now be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Uintah agency, at $1,000.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to strike out $1,000, and insert in lieu thereof $1,500; and in support of that amendment I ask to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this present rate of compensation of $1,000 for the Uintah agency in Utah is the old price, before the consolidation of the Uintah Indians with the White River Utes. There are now three separate sets of accounts kept at that agency, and an increase in the number of Indians gathered there. Only $1,000 for compensation of an agency over in the western part of the Territory of Utah is so clearly insufficient I hope the House will agree with me in inserting $1,500 instead.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, the salary of this agent it is true is not very large, but when it is borne in mind that agents who get $1,500 and upward have charge of a large number of Indians, from 3,000 to 16,000, that they have charge of a vast amount of property, and the distribution of rations, clothing, &c., where large appropriations are made, it will appear that the compensation here is not altogether inadequate, because the number of Indians at this agency is only 1,139 and the aggregate amount of appropriation only $35,406. This agent in addition is allowed a clerk. Other agents, having an equally large number of Indians in charge, having an equally large amount of appropriation to distribute and take charge of, have no greater compensation and have no clerk whatever.

Mr. HASKELL. The question, Mr. Chairman, of the duty of an agent does not depend on the number of Indians, but rather on the amount of work he has to do in keeping accounts and in disbursing funds of various tribes. Here is a consolidated agency. An agent can handle 5,000 Indians of one tribe easier than 3,000 of three or four tribes.

Mr. FLOWER. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas whether he knows of a case of that kind, where the agent resigned and gave up his salary to anybody else?

Mr. HASKELL. Plenty of them. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAZELTON. In line 49 I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert "fifteen hundred;" so it will read "at the Fort Belknap agency, $1,500."

Mr. RYAN. I object to going back.

Mr. HAZELTON. This is all one section, as I understand, covering the compensation of sixty Indian agents, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his sharp and technical points of order.

Mr. RYAN. I will reserve my point of order so as to give the gentleman an opportunity to make any remarks he may desire.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Chairman, of course, however able and cogent an argument I may make, however strong the reasons I may present, I do not expect to change the action of the Committee on Appropriations in its determination concerning the salaries of these Indian agents. But if there is one matter of legislation the merits of which have been disregarded by this House, I will not say by this committee, it is the adjustment of some proper and just system of compensation for our Indian agents. I have been here two Congresses, and I have often asked members of committees why they could not adjust and make equal and put upon a fair basis of equity these salaries covering the employment of Indian agents throughout this great nation. There is no system of salaries so outrageously unfair, so wantonly unjust, as the one to which I now address myself. The question of comparative services, the question of comparative responsibility, has not been considered or reported or acted on by this House. Not only the present Indian Commissioner, but every Indian Commissioner for the last ten years——

Mr. SCALES. I ask the gentleman if the estimates on which these appropriations are based are not made and these salaries fixed by the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department?

Mr. HAZELTON. Suppose they are. That does not change the position I am taking, that they are unjust and unfair, and ought to be made more equitable. I return to my position that every Indian Commissioner of this Government for the last ten years has called on this committee and called on this House to place the salaries of these Indian agents on a fair and just basis, but every one of those reports, every one of the demands of the Indian Bureau, has been disregarded and ignored by this committee and this House. Such has been the case for the time I have been here, and, as I learn, so it has been for the last fifteen or twenty years.

You put a man up on the forty-ninth parallel where Sitting Bull was, you give him charge of two or three thousand Indians, most of them hostile, you surround him with dangers and privations of every character, you increase his responsibility and impose additional duties on him, and yet you pay him only $1,000. You then come down to the State of Wisconsin, where the Indians are under the shadow of civilization, where the agent can live in comfort in a city of ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, where he is relieved from additional responsibilities, where he is perfectly safe in his life, his family, and his property, and you pay him $1,500. Indeed, you pay the latter $500 more than the other, although he does not do one-half as much service. And so it is in New York; so it is in Kansas, and so it is all over this Union. The rule has been established that where there is the greatest responsibility, where there is the greatest hardship and hardest work, there you pay your Indian agent the least salary.

I come to see these gentlemen, the members of the Indian Committee—I have done so for four years—and beg them that they will bring in something from that committee that would correct this outrage, and check this wrong. And what is their reply? "Well, we don't know, hardly. We think the Committee on Appropriations ought to do it." I go to the Committee on Appropriations. They say it is none of their business; it is an Indian question. "Let the Committee on Indian Affairs first handle that great question, and then you come to us and we will fix it." And so, Mr. Chairman, it goes, and so it has gone, back and forth, repeatedly, and will be repeated as long as this Indian service remains under the control of the civil power of the Government. There will be repeated, year after year, the same outrageous adjustment of these salaries and you cannot correct it.

One question I want to ask before I conclude, and that is, whether the present Indian Commissioner has not called upon Congress to correct this evil?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. I yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no time to yield.

Mr. RYAN. I make the point of order that we have long since passed that part of the bill.

Mr. HAZELTON. Oh, I know you never will correct it; you cannot correct it. The American Congress is not strong enough or sensible enough to correct that one outrage. It has been there for twenty-five years; it will be there for twenty-five years longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I make the point of order that we have long since passed that.

Mr. HAZELTON. Yes, you passed it twenty years ago. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, and rules the amendment out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of necessary interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000; but in no case shall the annual compensation of an interpreter exceed $400; and section 2070 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to strike out all that follows down to the end of the paragraph, after the word "dollars" in line 121.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, after the word "dollars" in line 121, the following words: "but in no case shall the annual compensation of an interpreter exceed $400; and section 2070 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. HASKELL. Now I move that amendment for two reasons: one is that on the Pacific coast it is impossible to secure an interpreter for less than $500 a year, and this limits the service to $400. Again, I move it for the reason that at those agencies where they have to employ temporary services, or where they may need the service of an interpreter for only a few days, and where they can save money by such employment for a limited time, you cannot get a competent interpreter if compensation is fixed arbitrarily at $400 a year. Under the ruling of the Treasury Department they will not audit the account for this temporary service at a rate to exceed the one-three-hundred-and-sixty-fifth part of $400 for each day. That is the rule, and of course it is not reasonable to suppose that temporary service can be obtained for such an amount. And by leaving these words in, you make it practically impossible to secure the temporary services of an interpreter when such service may save a great deal, because this Treasury ruling is well understood. The Indian Commissioner has asked that these lines be left out, for the reason that he cannot secure such services on the coast for $400, and also because he cannot secure temporary services for three or four days at a time, and get a person qualified for the place, at the sum allowed by the Department. It is too small pay. Not a particle of harm can result from striking out the words, and I therefore move to strike out that part of the paragraph. This is an important matter, important to the service, and costs nothing.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the amendment was lost.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask a division. This service is too important to be passed over in that way.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RYAN. My colleague exaggerates the importance of the amendment. It is not very important. The present law—the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year—fixes the salary at $300.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order. The committee is dividing.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 43.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $3,000 per annum each, $15,000.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge if this is not a change of existing law?

Mr. RYAN. It is not. These inspectors are provided for by the general law and their salary is fixed by law.

Mr. HOOKER. I thought there were but two of them.

Mr. RYAN. No; five are provided, and their salaries fixed by the general law.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and for pay of employés not otherwise provided for, and for pay of two special agents at $2,000 per annum each, $32,500.

Mr. BERRY. I move to strike out in line 134 the word "two," where it occurs the first time, and insert "five;" and also to strike out in line 135 the word "two" and insert "eight;" so that it will read if adopted:

For pay of five special agents at $2,000 per annum each, $38,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the number of agents is fixed by law.

Mr. RYAN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BERRY. This provides what I regard as a necessary increase in the number of these special agents.

Mr. RYAN. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, before the gentleman from California proceeds, I repeat that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BERRY. My object is this: I have been informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that instead of two special agents only the service demands five. I came to this knowledge simply by a case that arose in our State. The bondsmen of an agent felt dissatisfied and inclined to believe things were not going as they ought to go and they desired an examination should be made. I called in person on the Commissioner and asked a special agent should be sent there until the books of the agent could be examined and it should be ascertained whether all matters were moving in the line in which they should move. He informed me he had but two special agents at his command and they were at the present time in charge of agencies. Hence there is no opportunity for the Commissioner to make an examination in the event of charges being formulated against the agent. He said it would redound to the interest of the service if he had at least three more special agents. If he had he would immediately send one to take charge of that reservation till the matter could be examined.

It is true if the bondsmen were able to formulate charges and send them on to the Department, the Department would then supersede the action of the Commissioner; but in the absence of that it is unable to do so, and the bondsmen perhaps are unable to formulate charges when they have well-grounded suspicions that things are not as they should be.

Therefore, it is my judgment, as it is the judgment of the Commissioner, that if agents knew the Commissioner had the sufficient number of special agents to send and take charge of an agency at any time, it would be a check on the agents at these reservations. And I think it would be in the interest of good government, and of the proper management of the Indian affairs of our country, if three more agents were given to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. RYAN. I make the point of order that the amendment provides for three additional officers who are not provided for by law at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Kansas is right in saying that the law only provides for two special agents, the Chair must hold the amendment changes existing law; and he therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provision of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $5,000, to be distributed as follows, namely: For secretary, $2,000; for clerk, $1,200; for messenger, $600; for rent of office, $1,000, and for contingent expenses of office, $200.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move to strike out that clause.

I make this motion for the purpose of obtaining some information from the gentleman who has this bill in charge. The act under which ten eminent citizens were appointed by the President to see to the distribution of $2,000,000 among the Indians provided the sum of $25,000 to pay the expenses specified in this paragraph. I wish to ask the gentleman who has reported the bill whether that amount of $25,000 has been used, and whether this sum of $25,000 is an addition to the sum appropriated by the original act?

Mr. RYAN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the sum of $25,000 he speaks of was appropriated to defray the expenses of the board at the time the board was created. That was thirteen years ago. It was to pay their expenses for the current year for which the appropriation was made; and in every succeeding year since that time an appropriation has been made by Congress to defray the expenses of this board until the last Congress. The last Congress at its last session refused to appropriate anything whatever for the expenses of this board. And I want to state, so far as the history of that is concerned, that the action of this House was intended at the time to abolish the board entirely, but the Senate dissented.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether, then, a point of order does not lie against this appropriation?

Mr. HISCOCK. The last Congress did not repeal the law.

Mr. RYAN. They only failed to appropriate.

Mr. HUTCHINS. But, as I understand it, there is no law for it.

Mr. RYAN. There is a law for the existence of the board. And I want to say in addition to that, for the benefit of my friend from New York, that if you are not going to appropriate anything to pay the expenses of the board, then the board should be abolished, because it is clothed by law with certain powers and duties, and of course those duties have a relation to the service, and a very important one, and the existence of the board should not be permitted unless we propose to pay their expenses, as was the original design.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Has there been any appropriation other than the $2,000,000 which this board had to do with?

Mr. RYAN. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me I will read the act:

There shall be a board of Indian commissioners, composed of not more than ten persons, appointed by the President, from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

The board of commissioners mentioned in the preceding section shall have power to appoint one of their own number as secretary, who shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation as the board may designate, payable from any moneys appropriated for the expenses of the board.

Now, there is authority to appropriate money for the expenses of the board. This clause appropriates no money except for the secretary, a clerk, a messenger, and office rent.

Mr. HUTCHINS. What is the date of that act?

Mr. ROBESON. I have read sections 2039 and 2040 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The original law was passed in 1869.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] has anticipated me in making the motion to strike out the clause of the bill to which he refers. The original act was passed in 1869 and I have had occasion in speeches heretofore made in Congress to demonstrate that the purpose and object of the act of 1869 was to create a temporary board acting in conjunction with the General of the Army. A specific appropriation of a very large amount of money was made, an appropriation of $2,000,000, and the President was authorized to appoint a board of commissioners, commonly called peace commissioners, of eminent citizens who were to serve without compensation. It was evidently the purpose and object of the act to create this board for a specific purpose, and when that purpose was accomplished the board was then functus officio, had no duties to perform, possessed no powers, and ought not to have continued beyond the time when the first appropriation was expended.

I send to the Clerk's desk to be read section 4 of the law originally passed by Congress, so that the committee will see from that section precisely what is the character of the board as originally created.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated the further sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to maintain peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, and bring them where practicable on reservations, to relieve their necessities and encourage their efforts at self-support, a report of all expenditures under this appropriation to be made in detail to Congress in December next. And for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act he is hereby authorized in his discretion to organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may under his direction exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of the appropriation made by this act, or any part thereof that the President may designate. And to pay the necessary expenses, transportation, subsistence, and clerk-hire of said commission while actively engaged in said service there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be seen that this was an act creating a commission to act in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior for a specific purpose, and it appropriated $25,000 to carry out that purpose.

Now, you might as well say that the power would have been continued in the Secretary of the Interior and in this board if no appropriation was made as to say that this board was authorized by law to continue from year to year. A specific amount of $25,000 was appropriated at the time to pay the expenses of the commission, which amount has long since been exhausted.

Now, though the purposes for which the act was passed have long since passed away, though the Indians have become peaceable and civilized, comparatively speaking, yet for thirteen years there has been an annual appropriation of $10,000 for the support of this peace commission, a commission acting without bonds, and without any other authority than simply the nomination of the President. It was clothed with authority to act in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior in simply expending the $2,000,000 which was originally appropriated for the purpose of securing peace among the Indians; and also clothed with authority to expend the $25,000, and no more, which was appropriated for their expenses. Yet for thirteen years successively this appropriation of $10,000 has been made for the support of this commission.

I say that if we have officers of the Government to expend the money appropriated by us, they should be bonded officers, and they should expend it under the sanction of law and the responsibility of their bonds. They were appointed to serve without compensation. The $25,000 was simply to pay their expenses; and yet for thirteen years we appropriated $10,000 annually to pay the expenses of this commission. That annual appropriation was made without question until two years ago, when we in this House made the first assault on this commission and showed what an irresponsible body of men it was, unknown to the law, created for a specific purpose, and that purpose having been performed no longer in office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. I have but few words more to say. As I have said, it will be observed that the law which I have caused to be read by the Clerk created this commission for a specific purpose, and that purpose having been accomplished this commission or board has had no existence except what it obtained by virtue of its recognition for thirteen years by the Committees on Appropriation of Congress. It therefore has been kept alive simply by the appropriations which we have made.

Two years ago, when the assault was first made upon it in this House, at which time the Democratic party was in the majority, an appropriation for the purpose was retained in the appropriation bill. At the last session of Congress, when the same reasons were urged for its continuance, the appropriation was not reported in the bill. I think it was the gentleman from New York, the present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. HISCOCK,] who moved to reinsert it in the bill as it had been in former appropriation bills. And if it was not inserted here it was inserted by the Senate. At all events the bill came back here from the Senate with the same appropriation of $10,000, and finally passed in that shape.

Only one Committee on Appropriations, and that the Committee on Appropriations of this House of the last session, failed to include this appropriation in the bill. It was afterward inserted in the Senate, or it was inserted here on motion and went to the Senate, and remained a clause in the appropriation bill alone.

Now, I say this commission should not be clothed with any authority or power to act on this important question. The members of the commission ought to be bonded officers responsible to the Government.

It will be seen by the very section which I have caused to be read that this commission was directed to make a special report of their action to Congress in the next December; showing clearly that it was the purpose and intent of the legislative mind when that appropriation was passed to make it a temporary board created for a specific purpose. And when that purpose was accomplished the board could no longer have existence without further action of Congress.

And for thirteen years and more it has been kept in existence by this appropriation. The very clause reported by this appropriation committee demonstrates that if $5,000 will pay their expenses, then for thirteen years we have given them $10,000 a year, when we should have given them but $5,000. The very same arguments which show the propriety of cutting down the extravagant appropriation heretofore made for traveling expenses, clerks, office rent, &c., of this irresponsible board apply still more strongly in favor of absolutely sweeping the board out of existence.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I withdraw it.

Mr. WILLITS. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has stated the law as it was passed originally in 1869, and has, of course, cited it correctly. In 1870 this commission was continued "so long as the appropriation heretofore made for their expenses shall last," that appropriation being $25,000. The appropriation act of 1871 appropriated $15,000 for the expenses of this commission, and provided as follows:

And said commission is hereby continued with the powers and duties heretofore provided by law.

The commission was thus continued without any limitation of time. Now, we come next to the Revised Statutes, and I suppose the gentleman will concede that in the enactment of the Revised Statutes this commission was recognized by a provision of permanent law in the terms cited by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] so that this board is now recognized in the statutes as a permanent board, without any limitation of time, though no provision, of course, is made in the statutes for their expenses, except in the one case cited by the gentleman from New Jersey. Now, the simple question is, as to the payment of these expenses, which it is no more than right we should provide for, if the commission is a proper commission; upon which the gentleman does not make any point, and therefore I do not propose to make any remarks upon it. But there is no question that the existing law provides for this commission as a permanent board.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the third time I have occupied the floor in opposition to this provision, which, as my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has said, has been in every appropriation bill for the last thirteen years. It grew out of the frauds which occurred in connection with Indian affairs during the administration of President Grant. The executive department attempted to correct those frauds by means of a commission of this kind. This commission was appointed, consisting of men who were thought to be patriotic, wise, of good judgment, interested deeply in the welfare of the Indians, and anxious to assist the administration in correcting frauds by supervising the Indian Bureau.

Now, it will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that we have already five inspectors to do this work. We have a Secretary of the Interior and a Commissioner of Indian Affairs to supervise their work. We have the Indian agents, whose business it is to see that the laws of this Government in regard to the Indians are executed properly and honestly. With all these I submit that we do not need a commission of citizens with no responsibility, who give no bonds and serve only to divide responsibility with the officers and make them less diligent, even if frauds exist now as when it was created.

Now, it is said (and I hope it is true) that the time has come when these frauds have been corrected. It is said in the report of the Indian Commissioner that these agents are discharging their duties faithfully, that they are honest men, and that the frauds of former years no longer appear. If so, where is the necessity for this board? I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this commission ought ever to have been appointed. I do not believe that it has ever answered the purposes of its creation; and I do not believe there is now any necessity for it, and in support of this I have only to refer gentlemen to the whole past history of the board.

But, Mr. Chairman, as my friend from Mississippi has said, $25,000 was originally appropriated for the expenses of this high-toned commission, whose members serve without salary or compensation. It was afterward reduced to $15,000. How was this money expended? Let me read for a moment. I refer to the report of the commission giving an account of the disbursement of the appropriation of $15,000:

During the period above named, we have disbursed as follows:
Office expenses, including rent, printing, binding, stationery, fuel, $1,251.84; salaries of secretary, clerk, and messenger, $6,212.30; purchasing committee, including employment of special clerk to examine agencies, $3,190.85; traveling expenses of the members of the board in visiting agencies, $3,522.18.

Now, I would not censure unnecessarily these high-toned men; but men who come forward under the pretext that they are acting without salary in the interests of the country, from motives of patriotism and nothing else, have been running up expenses of this kind for thirteen years, which the Committee on Appropriations now admit to be altogether unnecessary. This board, they say, can continue if we give them a secretary at $2,000, a clerk at $1,000, and allow for rent of office $1,000, and for contingent expenses of office $200. Mr. Chairman, this of itself, were there no other reason, ought to be sufficient to satisfy the House that this commission ought to be abolished.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out the last word, and I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] so much of my time as he may desire.

Mr. SCALES. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I want to give a little history of this matter for the benefit of the House. We attacked this commission about three years ago, and the expenses have been coming down by degrees ever since. From $15,000 we have reduced the appropriation to $5,000. They die hard. First, this House took action abolishing the board, but when the bill went to the Senate a provision for the continuance of the commission was put on, which came back here and was passed, without the knowledge, without notice, so far as I am informed, of the change, of this House. At the last session we again voted to abolish this commission. The bill went to the Senate, and in conference it was agreed that the commission should be continued without any appropriation whatever. Now, I ask members of this House, without distinction of party, whether it is necessary to throw away this sum of $5,000, for I grant that if the commission were at all necessary $5,000 would not be too large. But I contend that there is no necessity for the existence of this board, as the experience of thirteen years has demonstrated. The Committee on Indian Affairs, after investigation, determined, in the Forty-sixth Congress, that this commission was unnecessary and wrong, and should be abolished, and this House has affirmed the action of the committee, and for three consecutive years past voted to abolish the whole thing.

I hope, therefore, the House will complete the work which it has been doing for the last three years, that it will strike down the commission by cutting off the appropriation. Do not put these men as a watch over your officers, as honorable it may be as they, and much more responsible. To be consistent, the House should appoint a similar commission with similar powers to watch over your Post-Office Department. Are there not frauds there? Are there not "straw" bids and straw bonds there? Are there not "ring" men there who cheat and defraud the Government? If this commission has done a good work let another be appointed to assist in ferreting out the frauds and robberies practiced on the Post-Office Department. But they will do no such thing for this Department, nor for the War or Navy Department; they know it will accomplish nothing. But these wealthy citizens are in; they like the position; they have influence, and an effort is made in every Indian appropriation bill to retain them. But I defy them, as I have heretofore, to point to any work, yea, even one act, which they have done to justify the continuance of the appointment and appropriation.

Mr. ATKINS. I will finish my time by opposing the remarks made by my friend from North Carolina. I believe I have voted with my friend heretofore to abolish this commission. I am not sure, but I rather think I have.

Mr. SCALES. Always.

Mr. ATKINS. Then we made a much larger appropriation than now, but I am not sure I did not do wrong when I voted with the gentleman heretofore.

As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the object of this commission is simply to act as a check on the persons making purchases of Indian supplies. If I am incorrect in that, will the gentleman from New Jersey correct me?

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. ATKINS. I state then that the purpose of this appropriation is to keep alive this commission which acts as a guardian of the Indian interest in the purchase of Indian supplies. Persons go on to New York and lay in large supplies, and sometimes they are imperfect, faulty, and great frauds are sometimes perpetrated. The object of this commission is to see good articles are purchased and that the Government does not pay for them more then it ought to.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I will make a pro forma amendment so he may go on. I wish to ask him whose duty it is to make these purchases?

Mr. ATKINS. They are made by sworn officers of the Government, it is true.

Mr. HUTCHINS. If they are not honest men why the necessity of this commission to watch them?

Mr. ATKINS. It is a violent presumption on the part of my friend from New York to suppose all officers of the Government are honest. The gentleman is wrong at the start. I am not attacking the Republican party.

Mr. HUTCHINS. You are asserting that they need watching.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, I think they do; that is my honest opinion, but I believe there is no administration which ever existed in this country which did not need watching, so far as that is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ATKINS. I regret it, as I did not get to the point which I wished to make

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope this motion to strike out this compensation and to kill this board will not prevail. For, sir, if there is one feature about the Indian service to-day that ought to be commended and continued it is the influences which are used by the Department and by this board and by the various officers of the Government, in whatever capacity; influences which are used to educate, Christianize, elevate, ennoble and make better these red wards of the nation.

Of all the influences, Mr. Chairman, that have enlisted the sympathy of philanthropy, of all the influences used to stand guard over the interests of the Indians, of all the influences that have gone out upon the frontier to examine into the condition of the Indians and to ask contributions to supplement the scanty, pitiful appropriations made on this floor, of all the agencies which have been employed to see suitable goods purchased for the Indians, and that all things done for the Indians were rightfully and honestly done, and in their interest, this board stands pre-eminent. It is largely due to these gentlemen, who for thirteen years have labored in this cause without pay and honestly, that we have enlisted the efforts of philanthropic men and women of America until two grand successful schools have been the results of their solicitations. I refer to the Carlisle school and the Hampton school. Every member of this board back of him has some organization or some religious society which has in its special care and interest the welfare of these Indians.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, in the last thirteen years, notwithstanding your insufficient appropriation, notwithstanding your lame and impotent legislation upon the Indian question, notwithstanding all this, by reason of the power and force of good citizenship and philanthropy in this country of which these men are the representatives, there has been more done to lift up, to ennoble and advance the Indian race than there has been accomplished before in fifty years.

It is not true that all they do is to go to New York and supervise the buying of goods for the Indians. They do that, but they do more. This larger appropriation you speak of ought to be in the bill now. You ought to pay their expenses and let them go to these Indian reservations, let them examine into the habits and condition of the Indians, and let them see what they can suggest that will train them to take upon themselves the habits of civilized life. They ought to be put into the bill. It is a shame they are not in the bill. The Indian service is unlike that of any other. There is no other department of the Government which so hinges upon mankind's finer sentiments, mankind's higher hopes of the future for an ignorant and lowly race that appeals to the sympathy of good citizenship everywhere, than the Indian service, which has been crippled and hampered and trodden upon and defied and contemned until you can hardly get an honorable man to go at the head of Indian affairs in this country. We have a good man there now, we have a good service, and part and parcel of that good service is this board. Strike it down if you will, but when you do give out the true reason for it, and say you want to turn the Indian back into barbarism.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I renew it. It is admitted, I believe now, that this commission is authorized by law, and rests for its existence upon the firm foundation of the statute-book. It is now moved that we strike out this appropriation, which is only $5,000, and is appropriated in detail, as follows: For secretary, $2,000; for clerk, $1,200; for messenger, $600; for rent of office, $1,000, and for contingent expenses, $200. So long as that commission exists it cannot be carried on with a less appropriation for the doing of its business. There is not one dollar appropriated for the payment of any salary to any of these commissioners nor one penny appropriated for any of their expenses. The Committee on Appropriations have accepted their services in this legislation in the spirit in which they offered it, in the spirit of wise philanthropy, looking not only to the safety and justice of our Indian tribes, but to the good honor and good government of that service so far as we transact it.

Their duty is to inspect the supplies and contracts for supplies at two places; first where they are purchased—and I may be permitted from the stand-point of my somewhat long experience to say that the real question in the purchase of supplies for this Government lies not wholly in the men who contract for them or the men who pay the money for them, but the question of good returns for money expended in this manner depends largely upon the inspector.

All over this country we find large sums of money subjected in its result to the honest or dishonest inspection of men who receive $2.50 per day for their services. Millions of money, in all the departments of Government, in its expenditure, depends to-day upon the arbitrary power of inspection and rejection of men who are employed at a rate of compensation rarely exceeding $3 per day. I do not mean to say that they are dishonest; but I do mean to say that they are so situated, so surrounded by a thousand influences of friendship, of good fellowship, of association and other influences, as may tend to make them too lenient, or even at times somewhat neglectful of their duties.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCALES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield my time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SCALES. May I now ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question?

Mr. ROBESON. I have but a few moments, and wish to get through with this line of thought.

Now, here are a set of people selected for eminence in intelligence and philanthropy who make this inspection not only of these goods when bought, but, what is far more important, they inspect the goods when delivered.

Every Department of the Government except this has a chance of protection, which this Indian Department has not. When goods are delivered after purchase by any other Department of the Government they are received at their great centers, inspected by their own officers, and accepted or rejected as the case may be.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBESON. I have but two or three minutes.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to ask the gentleman in this connection whether we have not already adopted a provision in this bill for the pay of five Indian inspectors at $3,000 a year, making $15,000 in all, and for their necessary traveling expenses $6,000. I wish to ask the gentleman if these inspectors have any connection with the duty to which he now refers?

Mr. RYAN. None whatever.

Mr. ROBESON. The inspectors to which the gentleman from New York refers are provided for another purpose. Their duty is to go around and inspect the agencies of the various tribes and see how their business is carried on.

Now, I was going on to say, that when these goods reach the Indians, who inspects them? What responsible man is there to see whether the Indians are cheated or not? Who shall say that the goods sent there in answer to treaty obligations or in response to the bounty and philanthropy of this Government are goods that ought to be sent to these people? No officer is charged with that duty, and it is for that express purpose that the services of these eminent philanthropists are accepted; and to the end that justice may be done to the Indians in that regard, their knowledge, their industry, and their energies are directed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is exactly where this question stands. No complaint has ever been made of these gentlemen. The Interior Department and the Indian superintendency all say that their services are most valuable; and, as a part of my remarks in this connection, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 11, 1881, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1881.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry I beg leave to say that the Board of Indian Commissioners has proved of great usefulness in the management of Indian Affairs. They have been rendering very great service in superintending, together with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the annual lettings of contracts for supplying the Indians with provisions and annuities, in the examination of annuity goods as to their quality, in the examination of accounts, and in making inspections of agencies and inquiries into the different branches of the Indian service. In all these things I have found the board very useful, and believe that the sum that has been appropriated for many years to defray its expenses has been money expended to the great advantage of the service. I should be glad to have the board kept in existence and the appropriation for defraying its expenses renewed.

Very truly yours,

C. SCHURZ.

Hon. FRANK HISCOCK, House of Representatives.

Mr. HOOKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] has not quite expired.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and ask him to give me one minute after he shall have spoken, if I desire it.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] that the statute referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey merely continued this board as it was originally created. And while this very act professes to have them serve without compensation it is a very remarkable fact that the second clause of the statute to which he refers clothes them with the power to appoint one of their own members as a secretary, who shall receive compensation. I read from the statute:

SEC. 2039. There shall be a board of Indian commissioners, composed of not more than ten persons, appointed by the President solely, from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

SEC. 2040. The board of commissioners mentioned in the preceding section shall have power to appoint one of their own number as secretary, who shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation as the board may designate, payable from any moneys appropriated for the expenses of the board.

Section 2041 defines the duties of these commissioners. It says:

The board of commissioners mentioned in section 2039 shall supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States; and shall inspect all goods purchased for Indians, in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose duty it shall be to consult the commission in making purchases of such goods.

Now, sir, it is evident that the second of these sections which I have read violates the very principle upon which this board was created. They were to be selected from men of great philanthropy, and I doubt not many of them have been men of great philanthropy. I doubt not a great majority of that board have been such men. But they are but human beings, subject to all the influences, passions, and emotions that sway mankind at large. And would it not be a good thing to appoint another board to watch that board? You might get them better, more philanthropical; you might have a superior race of men to select from.

If the principle is a correct one, then you ought to have a board of supervisors to supervise the purchase of Navy supplies, a board of supervisors to supervise the purchase of Army supplies, a board of supervisors over every Department of the Government, without bond, without salary, without pay, and without any other responsibility save that which is to be derived from their high character and standing.

I say, sir, that government is not conducted on any such principle as this. Government means that you shall have an officer, if appointed, required to give bond for the performance of his duty; if elected, then elected by the sovereign power of the people possessing the right to elect; and in no case, in my judgment, ought you to require an officer to have control and direction of the expenditure of money unless he is a bonded officer of the Government.

This very board now has a right to inspect the supplies. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] asked who inspected the supplies when given to the Indians. Why, sir, he ought to have been familiar enough with the law and with Indian affairs to have understood that whenever supplies are delivered to an agency there is required to be an officer of the Army of the United States to receive them, to inspect them, and see that they correspond with the contracts. That is the protection which the Indians possess. And I think they would find still greater protection if you would confide all their interests, all their affairs, to the head of the War Department, and if in nine cases out of ten you selected your agents from the intelligent Indians themselves. Where you cannot select your agents from the intelligent Indians themselves, then select them from officers of the Army who have given the necessary guarantees that they will perform with fidelity the duty imposed upon them.

Why, sir, I visited in 1878 the bands of some of the savage tribes that have just been moved to the Territory. I visited the camp of Joseph. I visited the Modoc camp, and I saw there among those Indians men who were capable of filling the office of agent for them as well as any white man that could be selected. Experience has demonstrated that as the five semi-civilized tribes have advanced in civilization they understand far better their real interests than do their ostensible protectors and guardians, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the board of peace commissioners.

[Here the hammer fell. Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ROBESON. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUTCHINS.]

Mr. HASKELL rose.

Mr. RYAN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HASKELL. Very well.

Mr. SCALES. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to address a question to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] who was not inclined to yield to me. He said one of the objects these commissioners had in view was to inspect the goods delivered at the agency. Does the gentleman stand by that?

Mr. ROBESON. I refer to the letter which was read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SCALES. The gentleman does not stand by it. There is no means provided in this bill for any such purpose. The commissioners themselves cannot do it. They have got no clerk, no agent to do it. It is done by the Government. It was done when you appointed them, as it is done now, by officers of the Army. It has always been so done, and it is guaranteed just as strongly as it could be by these gentlemen who never go there for any such purpose.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HUTCHINS to strike out the paragraph, there were—ayes 33, noes 54.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi:

For permanent annuity, in goods or otherwise, per third article of treaty of November 3, 1804, $1,000.

For interest on $200,000, at 5 per cent., per second article of treaty of October 21, 1837, $10,000.

For interest on $800,000, at 5 per cent., per second article of treaty of October 11, 1842, $40,000: Provided, That the sum of $1,500 of this amount shall be used for the pay of a physician and for purchase of medicine; in all, $51,000.

Mr. RYAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 556 insert the following:

"And provided further, That hereafter the Sacs and Foxes of Iowa shall have apportioned to them from appropriations for fulfilling the stipulations of said treaties no greater sum thereof than that heretofore set apart for them."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Telegraphing and making purchases of Indian supplies, to contract for the Indian service, advertising at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphing, $40,000.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$40,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000." I make this motion for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman having charge of this bill [Mr. RYAN] what is the necessity for this large increase in expenditures over the appropriation for this item made last year. The amount appropriated last year for this purpose was $30,000, I believe; this year it is proposed to increase the amount to $40,000.

Mr. RYAN. I will state to the gentleman that the amount appropriated last year was inadequate, and the House in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which has just been passed, put in an item of $10,000 to supply that deficiency. The aggregate expenditure for this item for the current fiscal year will therefore be $40,000, the same as is provided by this bill.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RYAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to amend the clause just read by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That when it becomes necessary to detail clerks and other employés of the Indian service outside of Washington to assist in the opening of bids, making contracts, and shipping goods, they may be allowed a per diem of not exceeding $4 per day for hotel and other expenses, which per diem shall be in lieu of all expenses now authorized by law, exclusive of railway transportation.

Mr. SCALES. Is that to be paid out of the $40,000 appropriated in this item?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following:

Transportation of Indian supplies: For this amount, for necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles, for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, $275,000.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$275,000" and inserting "$250,000." This bill proposes to make the appropriation for this purpose $50,000 more than was appropriated last year. I desire to inquire the reason for this large increase.

Mr. RYAN. I have the same explanation to make in regard to this item that I made in regard to the other item. The amount provided for in this bill is exactly the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year. The deficiency for this item in the urgent deficiency bill which passed the House a few days ago makes the difference which I suppose the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas how the amount contained in this item of the bill compares with the expenditures for this purpose made last year. Of course we cannot now tell what the total expenditures will be for this fiscal year.

Mr. RYAN. I will state that the appropriation here contained is larger than the amount appropriated for the last year; but there was a deficiency last year.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman does not apprehend my question. The bill which was passed at the last session, and for which a few days ago we passed a deficiency under this item, is for the current fiscal year. Now, of course, it is all conjecture, but it may be correct. What I ask the gentleman is, how the amount in this bill compares with the expenditures under this item for the last fiscal year?

Mr. RYAN. That is precisely what I was going to state.

Mr. BLOUNT. I could not tell what the gentleman was going to state.

Mr. RYAN. I was interrupted by the gentleman, or I would have completed the statement. I was about stating that the amount herein provided for is larger than the amount which was appropriated for the last fiscal year. But there was a deficiency for that year of over $30,000, which Congress has failed to provide for, and the indebtedness subsists against the Government to-day.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. STOCKSLAGER; and upon a division there were—ayes 16, noes 59.

No further count being called for, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RYAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer as an additional paragraph, to come in after the one just read, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray the expenses of the removal of the Indians at Mescalero agency to the Jicarilla reservation, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

INTEREST ON TRUST-FUND STOCKS.

SEC. 2. For payment of interest on certain abstracted and non-paying State stocks belonging to the various Indian tribes and held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior, for the year ending June 30, 1882, namely:

For trust-fund interest due Cherokee national fund, $26,060.

Mr. McCOOK. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill what is meant by these words in the item just read:

For payment of interest on certain abstracted and non-paying State stocks, belonging to the various Indian tribes, &c.

Mr. RYAN. There were certain State bonds held by the Government in trust for the Indians which have been abstracted, and we are continuing to pay the interest on them. We are holding also other State bonds which have been repudiated, and which are not now interest-paying bonds.

Mr. McCOOK. The purpose of my inquiry is, what is meant by the use of the word "abstracted" in that clause?

Mr. RYAN. It means that the bonds were stolen.

Mr. McCOOK. Ah! [Laughter.]

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. RYAN. I move that the committtee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That when not required for the purpose for which appropriated, the funds herein provided for the pay of specified employés at any agency may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the pay of other employés at such agency, but no deficiency shall be thereby created, and, when necessary, specified employés may be detailed for other service when not required for the duty for which they were engaged; and that the several appropriations herein made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the said tribes respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

It seems to me that section is very objectionable. I have not examined sufficiently to ascertain to what extent the practice has been followed heretofore; but it seems to me that the power conferred upon the Department to expend moneys appropriated for purposes other than those specified in the appropriation is always an exceedingly unwise policy, for by it you would defeat the whole purpose of limitation upon appropriations.

The general rule has been regarded as the safe one, to appropriate money to be expended for a specific and definite purpose, and to permit the money to be expended for no other purpose. Some of the most interesting debates that have occurred in Congress have been those which have grown out of the attempt to restrict the expenditures of public money to the specific and definite objects for which the appropriations were made. Under the general provision of this last section it is possible for public officers having charge of the expenditure of large sums of money—many hundreds of thousands of dollars—to apply this money to other purposes than those specifically designated in the bill. It does seem to me unwise to authorize such a proceeding.

This bill appropriates $363,000 more than has been appropriated by any bill of this kind for a number of years; and if I had not risen for the purpose of moving to strike out this last section, which confers unlimited power upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the expenditure of very large sums—which, in fact, allows him to expend them as he may think proper—I should still have sought the opportunity to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, who seems to be exceedingly familiar with its details, to explain in some degree how it occurs that in spite of the diminishing numbers of the Indians—in spite of the fact that they seem to be gradually dying out—how it occurs that after the heavy expenses incurred in former years for the purpose of establishing the Indians on reservations there is this increase of expenditures almost unexampled in late years.

Mr. RYAN. In the first place, the gentleman is mistaken when he says that the amount of money proposed to be appropriated by this bill is greater than that which has been appropriated by Congress for the current year. It is less.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman includes the deficiency appropriations?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly. I will say in addition that this difference grows out of several causes. First, the Department has been compelled to pay from 30 to 40 per cent. more for beef during the current fiscal year than during any preceding year of late, making a very large difference, reaching nearly a quarter of a million dollars. For the Sioux alone, under our treaties with them, we have been obliged to pay $170,000 more for beef during the current year than we did during the last year. In addition to that, we are appropriating larger sums for school purposes than heretofore, for the reason that heretofore schools have been very largely supported out of a trust fund, which is now becoming exhausted, so that we have now to make appropriations to supply the deficiency.

Mr. SPARKS. How can the gentleman state that the appropriation for beef to supply the Sioux agency is larger for the year ending June 30, 1883, than for the current year?

Mr. RYAN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I made no such statement.

Mr. SPARKS. I so understood.

Mr. RYAN. I stated that for the current fiscal year this expense at those agencies was greater than for the preceding year by the amount I mentioned, being $170,000 for the Sioux alone.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make one answer to the gentleman from Indiana. This bill appropriates $351,600 more than the corresponding bill of last year; but the urgent deficiency bill, which we passed here the other day, appropriates for deficiencies which ought to have been in the bill of last year more than $500,000. So that in this bill we are $150,000 below the expenditures for the current year.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must dissent from the statement made by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.] Several millions of dollars appropriated in this bill and in previous Indian bills are not dependent upon treaty stipulation at all. We are expending large sums of money for the Indians without any obligation on the part of the Government; and when we have sought to reduce the amount expended in this way, when we have believed we were doing what was right in this direction, the Department has gone on and spent money without reference to the limitations provided by Congress, and then has come back here with claims for deficiencies. It has stood in defiance of the will of this House for years. It has gone on expending money until the Indians were without supplies, and then a pressure has been brought to bear upon this House in the matter of Indian supplies, as in other deficiencies.

Now, in regard to the Sioux the gentleman from Kansas claims that there is a deficiency growing out of the treaties. That depends upon construction. We debated the question in the last Congress, and I must dissent from the conclusion of the gentleman. I think we voted every dollar that the Indians were entitled to under the treaties. So far as deficiencies are concerned, there are many matters just as illegitimate as these, for which from year to year this pressure has been brought upon us. We have in our appropriation bills measured the expenses as we thought they should be; but an improper administration has done away with all that we might do.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. On reflection I withdraw that amendment, and I now move to strike out the last clause of the section. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he assumes that last year and in former years Congress did not appropriate the whole amount required to be appropriated for these tribes according to the treaties with them. Does he say that the sum appropriated last year, which was certainly almost without example, was less than the treaty stipulations required?

Mr. RYAN. I have just stated—at least I think I have—that the appropriations for the present fiscal year exceeded the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1881; and I have stated the reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point is this: how can the gentleman talk about a deficiency, if Congress appropriated all that the treaty stipulations required? If Congress failed to appropriate the amount of money required by treaties to be appropriated for the Indians, then a deficiency might have occurred; but if the appropriations were fully up to the treaty stipulations, then there could be no such thing as a deficiency.

Mr. RYAN. Let me tell the gentleman how Congress failed to make the necessary appropriation. The treaty requires you shall give so many pounds of beef, so many pounds of coffee, so many articles of clothing, and it cost more dollars to buy them in 1882 than in 1881.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true, but does the gentleman say there are enough of treaties containing such stipulations to make the difference half a million dollars?

Mr. RYAN. I say in regard to the Sioux alone it costs $170,000 more for beef for the current year than for the preceding year.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can see where payment is made in kind there might be such a thing as a deficiency, but when the gentleman speaks of a deficiency growing out of unlawful expenditure of the money of the appropriation then I cannot agree with him.

I will call the gentleman's attention to the average. This bill averages $350,000 above the same bill during the last five years, taking them together, and with the exception of once or twice there was no material deficiency to be provided for.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to state one other thing in connection with the Sioux. The tribes to which I have made allusion have been increasing in numbers. In addition, I will state that on the 20th of last July something like 2,800 Sioux were added to the number to be provided, and that was not contemplated by the appropriation when it was made.

Mr. FLOWER. In the urgent deficiency bill the other day $1,000 was appropriated for procuring vaccine virus, while in this bill for the whole fiscal year the appropriation for the same purpose is only $800. Why is this?

Mr. RYAN. The small-pox, as the gentleman is aware, has been prevalent of late.

Mr. FLOWER. The reason the country ascribes for the difference is that the virus which was purchased by the Indian Bureau was virus taken from "hooking cows," and that most of it was used by the Indian agents on themselves, which will account for some of their "hooking" peculiarities of which we have heard so much complaint of late. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his motion to strike out. Now, I remember incorporating in the Indian appropriation bill some years ago a section similar to this. And if the officials managing Indian affairs will attend to it rightly it is a good provision. The point simply is to allow where there is a surplus in one item that surplus to be used for a deficiency in another item. If the officials will act correctly it is a good provision.

The gentleman speaks of increased cost at these Sioux agencies. He ought to remember in the Forty-fifth Congress we removed the Sioux tribe from where they had been to their present location. We provided for that costly removal and for settling them where they now are, and yet the appropriations were not in excess of what is proposed to-day. Everybody will see at once that involved the expenditure of a great deal of money.

But I wish to come to the subject of deficiency. I do not see how that could occur. It is said there is so much beef to be provided for. That is not your appropriation, it is the appropriation of so much money to furnish these supplies.

Mr. RYAN. No, the Sioux treaty is in kind.

Mr. SPARKS. Your appropriation is for money for the Sioux tribe, and not in kind.

Mr. HASKELL. But the treaty is "in kind."

Mr. SPARKS. You speak of the treaty. What is a treaty?

Mr. HASKELL. It is a law.

Mr. SPARKS. But you do not live up to it in anything.

Mr. HASKELL. You have not for the last six years.

Mr. SPARKS. If you stand by Indian treaties you would not have to appropriate the money you do in this bill; but we have taken this view of it, that it is better to take care of the Indians by feeding them than fighting them, and you go beyond your treaties. These appropriations are far beyond the treaties. In some particular instances they may not be, but there is hardly a case where there is a treaty with a tribe that the appropriation by Congress is not largely in excess of what it would be under any proper construction of the treaty. That is my experience.

Mr. RYAN moved the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAGE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4185) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments.

Mr. RYAN demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the yeas and nays will be taken on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 162, nays 5, not voting 125; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. WAIT with Mr. KENNA.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. MILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, with Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey.

Mr. COLERICK with Mr. DE MOTTE.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. PRESCOTT with Mr. SHELLEY.

Mr. BAYNE with Mr. HARRIS of New Jersey.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. ROBESON with Mr. CARLISLE.

Mr. WEBBER with Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. WARD.

Mr. JOYCE with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. MOREY. I was paired with Mr. ATHERTON; and though the pair has expired, I will not vote upon this bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am announced as being paired with two different gentlemen. I have no recollection of having any arrangement for a pair with Mr. BAYNE. I am paired with Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts.

On motion of Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. In this case, although paired with Mr. CRAPO, I voted, for the reason that I supposed he would have voted the same way, if present.

The result of the vote was then announced as recorded.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 4679) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of the cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service.

RIDING PAGE.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask consent at this time to offer, for reference to the Committee on Accounts, the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a page to do duty as riding page at a salary of $2.50 per diem, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

BETTY TAYLOR DANDRIDGE.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4719) granting a pension to Betty Taylor Dandridge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANNA MARIA YOUNG.

Mr. WATSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4720) granting a pension to Anna Maria Young; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WATSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4721) to erect a light on the mainland at the harbor of Erie, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

Mr. SPARKS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4657) granting relief to Archibald Hunley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

STARLIN TURNER.

Mr. PEELLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4722) for the relief of Mrs. Starlin Turner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL ALADICE.

Mr. PEELLE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4723) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Aladice; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ENCAMPMENT INDIANA STATE TROOPS.

Mr. PEELLE also, by unanimous consent introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 147) granting to the State of Indiana the use of tents, on the occasion of the encampment of State troops during the year 1882; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

R. R. ROBINSON.

Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4724) for the relief of R. R. Robinson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CYRUS K. OSGOOD.

Mr. BLACK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4725) for the relief of the legal representatives and sureties of Cyrus K. Osgood, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TESTS OF STRUCTURAL MATERIALS.

Mr. CAMPBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4726) authorizing the President to appoint a commission of experts, skilled in the investigation, production, and use of metallic substances and other structural materials, to execute tests and experiments on iron, steel, and other materials used in the construction of bridges, buildings, and mechanical structures, and deduct useful rules therefrom; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Manufactures, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF ARMY CONTRACTORS.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) for the relief of contractors failing to comply with their contracts to supply military posts with corn, hay, or oats, by reason of drought in the State of Texas in the year 1881; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. UPSON. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Should it not rather go to the Committee on War Claims? The Chair does not understand how the resolution can be intended for the relief of contractors unless it be to pay them some money.

Mr. SPRINGER. Or else to relieve them from paying money which they owe, which is the same thing.

Mr. UPSON. The object of the joint resolution is to relieve these contractors from liability.

The SPEAKER. Then it must go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4727) amending section 1874 of the Revised Statutes, relating to certain Territorial courts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. HARDENBERGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4728) to extend the corporate existence of national banking associations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

JACOB PASSAGE.

Mr. SPAULDING, (by request,) by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4729) to rerate the pension of Jacob Passage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL G. M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. SPAULDING (by request) also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4730) for the relief of Samuel G. McLaughlin; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4731) to establish a district court of the United States at Raleigh, in the eastern district of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF CERTAIN ARTICLES ON VESSELS.

Mr. WARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4732) to alter and amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the transportation of certain articles on vessels; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES O'BRIEN.

Mr. HARDY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4733) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James O'Brien; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH M. CUMMING AND OTHERS.

Mr. HARDY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4734) for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4735) for the relief of settlers on railroad lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD CORNING.

Mr. STRAIT also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4736) for the relief of Edward Corning; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIUS INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 149) authorizing the payment of a portion of the Virginius indemnity fund to the mother of General W. A. C. Ryan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY J. TRIMBLE.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4737) for the relief of Mary J. Trimble; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTIES TO FARRAGUT'S COMMAND.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4738) to provide for the payment of bounties due to the officers and sailors of the United States vessels under the command of flag-officer D. G. Farragut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS YOUNG'S RIVER, ETC., OREGON.

Mr. GEORGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4739) giving the consent of the United States to the erection of bridges across Young's River and across the Lewis and Clark Rivers, in Oregon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MUSTER-ROLLS OF OREGON VOLUNTEERS.

JOHN B. MONTEITH.

Mr. GEORGE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4741) to adjust the accounts of John B. Monteith, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARTHA F. WOODRUM.

Mr. GEORGE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4742) to grant a pension to Mrs. Martha F. Woodrum; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH BATES.

Mr. GEORGE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4743) for the relief of Elizabeth Bates; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DR. JOHN A. TONNER.

Mr. GEORGE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4744) for the relief of Dr. John A. Tonner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' CEMETERY, HAMILTON, OHIO.

Mr. MOREY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4745) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for the soldiers' cemetery at Hamilton, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORRIN J. STRAUSBRO.

Mr. WILLITS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4746) to remove the charge of desertion against Orrin J. Strausbro; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. MOORE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4747) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. CARPENTER, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, in favor of so amending the patent laws of the United States as to protect the people; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

CAPTAIN HORACE GAMBLE.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4748) to correct the muster of Captain Horace Gamble; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COUPLING OF RAILROAD CARS.

Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4749) to regulate the coupling of cars on the various railroads in the United States and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MARIE J. FURLONG AND JENNIE M. PARKS.

Mr. CALKINS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4750) for the relief of Marie J. Furlong and Jennie M. Parks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS DEEMS.

Mr. CALKINS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4751) for the relief of Lewis Deems; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

R. K. BRUSH.

Mr. CALKINS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4752) for the relief of R. K. Brush; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ISABEL M'DOWELL.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Invalid Pensions with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1329) granting arrears of pension to Isabel McDowell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to give notice that I propose to call up to-morrow the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and shall ask the House to proceed to its consideration.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. SCRANTON, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, for ten days, from and including to-morrow, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GEORGE asked consent to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the following cases:

The claim of Bowers & Richards;
The claim of E. M. Fish & Co.;
The claim of William B. Hughes; and
The claim of William B. Hooper & Co.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it stated that there have been no adverse reports in those cases?

The SPEAKER. Under the present rule that is not required.

Mr. HOLMAN. It should be required.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires that copies shall be left in all cases. The Chair is informed that there have been no adverse reports in these cases.

There being no objection, leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: The petition of the North Chicago Rolling-Mill Company, relative to dredging Calumet Harbor—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Polly Tatham, administratrix of the estate of James C. Tatham, for compensation for surveying Indian lands—to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: The petition of the members of the Rochester (New York) Academy of Science, asking for a reduction in the duties on books of a scientific character and scientific apparatus—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: The petition of 40 citizens of Penn Yan, New York, for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and the two-cent stamp on bank checks and drafts—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of soldiers of Albany, New York, praying that pensions be granted to Federal soldiers who were confined in rebel prisons during the late rebellion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASHBURN: Memorial of H. C. Wait and others, citizens of Saint Cloud, Minnesota, asking for legislation that will allow the construction of a dam in the Mississippi River at that point—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. M. R. WISE: Papers relating to the pension claim of Walter J. Plowden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 2, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents resolutions of the directors of the Union League of Philadelphia, recommending the plan of Mr. Oliver Evans Woods for better securing the delivery of foreign letters through the United States mails.

Mr. FERRY. Judging from what has been stated, I imagine that that communication concerns the delivery of dead letters, both foreign and domestic, and I ask that the resolutions be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think we ought to encumber the RECORD, which is an enormous expense, by reading the resolutions. If the memorial is read it goes into the RECORD, and will be printed at an expense probably of a hundred dollars.

Mr. FERRY. The subject presented by this communication is one that concerns almost everybody, and I think it would be the simplest way of putting it before the people. It will go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and attract the attention of the public. That was my object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So far as legislation goes, putting it before the Senate is the object of a petition and not to put it before the people.

Mr. FERRY. What little experience I have had in legislation goes to show that public opinion has much to do with shaping legislation. We are representatives of the opinion of the public, and so far as we can gain an expression of that opinion we are so far advised beyond the possibilities of our own acquirement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That goes to the proposition that we ought to print every petition and memorial that is sent to this body and tax the people to pay for that printing. The Senate has not thought so, and its rules do not provide so. That is my only objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan does not wish to test the sense of the Senate on the question, the Chair understands.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from Vermont objects, of course unanimous consent cannot be given to the reading, but I would prefer to have the resolutions read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, California, in favor of the incorporation of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Buffalo Board of Trade, in favor of the permanent organization of the Signal Corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of G. W. Vanliken and 44 others, of Coldwater, Michigan, and the petition of A. L. Girard and 54 others, citizens of Girard, Michigan, praying for legislation to regulate charges for railroad transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of Asa Weems and others, citizens of Wood County, Texas, praying for the enactment of laws prohibiting unjust discriminations by railway companies; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL presented a petition of citizens of Montpelier, Vermont, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a public building at the capital of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of Joseph Church and 125 others, citizens of Rhode Island, engaged in commerce and fisheries, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a light-house at Sakonnet Point, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. In June, 1878, I presented a petition of Collin Adams. It seems the petition and papers have been mislaid or lost. I again present the petition of Collin Adams, praying that the proceeds of the sale of certain cotton seized by the Army of the United States, and which proceeds were used for the benefit of the Government, be paid to him. I move that the petition, together with the accompanying paper, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of citizens of New York who were ex-Union soldiers, praying that survivors of so-called confederate prisons be pensioned; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Dan Talmage, Sons & Co., the bank presidents of the city of Charleston, South Carolina, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, and a number of leading business men of Charleston, praying for a modification of the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands regarding the duty on rice; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Santee River in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McPHERSON presented a memorial signed by 46 prominent importers of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the passage of the bill abolishing the right of trial by jury of questions as to the rates of duty under tariff laws and substituting instead an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury or to the Court of Claims upon any question of lawful rates or assessment of duty, the decision of either to be final; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 818) to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans, and for other purposes, and making an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of said port, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1238) to regulate practice in patent suits, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 66) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patents, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLATT. I am instructed by the same committee to report adversely the bill (S. No. 155) to provide for refunding of fees in all cases of void registration of trade-marks. Perhaps some Senator interested in the bill would desire to have it go upon the Calendar; otherwise I ask for its indefinite postponement.

Mr. GARLAND. Is there a written report accompanying the bill?

Mr. PLATT. There is no written report.

Mr. GARLAND. Let it go upon the Calendar, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 265) to provide for the payment of the amount due the Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Northern Railway Company for transportation of the United States mails, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1017) for the relief of A. H. Von Leutwitz, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 212) to amend sections 2582, 2583, 2607, and 2684 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the collection districts of California, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1290) to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1049) to promote the efficiency of the life-saving service, and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck, reported it with an amendment.

PRINTING OF MEMORIAL CARD.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution, "That there be printed from the engraved plate of the memorial card prepared in honor of the late President James Abram Garfield, 5,000 copies for distribution by the Senate," to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. An act has passed both Houses authorizing any member of Congress to obtain those cards at cost, which will be very trifling indeed. Therefore there is no need to have them printed for free distribution by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1358) to grant additional pensions to those who have lost an arm or a leg in the service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WINDOM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1359) granting a pension to A. J. Hunt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Abel Greene for reference. I desire to state that I introduce this by request. I have myself no knowledge of the facts on which the bill is drawn.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1360) for the relief of Abel Green; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROLLINS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1361) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent for a term of years the building at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Thirteenth street northwest, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1362) for the relief of the city of Glasgow in the State of Missouri, and of certain citizens thereof; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1363) for the relief of Thomas Sampson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1364) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house at or near Sakonnet Point, Rhode Island; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1365) for the relief of George F. Brott; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1366) for the relief of Arthur W. Eastman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1367) for the relief of H. C. Linn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (by request,) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1368) for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1369) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay the pension allowed Jane Sturrock, deceased, mother of William D. Sturrock, deceased, late of the One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, to David Sturrock, the dependent invalid father of said soldier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mary V. Wilt, widow of Lieutenant Wilt, United States Volunteers, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. MAXEY, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the case of Francis Guilbeau, of San Antonio, Texas, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

FAST MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement giving the amount expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, for special facilities for fast mails, a list of railroad companies receiving the same, the amount paid to each company, and the additional service furnished, and to what extent the service has been expedited, if any, by each company; also a detailed statement of contracts made for special fast mail facilities during the present fiscal year to date, the amount to be paid to each railroad company, and the character of the additional service to be performed by each company.

SIXTH NORTH CAROLINA COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. VANCE. I submit a resolution, which I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the cost of collecting the internal-revenue tax in the sixth collection district of North Carolina is near 60 per cent., being greater than that of any other district in the United States; and

Whereas there are many and serious charges of corruption and misconduct against the officers in charge of the execution of these laws made openly in the newspapers and elsewhere, which charges are generally believed: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, shall be charged with the duty of investigating the condition of affairs in said State with reference to said charges and complaints, with ample powers to compel the appearance of witnesses, to administer oaths, employ a stenographer and clerk, and do all other necessary things in the premises.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is an extraordinary resolution. I have no objection to the Senator calling for any information from the Department with respect to the subject, but this is rather in the nature of an executive inquiry. I suppose it relates to a matter that is now pending in executive session, and is before the Committee on Finance, relating to the sixth district of North Carolina. I certainly would object to the adoption of a resolution containing such a recital, of which we can know nothing.

Mr. VANCE. I cannot hear the Senator distinctly. On what ground does he object to the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly should object to the passage of a resolution containing a recital about which we know nothing. If the Senator wants any information from the proper executive Department in respect to the condition of affairs in the sixth district of North Carolina, he can very easily get that information, and then it should be referred to the Committee on Finance, which has charge of the nomination now pending of a collector for that district. It would be very pertinent to have any information from the Department on that subject, but I fear it would not be proper to institute a special committee of this kind in regard to a single collection district in the United States, when the subject-matter is before the Committee on Finance, and is a matter of executive business. I therefore shall object to the consideration of the resolution now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection to the present consideration of the resolution being made, it goes over.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a remark in answer to what he has said.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I have no objection. I withhold my objection for that purpose.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator says it will be very easy for me to get any information I desire by simply applying to the Department. I beg to undeceive the Senator in regard to that. I have applied twice to the Secretary of the Treasury for certain documents, and I have had two responses to that application. A resolution was introduced by me in the Senate on the 16th day of last January. Each response thereto has been a clear and unmistakable evasion of the demand. I hold the replies to that request for information in my hand. The resolution calls for "copies of all charges, complaints, reports, or other information concerning irregularities in the collection of internal revenue in the sixth collection district of North Carolina." Mr. Commissioner Raum, in his response to the Secretary of the Treasury, which is published, says:

It is proper to state, however, that the reports of examining officers on the office and district are not included. These reports do not contain charges. They are the criticisms of the agents on the current work of the office and district, and their suggestions for the improvement of the service.

The very things that I wanted. Failing to get that, I wrote a private letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and named those reports in particular, of which the following letter is a copy. I will read the portion which is material:

I wanted the complaints, charges, &c., if any, made by the people in regard to the manner of executing the revenue laws in that district, and especially the reports of special agents Brooks and Kellogg, which I think were fairly included in the resolution under the words "other information."

In reply to that I have received an additional report, of matters that I did not call for, and no mention whatever is made of the reports of Messrs. Brooks and Kellogg, which I called for in the first resolution and which I called for specifically in the second letter. That being the case, I have not the opportunity of obtaining the information which I desire, and for that reason, among others, I ask for this investigation into the sixth collection district of North Carolina, which has nothing whatsoever that I know of to do with the nomination pending, and which has been a public scandal for ten years to the Government and to the State of North Carolina; that is to say, it has been made an excuse for charges against the people of the State of North Carolina, and they in turn have made charges of corruption against that department, which were generally believed and universally published in the newspapers and commented upon on the hustings and elsewhere in North Carolina.

I want to see the truth of those charges investigated. If the revenue department is not to blame for the disturbances which have occurred there I want it exonerated. If the people whom I have the honor to represent have not been guilty of the conduct attributed to them by the revenue department, or if they have been guilty of any excesses under gross provocation, I want that to be made known. Therefore I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under objection.

Mr. VANCE. I give notice that I shall call it up at the earliest moment.

BAYOU LA FOURCHE.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate an estimate of the expense of clearing the wrecks and other obstructions to navigation at the mouth of Bayou La Fourche, Louisiana.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Navy Register for January, 1882, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Army Register for January, 1882, be printed for the use of the Senate.

CARRIAGE-WAY IN THE MALL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to inquire into the expediency of extending the carriage-way in the Mall, in the city of Washington, through the public grounds occupied by the Botanic Garden, so as to connect with Pennsylvania and Maryland avenues on First street.

HERMAN BIGGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the morning hour is at an end and the proceedings under the Anthony rule will now commence. The pending bill is the bill (S. No. 173) for the relief of Herman Biggs, and the question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SEWELL. At the close of the morning hour yesterday the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] desired information as to whether Herman Biggs had received a pension. I can now give that information. From October 10, 1865, to January 1, 1878, he received $7.50 per month. From January 1, 1878, to February 3, 1879, he received $15 per month. From February 3, 1879, to the present time he has been in receipt of $30 per month, which, as I understand, is the maximum sum he can receive.

Mr. COCKRELL. What arrears did he receive?

Mr. SEWELL. None. He received $7.50 a month from 1865 to the time when he drew his pension.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was the pension granted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the 24th of April, 1879.

Mr. COCKRELL. He then drew arrears from the date of his disability?

Mr. EDMUNDS. He has received $2,250 down to December last.

Mr. SEWELL. He received from October 10, 1865, to January 1, 1878, a pension at the rate of $7.50 per month. It was then increased to $15, and subsequently to $30 per month.

While I do not think there is any necessity for stating the precedents in a case of this kind, as I claim that this officer is simply asking what he was entitled to have had in 1865, and that he has not by virtue of his resignation lost his equity to the benefit of being retired, I will state some cases which have gone through both Houses of Congress during the last twenty years similar in their character, with the simple exception that the persons were not wounded in action as this officer was.

Samuel Ross, unassigned and mustered out as major January 1, 1871, and as second lieutenant March, 1872, and retired with the rank of brigadier-general to date from January 1, 1871, by act of May 10, 1872; reduced to the rank of colonel by act of March 3, 1875.

William G. Johnson was mustered out as first lieutenant August, 1866; was in service as first lieutenant of infantry June, 1867; out of service October, 1869; in service as first lieutenant February 10, 1870; mustered out January, 1871; in service as second lieutenant May, 1871, and retired with rank of captain May, 1871.

James B. Collins, mustered out under the act approved July, 1870, was restored and retired by the act of March 3, 1879, with rank of major, to date from January 1, 1871.

Philip W. Stanhope, mustered out under the act of Congress July, 1870, was restored and retired by the act of March, 1879.

Francis O. Wise was restored and retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel by act of March, 1879.

Nathaniel H. McLean, resigned as major June, 1864, was restored and retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel by act of March, 1875.

W. G. Sprague, mustered out September, 1865, in service as second lieutenant April, 1866, was retired with the rank of captain May, 1870.

These are some that I have been able to get together in the last twenty-four hours as precedents in the case.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] referred to the number of officers in service on the frontier who were entitled by reason of age, and being worn out in the service, to the benefit of being retired, but who were excluded because the number is full. I claim that this officer is fully as much entitled, nay, more so, than any officer in the service, save and except those who have been wounded like him. Those who are in the service are serving at posts where they have all the comforts of life, where they have their families about them, where they are receiving their pay, and are able to support their families. In this case, this officer has spent his fortune nursing a wound received in action, and he is to-day, surrounded by his family, on a sick bed, unable to support himself. If any case can lay claim to the consideration of Congress, I say that this is exceptionally such a claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, precedents can be found for everything, and particularly if they are bad precedents. The Congress of the United States has over and over again in every department of governmental affairs made bad precedents; and the Senator from New Jersey asks us to make another, as it appears to me, with great respect to him.

Here is an officer who, so far as we can learn from the report of the committee and from the papers, deliberately resigned his commission in the year 1865. I do not see any evidence that he was then entitled to go upon the retired list, which is the point made by the Senator from New Jersey, if I correctly understand him, because the law provided there should have been forty years service, if I am not mistaken in the length of time—a great number of years of consecutive service—or a total disability to perform military duties growing out of military service.

The then Colonel or Captain Biggs, whatever rank he held at that time, resigned. According to this report, so far as one can get at the state of things, the splinter wound, as it is called, which he had received in some engagement in North Carolina, had not rendered him incapable of performing military duty and did not entitle him to go upon the retired list at that time. If that be so, then having resigned, he left the Army of the United States exactly as thousands of other officers did who had gallantly served their country before.

The retired list, as has been so often stated, is made especially and exclusively as a home for the old and worn-out officers of the Army of the United States who have served their country a great length of time, or who have become physically disabled from further service in the course of their occupation. As the Senator from Ohio has stated, and I myself know several instances personally, the number of officers of the Army of the United States now on the active list who but for the fact that the retired list is full and running over would have a right to demand to be retired, is very considerable indeed, but they are obliged to remain on the active list and do what duty they can under suffering and misfortune, from the fact that having spent their lives in the service of their country there is no other occupation to which they can turn, and if they resign they must starve.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Vermont if he is certain that the retired list is full now? My information is that there are five or six vacancies on it. I do not know whether that is correct or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be true. I will take it that it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was officially informed that those vacancies were reserved for the retirement of officers of the higher grades, so as to create chances for promotion in the line, and so the few vacancies which exist were not available.

Mr. BUTLER. There is so much noise in the Chamber that I cannot hear at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order, so that Senators can be heard. The Senator from South Carolina informs the Senator from Ohio that he did not hear his remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was interrupting the Senator from Vermont a moment simply to say that the few vacancies which exist on the retired list were reserved with a view to the retirement of officers of the higher ranks, so as to create promotions in the line below, and that they were not available for the cases I mentioned the other day, the cases of extreme distress and suffering of officers on the frontier.

Mr. BUTLER. The retired list, then, as I understand the Senator from Ohio, is not full.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be now, because there have been some appointments on the retired list recently, but there were four or five vacancies a month ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will take it for granted, Mr. President, for the purpose of the observations I wish to submit, that there are at this present moment ten vacancies in the retired list. Vacancies do occur, because, unhappily, the retired list does not insure to our worn-out soldiers perpetual life and they die, and vacancies, therefore, occur, and I will assume that there are ten. For those ten vacancies, in my belief, according to such information as I have, and some of it is personal and direct, not growing out of inquiries made yesterday or to-day but from the knowledge of officers of the Army, some of whom are my kindred and many of whom are my friends and acquaintances—for the ten vacancies that exist there are in the officers of the Army of the United States to-day undoubtedly fifty men who, justly to them, justly to the service, justly to the active and strong officers who are below them in regard to their just ambition for promotion, ought to be retired in the regular way; and they will be conveniently as fast as vacancies occur.

The fact therefore that there are now I will say ten (which is a good many more than there are) vacancies, does not help this case at all, because if there were not a single vacancy one might occur and very likely would at the very moment we are discussing this question, and this gentleman would go into it if the Senate and House of Representatives and the President choose to put him in. That does not touch the question. The question is whether this asylum—for that is it—for the worn-out officers who have served continuously in the Army of the United States and are still serving, is to be filled up by gentlemen from private life who years ago resigned their places in the Army either because they were ill and sick or for any other reason, being now in a condition deserving consideration. If you are to do it, you must do it upon the principle of equal and fair play. To do that you must provide for every officer who after any war resigned his place in the Army of his country and whose condition now is such that it appeals to our sympathy and consideration.

If it is proposed to make a general law of that kind, very well; we shall consider whether we can do it. When this retired list was first formed, I think the law provided that the total number of the retired list should not exceed 7 per cent. of all the officers in the Army. That probably at the time made it less than one hundred. Afterwards we carried it up, dropping the percentage method of measurement, to two hundred in round numbers I think, then to three hundred, and I think it is now said that it is four hundred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Four hundred now, made so by an amendment to an appropriation bill without the knowledge of anybody, as far as I can find out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the nature of the retired list, as everybody will agree that it is, why is it right to put into that list and into that asylum gentlemen from the civil walks of life, however well they may have served in the Army years ago, to the exclusion (to say nothing more upon that point) of men now in the Army whose condition is such that they ought to be retired, and to whom it is just that this consideration should be extended as the law provides, and in respect of whose retirement the other active and able officers of the Army who are well and able to perform all their duties will get the desired promotion that their gallant service has entitled them to? That is the question.

I am sure that nobody will understand me as not admiring Colonel Biggs just as much as my friend from New Jersey does, and wishing him well in every way; but the mission that the people sent me here to perform was, as I understand it, to deal with questions of this kind not from a personal point of view as to my sympathy or my wishes as to any man, but upon the general principles of equal and just government that goes upon a system that applies to everybody alike.

Now, I repeat, Mr. President, that according to all that appears from this report, and according to what appears from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, it is evident that when Colonel Biggs resigned in the year 1865 he was not entitled to go on the retired list, for he had not served the forty years, and his physical condition at that time was not such as would entitle him upon the examination of a board to be retired. At any rate he was an intelligent man. If he was not entitled to be retired, then of course his resignation, if he did not wish to continue in the Army and in active service, was a matter at his own choice, with the consent of the President, and he chose to resign and to have absolute independence to engage in trade or travel or do whatever he thought it desirable for his interest and his comfort to do, and he did it, exactly as thousands of other officers did at that time. It turns out afterwards, just as it has turned out with thousands of these other officers, that a slight wound that he received, which at the time was thought to be of very little consequence to him, has developed into a serious and a permanent injury. He has done precisely what all the other officers have done in such cases, applied for a pension and he has got it and has received, as the Commissioner of Pensions telegraphs me, $2,250 down to the 4th of December, 1881, his pension dating back to the date of his discharge. And while I am on that point I ought to inquire if this gentleman were put on the retired list under this bill, what is to become of this pension? Is he to receive three-fourths pay and a pension also?

Mr. SEWELL. As I understand, he cannot receive both retired pay and pension. He must certify on the pay-roll when drawing his pay that he does not get pay from any other source.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true when you take officers of the regular Army; but when by special act of Congress you command the executive department to put this gentleman on the retired list of the Army of the United States and stop there, when under another law he is entitled to a pension, the two laws stand perfectly together and it is very far from being clear, therefore, that he would not be entitled to continue the pension. But that is comparatively a small matter. I am not speaking on the question whether Colonel Biggs shall have three-fourths pay for life and $30 a month pension besides. I am talking about the interest of the Army of the United States, the justice that is due to all its officers alike, and the public policy, which is something more than a mere matter of cold calculation, but embodies justice to and sympathy with all the active officers in the Army of the United States, to give them their fair promotion when those above them cannot perform the duties. It is in this view that I am asking the Senate to consider whether we shall proceed with this kind of bill. That is what I wish the Senate to decide, because if once for all it is decided, then we can all know that it is of no use to make opposition hereafter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I heartily indorse what has been said by the distinguished Senators from Ohio and Vermont in regard to the impolicy and impropriety of passing this bill or kindred legislation.

This bill was first introduced in the Forty-fifth Congress. It was then a bill authorizing the President to nominate Herman Biggs to a second lieutenancy in the Army, and the bill as presented to the Senate at that time only proposed to authorize the President to appoint him to a second lieutenancy in the Army, he then being over age; so that the President was not able to appoint him. That bill was favorably reported and passed the Senate. In that report there are substantially the same documents that have been transferred to the subsequent reports made in the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses. It was in the Forty-sixth Congress that bills authorizing his name to be placed on the retired list were introduced and presented. The same report that has been made in this case verbatim, I believe, was made also in the Forty-sixth Congress.

It may be true, as the Senator from New Jersey has stated, that certain bills may have been passed by the Senate placing officers who were out of the Army back upon the retired list, but as a rule they were exceptional cases and not where there had been a mere voluntary resignation; there are perhaps some exceptional cases even where there was a voluntary resignation; but whenever such precedents were set, they were wrong, and they certainly do not bind the Senate to follow in the footsteps of that kind of legislation.

Here, Mr. President, was a voluntary resignation. The military record does not show even the wounding at the battle referred to; there is no surgeon's certificate here in regard to it, save a letter from Dr. Agnew and a letter from Dr. Norris. They do not trace the disability back to the reported origin of the wound in 1863. There is then practically no evidence before the Senate upon that question. Now, will Congress, regardless of the interests of the Army and regardless of the number on the retired list, now about four hundred, take every officer who was in the volunteer service and who resigned, and who may now be disabled for anything incident even to the service, and place him upon the retired list at three-fourths pay? That is simply the question.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to correct him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. This officer was in the regular service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that; but the rank that you are giving him was not in the regular service at that time.

Mr. SEWELL. I beg pardon. Yes, sir, he was a captain in the regular Army; he was a lieutenant-colonel in the volunteer service.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that is the rank you are giving him?

Mr. SEWELL. No, the bill gives him the rank of captain.

Mr. COCKRELL. Captain of staff. The other bill, that of the last Congress, gave the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and I had not noticed the change. But even in the volunteer service the question is, Shall they all be placed on the retired list? We have made a pension list, and that list is for persons who have been disabled in the service and are not now in the service, and this officer has availed himself of the pension list and is now drawing a pension. If the pension is not what he is entitled to let the Commiteee on Pensions take the case and consider it and increase his pension. The pension was granted several years ago, and he has been drawing a pension ever since 1865.

Mr. BUTLER. What amount?

Mr. COCKRELL. Thirty dollars a month now. If that is not enough let the Committee on Pensions, as they have repeatedly done, consider the case and propose an increase of the pension.

Mr. President, I do claim that this is gross injustice to the officers of the Army; it is demoralizing, and the tendency is to ruin the Army. No man can have more sympathy for this officer than I have. I do not know him personally; I know none of the officers who will be injured by it; but it is a question of principle and not a question of mere sympathy, not a question of mere personal feeling, and I trust that this bill will not be passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have no acquaintance with the subject of this bill, and I am not disposed, I think, unduly to glorify military men or military service; but I am obliged to vote for this bill, and I cannot see any force whatever in the objection that has been made.

Here is a man who served with great distinction and with great honor, and who has become entirely disabled, according to his testimony, from a wound, it matters not when received so that it was received in the line of duty. It is certified by his superior officers, and it is admitted that he has been thus disabled, a captain in the Army and a lieutenant-colonel in the volunteers, actually disabled for life and incapable of rendering any service to himself. The question is, whether because he resigned his office, saved the Government the expense of his salary for years, now when that wound subsequently developed into positive and actual disability, it is discouraging to the Army to put him back in the place which he left under the impression that he was able to take care of himself, before this wound had developed into this condition.

Why, sir, the proposition that because the man has saved the Government this amount of salary, because he has sought to make a living in other and honorable ways, he shall not be put upon the retired list when his wound has developed into actual disability, has no kind of weight with me. Put him there, and if there are too many there, meritoriously placed there, enlarge the list. It is impossible for any government to say that a man who has rendered it honorable service and become disabled in the line of duty shall not be taken care of by the Government, and if that is so then there is no other side to the argument. The objection that the retired list was made for this, that, or the other purpose has nothing to do with it, because we have power to enlarge the retired list to the extent that the exigencies and necessities of the service demand.

For one, sir, I cannot accept the conclusion that would lead us to vote against placing on the retired list, or supporting in some honorable way, a man who has lost the ability to support himself at the command of the Government and in honorable service. I shall vote for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, on which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.] If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. SHERMAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with my colleague, [Mr. PENDLETON,] who is absent on account of the death of a near relative. As I do not regard this as a political question, I vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Grover,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Brown,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,

So the bill was rejected.

SUPPLIES TO SIOUX INDIANS IN 1862.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Senate bill No. 36, order of business No. 25, was passed by a few days ago when the Calendar was called, without prejudice. I move that it be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed by without prejudice, and can now be called up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill was read when it was under consideration before.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it read again.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, December 21, 1881:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due the citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof, report:

Prior to 1863, the Sisseton, Wahpaton, Medawakanton, and Wahpakoota bands of the Dakota or Sioux Indians occupied extensive reservations in the State of Minnesota.

In August, 1862, said bands of Indians massacred a large number of men, women, and children in the State of Minnesota, and destroyed and damaged a large amount of property.

At the time of this outbreak by the Sioux there was, under various treaties theretofore made and entered into between the United States and these bands of Sioux Indians, a large amount of money owing by the United States to said bands of Indians.

Congress, by act of February 16, 1863, entitled "An act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians," (Stat., vol. 12, pp. 652, &c.,) abrogated and annulled all treaties then existing with said bands of Sioux, so far as the same imposed any future obligation on the United States, and all lands and rights of occupancy within the State of Minnesota, and all annuities and claims, or any of them, due the Indians were forfeited.

At the time of the passage of this act the sum of $5,631,900 was owing by the United States to said bands of Sioux Indians; all the treaties pursuant to which this large sum of money was due and owing to said Indians were abrogated and annulled absolutely by said act of Congress passed February 16, 1863, and said sum was forfeited to the United States. All lands and rights of occupancy belonging to said Indians in Minnesota were, by the same act of Congress, also forfeited to the United States. Said act authorized the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three commissioners, who should ascertain and determine the value of all property destroyed or damaged by said Indians during such outbreak, or by the troops of the United States in suppressing the same.

There has been appropriated by Congress, in payment of claims determined pursuant to said act, the sum of $1,170,374. All claims for damages under said act had to be presented within two years from its passage.

The sum of $671,000 has also been appropriated by Congress for the removal of said Indians, and for subsisting them in their new homes.

By act of Congress, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to discharge certain obligations of the United States to the creditors of the Upper and Lower bands of Sioux Indians," approved May 16, 1874, (Statutes, 18, page 47,) the sum of $70,000 was appropriated for payment to the creditors of said Indians arising under the treaty of June 19, 1858.

Congress also, by an act for the relief of Hans C. Peterson, approved March 3, 1877, (Statutes, 19, page 549,) appropriated the sum of $2,283.92. This was for damages and injuries to Peterson's property done by the Indians during the said Sioux outbreak.

It appears by a letter from Hon. E. M. Marble, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, addressed to Hon. ANGUS CAMERON, a member of the Senate Committee on Claims, under date of February 5, 1881, that no other or further sums have been appropriated for the benefit of said Sioux Indians which are properly chargeable to the said confiscated funds and annuities.

As already stated, the aggregate amount of the said confiscated funds and annuities was $5,631,900.

The aggregate amount of the sums appropriated by the United States for the benefit of said Indians, as hereinbefore shown, is $1,913,657.92. The difference between these two sums, namely, $3,718,242.08, is the balance of said confiscated funds and annuities now remaining in the Treasury of the United States.

At the time of the said Sioux outbreak, the persons for whom this bill proposes to make provision were in business as Indian traders on the reservation occupied by said Indians. These traders were all duly licensed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to trade with the Indians. The most of the traders had been engaged in trading with the said Indians for quite a number of years.

The ordinary course of business was this, that is to say: the traders sold and delivered to the Indians upon credit such goods and commodities as they desired to purchase, with the agreement that the aggregate amount of the indebtedness thereby created would be paid by the Indians to the traders out of the first annuities thereafter paid to them by the United States. This course of business was known to the resident Indian agents and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and approved by them respectively.

At the time of the outbreak the Indians were indebted to the traders in the sum of about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, no part of which sum has been paid. No claim can be paid under this bill until the amount thereof is ascertained and settled by the Secretary of the Interior.

Some of the traders presented their claims for settlement to the commission appointed under the act of February 16, 1863; but the commission held that it had jurisdiction only of claims arising on account of "depredations and injuries" by said Indians, and that the claims of traders were not technically for "depredations or injuries" done by the Indians; and pursuant to this decision all the traders' claims were thrown out and not considered at all by the commission.

These Indians for a number of years prior to 1863 had been paid their annual annuities about the last of June or the first of July of each year, at the Yellow Medicine and Red Wood agencies.

About the last of June, 1863, the Upper or Northern bands of Sioux, to the number of about three thousand five hundred, assembled at Yellow Medicine agency, and the Southern or Lower bands, to the number of about three thousand, at Red Wood agency, for the purpose of receiving their annual payments, but the money to make such payments was not received by the agent until after the outbreak, and the payments were never made.

The Indians remained at these agencies until the outbreak occurred. They had no means of subsistence, and the provisions and supplies belonging to the Government were soon exhausted.

The Indians, while thus waiting for the payment of their annuities, were very ugly. The traders hesitated to furnish them with any more supplies on credit, but the Indians threatened to break into the warehouses and to help themselves. They did break into one warehouse and appropriated its contents. The Indian agents at the Yellow Medicine and Red Wood agencies were, from day to day, expecting to receive money to pay the annuities, and they assured the traders that their claims against the Indians would then be paid.

The traders subsisted the Indians for about six weeks prior to the outbreak. The Indians had no means of paying for such subsistence, and, consequently, it was furnished on credit, and hence the large sum due the traders at the time of the outbreak.

This credit was given with the knowledge and by direction of the Indian agent, and in many instances at his request.

Thomas J. Galbraith was the United States Indian agent for the Sioux Indians in 1862, and was stationed at the Upper or Yellow Medicine Sioux agency prior to and at the time of the outbreak.

Mr. Galbraith, in his affidavit filed with your committee, states as follows, namely:

"That to alleviate the sufferings of the Indians, and preserve order and prevent an outbreak and general disturbance on the frontier, and in the belief that the money to pay the annuities would arrive in time to enable him and the Indians to meet all obligations incurred thereby, he did recommend and advise all the traders having food and supplies in that country to furnish the said Indians all they could spare, without reference to the accounts of individual Indians or of particular bands. And that pursuant to such recommendation and request from him, as United States Indian agent, many of said traders, if not all, did furnish said Indians flour, meat, sugar, coffee, clothing, and other supplies, the amount and value of which are not accurately known to this deponent, but in large quantities."

William H. Shelley, of Saint Paul, Minnesota, who was a clerk for Indian Agent Galbraith, at the Yellow Medicine agency, at the time of the outbreak, in his affidavit states that, to his knowledge, the traders furnished supplies to the Indians by the direction of Galbraith, with the understanding that payment therefor would be made as soon as the annuities were paid.

The outbreak would probably have taken place sooner than it did if the Indians had not been supplied by the traders.

Under the state of facts herein set forth the committee are of the opinion that said traders ought to be paid out of said confiscated annuities now in the Treasury of the United States, amounting, as already stated, to $3,718,242.08. And the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill seems to involve an appropriation of $120,000, to begin with, out of the Treasury, and involves a very long question of the United States coming in as trustee or guarantor, or whatever it may be, to pay up the contract debts of Indians. I think it too important to be considered under the five-minute rule. What I wish to say about it, in view of the former statute before me which is quite long, I cannot say in five minutes. I think the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived and proceedings under the Anthony rule are suspended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the time for the special order has come and this bill may come up to-morrow, perhaps in the mean time Senators can look into it, and therefore I withdraw the objection for the moment so that it may stand as the regular order for to-morrow morning.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am obliged to the Senator from Vermont for doing that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will come up in the morning under the Anthony rule.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This bill was introduced in the last Congress by one of the Senators from Minnesota, I think Mr. WINDOM; it was referred to the Committee on Claims and by that committee it was assigned to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] as a sub-committee. He had many other claims assigned to him and it remained in his hands for a long time. When he came to examine the bill he was of opinion that it ought to have gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but in view of the fact that it had remained in the hands of the Committee on Claims for a long time, nearly a year, I think, and inasmuch as the Senate by its order had referred it to that committee, the committee concluded to examine it. The Senator from Tennessee was so pressed for want of time that he was not able to examine it. He was excused from the further consideration of the bill and the committee assigned it to me as a sub-committee. I examined it and reported it favorably from that committee. It was introduced again during the present session and referred to the Committee on Claims. It was assigned by that committee to me a second time for examination. I examined it and again reported it. The same bill during the present session was introduced in the House of Representatives. There it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it has been reported favorably from the House Committee on Indian Affairs by Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont, who takes an interest in this bill, to the House report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I take an interest in the bill only as it concerns the public.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I meant that the Senator took an interest in this bill so far as it affects the public interests; and for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Vermont to become familiar with the merits of the bill, I call his attention to House Report No. 406, made on the 14th of February, last month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over and will be first in order to-morrow under the Anthony rule. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. GROVER. Mr. President——

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to ask leave of the Senator from Oregon and of the Senate also to take up a bill that will not consume time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand. I ask of that Senator the privilege of calling up a bill at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That cannot be done now; it would not be fair.

Mr. GROVER. As a personal matter I have no objection; but I will abide by the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There will probably be no opposition to the bill suggested by my colleague. It is to correct an omission in a bill passed at the last Congress in relation to the sale of land belonging to the Otoes, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas. The Indians have already been removed by the Government from this reservation, and the Secretary of the Interior upon examining the bill——

Mr. McMILLAN. I think we had better consider this bill to-morrow.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like, then, to give notice that to-morrow my colleague will move the consideration of this bill. There will be no opposition to it from any source, not even the Indian Committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The bill, as stated by my colleague, is to amend a law of last year. The Indians are ready to go or have gone, most of them, and if we do not pass the bill now they will lose probably the interest for a long time on the money, and it will keep out of market a great deal of land the coming year. It is an important bill, to which there is no objection by the Department, and I give notice, if objection is made to having it come up this morning, that to-morrow I shall ask leave of the Senate to get it up at this hour, if I cannot get time in the morning hour to call it up.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. GROVER. Mr. President, in discussing the bill now before the Senate, I do not deem it necessary to enter upon any detailed statements of the evils of Chinese immigration to this country. Debates heretofore had in this Chamber upon this subject have sufficiently developed the facts lying at the foundation of the opposition manifested by the people of the Pacific States and Territories to the influx of Chinese among them. Suffice it to say, that it is the common feeling there that this class of immigration is seriously hurtful to their present development as a prominent part of the American Union. It is hurtful to the moral foundations of society. It is hurtful to the success of American industries. It is hurtful to the progress of our infant settlements, inasmuch as it supplants a large class of European and American labor, which is the chief reliance for peopling the new States.

The question of encouragement or restraint of Chinese immigration presents a deeper problem than that of mere effect upon our present well-being. The abiding characteristics of the Chinese as a people are so variant from our own, and so opposed to the purposes of our civilization, that the encouragement or restriction of this class of immigration presents the alternative of choosing for the Pacific States and Territories between the institutions of America and the institutions of China. The Pacific slope presents the only unoccupied region in the world whose soil and climate are calculated to attract Chinese migration now open to their occupancy. The Empire of China with her 400,000,000 of human beings and more, embracing one-third of the population of the globe, hangs like a threatening cloud over the virgin States of the Pacific.

The State which I have the honor in part to represent has from the beginning occupied a positive and leading position upon this question. In her constitution she provided that the Legislature should have the authority to prohibit the immigration of all persons not qualified to become citizens of the United States. This clause had special reference to the Chinese. The constitution of that State also provided, section 8, article 15, that—

> No Chinaman, not a resident of the State at the adoption of this constitution, shall ever hold any real estate, or mining claim, or work any mining claim therein.

The Burlingame treaty overrode these carefully considered provisions and opened our ports to the incursions of an unwelcome population. In making a canvass as a candidate for the executive chair of the State, in 1870, I took occasion to present this question anew to the people of Oregon. They returned no uncertain voice upon this subject.

At the meeting of the Legislative Assembly of that year, as governor, I addressed that body as follows:

> At this juncture of our advancement, a vital question presents itself for determination. Our State is sparsely peopled. It is capable of supporting a dense population. We are about to reach out and take by the hand thousands who will come and make their homes among us.
>
> Shall we look eastward to the older States and to Europe, or shall we look westward to Asia? Shall the Caucasian or shall the Mongolian be invited to be colaborers with us in building up the State? Labor has been and will continue to be the capital of the immigrant. To European immigration America has heretofore offered higher wages and more abundant means of support than the home country. Labor, therefore, both skilled and unskilled, has flown to us from Europe, constantly swelling our ranks and enriching the country with its industry and genius. To this source our nation has owed the wonderful impetus of our progress in wealth and numbers.
> In receiving this population we have not ceased to be a homogeneous people, for they have been of the stock whence were derived the first American colonies. They have been bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. Their labor has become represented in lands and houses, herds and flocks, orchards and vineyards, mills and merchandise, all with us and of us.
> Their property has borne its equal burden of taxation, and they have shared our perils and hardships in war and our responsibilities in peace. They speak our language and, respecting and cherishing the principles of our Government, they mingle with us congenially in all our institutions, their children are educated with ours, and both are reared together to be one people.
> We can therefore hail the coming of this class of immigration in common with that from our older States, and welcome them among us with favor and satisfaction as brothers.
>
> But what of the Mongolian?
>
> An acquaintance of twenty years with the Chinese upon the Pacific coast enables us to define his traits and qualifications with sufficient certainty.
>
> He is unacquainted with our language, or with any language having elements common with ours. He is unaccustomed to our modes of thought, either in a social, moral, or religious point of view. He is incapable of assimilating himself to our habits of life, and even his education is a discipline, the reverse of our forms of reason and action, both public and private.
>
> He is uninfluenced by our examples and observances; our courts even can administer no oath which will bind his conscience. He is a pagan in his religion, and an absolutist in his ideas of government.
>
> He comes with no family, but his associations are with harlots of his own race. While living here he is subject to laws inscrutable to us, and when dead his body is returned to the land from whence he came. He respects neither our Government nor our soil. There is not a single tie of common brotherhood between us and him; although we admit a common humanity, he denies even this.
>
> These features of his character are ingrained in his being, and are established as unchangeable by a history of four thousand years.
>
> His coming among us is not from love or even respect for our institutions; it is solely for gain. But his gains are not that thrift which attaches itself to the country, becoming visible and taxable property, bearing its proportion of the burdens of Government, but they are the results of delving in mines or serving for wages, all of which are hoarded and sent away to China. The ruined village and the deserted plain are places where he has wrought the most.
>
> The money which he has earned is represented nowhere in the fixed property of the country. China has been made richer, and America has been made poorer by his presence.
>
> Can we build up our State based upon the immigration of the Asiatic? The common answer is that we cannot; for American and European labor will never consent to contest the field with Chinese labor; and as soon as it is understood that the Mongolian is to be encouraged here, the European will cease to come. Which will we have, the wealth, the intellect, the virtues, the accumulations, and the association of our kinsmen, or the vices of the pagan, and the absorbing and leeching process of his work among us? I need not answer. Recent demonstrations of the people fully respond to these inquiries.
>
> Whenever the Chinese have been permitted to go abroad they seem still to have been under control of the home government to the extent, at least, that their earnings have been returned to their native land. * * *
>
> China aggregates a population greater than that of all Europe and the United States combined. She hangs like a portentous cloud over our political horizon. Her people may swarm upon us like locusts. Their coming will unhinge labor, derange industry, demoralize the country, and by claiming and receiving the ballot may upturn our system of government altogether; for the most serious apprehension from the present policy of the General Government to enfranchise all inferior and servile races, and to encourage their immigration to the United States, is that the ballot system may become despicable. This view alarms those who revere our institutions, and who believe that intelligence, virtue, and honor constitute the only safe basis of a free government.
> I regard it, therefore, to be of the gravest consequence that the late treaty with China and the policy on which it is based receive our earnest and vigorous protest.

Mr. President, this was the presentation of this subject made to the Legislative Assembly of Oregon nearly twelve years ago, and the first public announcement ever made to a legislative body in this country in relation to this great problem. The Legislative Assembly of that State then adopted a memorial to Congress, praying that steps be taken for the abrogation of the Burlingame treaty, which was the first time that this subject was brought to the attention of the General Government. From that day to this the people whom I have the honor in part to represent, have been constant and persistent in their demand for the restriction of Chinese immigration. There has been no change nor variableness in their sentiments in this respect. The greater the experience of our citizens of all classes with the increasing numbers from China the more confirmed they have become in their first position.

The Burlingame treaty has been abrogated in respect of the right of this Government to restrain this class of immigration, and a new treaty has been concluded which permits this Government, without violence to any plighted faith, to exercise its own original power in restraining such class of foreigners as it deems proper to restrain from coming to our shores.

But it is said that the fathers founded this Government as an asylum for all nations, and that therefore no action of this character ought to be adopted. In looking into the purposes of the founders of our institutions, it is fair and it is necessary to consider their contemporary acts in order to construe their purposes.

What is there in all their conduct, either public or private, which indicates that they looked to any but European nations as the beneficiaries of their work? If they were intent on missionary labors in building up and sustaining a government devoted to the elevation of the colored races of mankind, why did they not seize upon the opportunity when this continent was occupied, and rightfully occupied, by the red man, to devote their great zeal and enterprise in civilizing and instructing him? Here was a unique and ample field for founding the true Utopia out of the uncontaminated children of nature. But so far from making an effort of this character, our ancestors, with one notable exception, proceeded forthwith to drive out the aborigines from the land with fire and sword, and to occupy it for themselves, and for us their posterity. And in the history of William Penn we only find that he possessed himself of the lands by purchase, and in no manner commingling with the Delawares, and in no manner engaging with them to form a component part of his colony. On the contrary, these noble red men were pushed step by step toward the setting sun, so that now the little remnant of a once wealthy and powerful tribe are found in their narrow limits in the distant Indian Territory, 2,000 miles from their native home. The natives of this continent, in the presence of the declarations of the fathers that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, have retired stubbornly, yet certainly, before the superior race, until now the white man possesses the whole land, with the exception of here and there limited areas reserved to the original owners, and those under the charge of the Government of the United States. A quarter of a million of the original occupants of this country now only remain as sad witnesses that the teeming millions of their progenitors once lived here, and were the rightful proprietors of this magnificent and God-given inheritance.

In the hundred years that have passed since this Government was founded, now held to be the most generous and just of the world, not a single serious effort has been made to incorporate the natives of America into the body of our people as a part of the nation. In the land of their fathers the Indians have been treated as aliens and outcasts.

I do not cite these facts of history now for the purpose of vindicating the rights of Indians, but I call them to mind in order to show what was the meaning of the declaration of our forefathers when they referred in general terms to the rights of all men.

Their conduct toward the aborigines of this country, whom they found in lawful occupancy here when they came, must be construed as fixing a limit to the meaning of their public declarations upon the rights of man. When they declared that all men were created equal, and were endowed with the inalienable right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, they undoubtedly meant all men like themselves, and in like manner joined in the bonds of civil society. And when they dedicated this country to be an asylum for the oppressed of all nations they undoubtedly meant all nations whence they came, peoples of character and conditions similar to their own.

This will appear the more clearly when we consider the treatment of the African by the very men who founded our Government. They never invited the African here as a voluntary immigrant. They neither endowed him with lands nor the ballot, nor did they grant him the right of citizenship. The black man was transported to these shores by old England and by New England, and sold into slavery, and he was in bonds when our immortal Declaration of Independence was signed. When Jefferson penned the first draft of that instrument he placed among the allegations against the British King the charge that he had been guilty of forcing the slave-trade upon this country. That charge was stricken out, not but what it was true, but because the fathers did not propose to act upon that subject at that time; and they deliberately provided in our present Constitution that this traffic should not be prohibited by Congress before 1808.

On what ground, then, can it now be claimed that the hereditary policy of this Government requires us to open our ports to the admission of all races of mankind without discrimination, against the interest and against the wishes of the great body of the American people? I see none whatever. America has truly been, as she was intended to be, the asylum of the oppressed of all European nations. While we accept and occupy this position as a sacred trust, the obligations of that trust devolve upon us duties deep and lasting. I construe that trust as meaning that we hold our inheritance sacred to our posterity, and of those who are of kin to our forefathers. While we are to treat the poor remnant of the Indian race among us and the African who was forcibly brought here with that justice and humanity becoming to a great people, it is of the gravest importance to the future peace and well-being of this country that we do not voluntarily create other relations with colored foreign peoples which will force upon us complications in our civil and political relations which, in my judgment, are certain to be troublesome to us and unfortunate to them.

The State of Oregon in framing her constitution made, in her bill of rights, the following statement: "We declare that all men, when they form a social compact, are equal in rights." This is the definition which the people of that State gave of the general terms contained in the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal. And I think it fully comports with the action of the founders of this Government.

This construction of the declaration gives proper elasticity to all our public relations, and allows those forming a government to conduct its political affairs and to frame its laws with reference only to the greatest good of the greatest numbers of those who have entered into the social compact, so that if the restraining of the Chinese from coming to our shores be regarded as advisable for the public good, there can be no objection. The question of expediency is the only question. If this is not the proper construction as to us, nations are dissolved and their boundaries are a myth.

Mr. President, the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, now before the Senate, contains some of the provisions of the bill which I had the honor to introduce at the beginning of the present session. It also embraces several of the provisions contained in the bill on the same subject introduced by the junior Senator from California, [Mr. MILLER,] having been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations as a substitute for the last-named bill. But it omits vital provisions contained in both.

Entertaining the belief that this bill as reported will not carry into effect fully our late treaty with China as understood by the Senate upon its ratification and by the people of the Pacific coast, I have proposed an amendment for the purpose of making it correspond with the purpose and effect of the treaty. The amendment which I have proposed at the end of the bill reads as follows:

SEC. 16. The words "Chinese laborers," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to include both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining.

This amendment is proposed in order to relieve the bill from that uncertainty in its construction which will inevitably lead to difficulty and defeat in its execution.

Upon this subject the treaty projet from the foreign office of the Chinese Government contained, among others, the following proposition:

ART. 2. Chinese who may be desirous of proceeding to any other part of the United States for purposes of labor, excepting only the State of California, shall be allowed to go of their own free will and accord. Persons of all other classes, with the exception of actual Chinese laborers, whose immigration into California will be temporarily regulated and limited by the United States, whether proceeding to California as teachers, students, travelers, traders, or artisans, as well as all Chinese laborers now in that State, will be allowed to go and come with entire freedom, and will not be included in the limiting regulations.

This proposed article was not satisfactory to the American commissioners. But they submitted after considerable consultation and consideration a counter-project with the following observations upon the point under discussion:

2. The United States commissioners feel it their duty to insist upon their definition of Chinese laborers, viz: "The words 'Chinese laborers' are herein used to signify all immigration other than that for teaching, trade, travel, study, and curiosity hereinbefore referred to and provided for in existing treaties." They cannot consent that artisans shall be excluded from the class of Chinese laborers, for it is this very competition of skilled labor in the cities where the Chinese labor immigration concentrates which has caused the embarrassment and popular discontent they wish to avoid. But they are willing to adopt an article providing that the classes who are authorized to come and reside in the United States shall bring the servants who are necessary to their convenience.

As a result of the negotiations following these two propositions, the treaty finally concluded and ratified omits the word "artisans" from its text, which upon this point reads as follows:

ART. I. Whenever, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations.

* * * * * * *

ART. II. Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

Here we have in article 1 the excluded classes, and in article 2 the permitted classes. In relation to the construction of these clauses of the treaty, I will quote the language of the commissioners themselves, used in their communication to the Secretary of State, transmitting the treaty for ratification by our Government. The commissioners say:

We desired, as you will see by the précis of the negotiation, to define with more precision exactly what all the negotiators on both sides understood by "Chinese laborers." But the Chinese Government was very unwilling to be more precise than the absolute necessity called for, and they claimed that in Article II they did by exclusion provide that nobody should be entitled to claim the benefit of the general provisions of the Burlingame treaty but those who went to the United States for purposes of teaching, study, mercantile transactions, travel, or curiosity. We have no doubt that an act of Congress excluding all but these classes, using the words of the treaty, would be fully warranted by its provisions, and as this was a clear and sufficient modification of the sixth article of the Burlingame treaty we did not feel authorized to risk such a concession by insisting upon language which would really mean no more, and which was entirely unacceptable to the Chinese commissioners.

There is not in the treaty any language which modifies this concession, and there was not, as we think, the slightest intention on the part of the Chinese commissioners to diminish the full force of the discretion given to the United States.

The bill (S. No. 21) which I had the honor to introduce upon this subject was based as to its terms of exclusion upon the limitations of the treaty itself as suggested by the commissioners. But as the terms of this limitation have not met with the approbation of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who have had the same under consideration, I now seek the same result by the amendment here proposed defining the words "Chinese laborers." If the narrowest meaning of the word laborers shall be adopted by those administering the law, infinite difficulties will arise and great injury to the country will result. One of the leading purposes of the agitation against the Chinese in the Pacific States and Territories is to restrain the coming among us of skilled laborers and miners who supersede and consequently drive out American and European skilled labor.

That the proposed amendment brings the bill within the full meaning of the treaty as understood by our Government, I quote also the language of the Secretary of State, under date January 10, 1881, transmitting the treaty to the President to be laid before the Senate. The Secretary said:

> The treaty submitted settles the questions raised between the two countries in a manner alike honorable and satisfactory to both. While preserving to the subjects of China engaged in mercantile pursuits, in study, in teaching, or in travel for curiosity, the right of free intercourse with this country, the Chinese government has recognized in the Government of the United States the right to regulate, limit, and suspend the introduction into its territory of Chinese labor whenever, in its discretion, such introduction shall threaten the good order of any locality or endanger any interests of society.

The terms used by the Secretary of State are sufficiently broad to include Chinese labor of every class. And such was undoubtedly a proper construction of the treaty in view of the fact that special classes were in it enumerated as being permitted to come among us. That the American people have demanded the modification of the Burlingame treaty to the intent and effect as I have claimed its construction to be, I will quote from the Democratic platform adopted by the national Democratic convention held at Cincinnati in June, 1880, as follows:

> The Democrats of the United States in convention assembled declare.
> * * * * * * * * *
> 11. Amendment of the Burlingame treaty: no more Chinese immigration, except for travel, education, and foreign commerce, and that even carefully guarded.

The Republican convention held at Chicago in the same year adopted a resolution upon this subject intended to be as of like import.

If this body shall do less than what has been expected of us by the people in effectuating the purposes of this treaty, our work here will have to be done again. There is no uncertain voice from the country wherever this subject is understood. And as time advances, and the question becomes more developed, there will be a still stronger voice for firm and certain action here. It will be an injustice to Congress if this measure is permitted to be matured without rendering its terms absolutely definite and certain in their meaning, so that every citizen can read and understand it, and every officer of the Government, whose duty it shall be to assist in its execution, shall have well-defined authority for every step that he shall take in the execution of his public trust.

Mr. President, it has been said that governments grow and are not made. The growth of this Government is from seeds of European origin planted in a more productive soil. The growth has therefore been more thrifty. Its roots have penetrated deeper, its trunk has grown larger, and its branches have spread broader than the parent stock. And yet American institutions are in their infancy. With a continent as a pedestal, we can build here such a nation, developed in agriculture, in manufactures, in the arts and sciences, and in the general culture and elevation of the human character, as has not been witnessed in the world. To do this we must guard and cherish the sacred trust of the original plant. As well might you hope to gather grapes from thorns or figs from thistles as to expect to rear a great nation and gather the fruits of a high civilization by the aggregation of inferior races of men.

Had the first colonists of this country come from Asia rather than from Europe, the world would look in vain for the young colossus of nations which it now witnesses. It would look in vain for Plymouth Rock and Jamestown and the germs of the other noble colonies which assembled with one accord around the altar of civil and religious liberty in America and sacrificed at the shrine of real progress in human government and in human enterprise. But in their place would have been seen a different spectacle. In place of the temple to the true God would be the houses of heathen deities. In place of the august public assembly, convened at the behest of the people for making laws for their own government, the private consultation of emperors and autocrats would promulgate their edicts for the rule of a submissive populace. Instead of the Briarean arms and bands of steel of our gigantic railway system traversing the entire continent, sustaining the commerce and travel of a mighty people, the world would witness a groveling throng of slowly moving human beings, plodding their footpaths with the weight of their labor's product upon their backs.

I might run the parallel from the happy and virtuous hearthstone circle through all the grades of our society and accomplishments to this the nation's Capitol, and I might picture the same contrast, but I desist. It is not necessary.

We move this measure to preserve America as she is, and to make the shadow of her mighty form, which approaches us from the future, a certain reality as the coming power of the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to know what has become of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which the Senator from Oregon gave notice that he would offer will be read.

Mr. FARLEY. The first matter is the amendment reported by the committee; next, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon; and next, the amendment offered by myself.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to have them reported.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the committee reported the bill in a new draft as a substitute, and that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon and also the one which is to be offered by the Senator from California are amendments to perfect the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands from the Secretary that the amendment reported by the committee is in the nature of a substitute for the bill; and the Chair is further informed by the Secretary that the amendments proposed, or of which notice has been given that they would be proposed, are additional sections or provisions, and do not seek to modify the text of the substitute reported by the committee. The Secretary will, for the information of the Senate, report the amendments referred to.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. FARLEY is to add as a new section:

> SEC. 16. That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment of the Senator from California. The Secretary will now report the amendment of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER] gave notice.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is to add as a new section:

> SEC. —. That the words "Chinese laborers," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President, I had not intended to take up the time of the Senate in the discussion of this bill, believing as I honestly did believe and do yet that the Senate is prepared to act upon it without further discussion. My colleague who opened the debate has elaborately presented the facts connected with the provisions of this measure. I rise simply for the purpose of answering or attempting to answer some of the points made by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his speech delivered yesterday, which I have not had an opportunity of examining for the reason that it does not appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning, as I supposed it would have appeared.

That honorable Senator took the position that this was an enforced treaty from unwilling China. I believe that was about his language with reference to the treaty under which this legislation is proposed. Now, sir, I ask the honorable Senator to point out a single incident or a single fact from which he could have arrived at such a conclusion. The treaty was one entered into between our Government and the Chinese Government. There is no evidence that it was enforced on China, or that the Chinese people were unwilling to make the treaty which they did make. In that treaty they conceded to this Government the right to legislate upon this subject. Therefore we are not oppressing those people in any way by this proposed legislation; we are simply doing that which the treaty itself provides we may do. How the honorable Senator could have come to the conclusion that this was an enforced treaty I am at a loss to discover. The Chinese Government seemed to be willing that the American Government, if it was thought to be for the interest of this Government, should legislate on this subject, and it is provided in the treaty that the very provisions of this bill may be carried into effect.

But the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts puts his opposition to the bill upon higher ground, upon the broad proposition that it is a violation of the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence and in the bills of rights of the various constitutions in the United States. I am not going into that part of his argument except simply to remark that any government may by treaty stipulation with us agree that their people may come to this country or that our people may go to theirs upon certain conditions, as those conditions are set out in the treaty between China and this Government.

The honorable Senator in his remarks yesterday referred to the testimony that had been taken before a Congressional committee appointed for the purpose of examining into this Chinese question. That committee was appointed and acted in 1876, and took testimony in the State of California, where a number of distinguished gentlemen of that State were examined as witnesses as to the effects of Chinese immigration upon American institutions and upon the interests of the laboring classes of the Pacific coast, where the Chinese had most congregated. The late Senator Morton was chairman of that committee. The honorable and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts saw proper to quote some remarks in the report made by Senator Morton.

I also quote from remarks made by Senator Morton in his report, which was a minority report from that committee. I quote his language for the purpose of showing that notwithstanding that distinguished Senator seemed to side with the Chinese in reference to this question, yet he came to this conclusion, in his report he makes this remark, to which I ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts:

But before entering upon the discussion of any other principles, I may be permitted to observe that, in my judgment, the Chinese cannot be protected in the Pacific States while remaining in their alien condition. Without representation in the Legislature or Congress, without a voice in the selection of officers, and surrounded by fierce and, in many respects, unscrupulous enemies, the law will be found insufficient to screen them from persecution. Complete protection can be given them only by allowing them to become citizens and acquire the right of suffrage, when their votes would become important in elections, and their persecutions, in great part, converted into kindly solicitation.

These were the views expressed by that distinguished gentleman in his report after an examination of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. He took the ground then that these people could not be protected from persecution, from violence, from outrage, except by extending to them the rights of citizenship, by giving them the right of suffrage, permitting them to vote at elections, and then their influence would be felt in the country and would have the effect of protecting them as other people in the country were protected. Now I ask the honorable Senator from Massachusetts—I put the question broadly and squarely to him—if he would be in favor to-day of permitting the Chinese to exercise the elective franchise in this country.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from California will pardon me. I was engaged accidentally in conversation.

Mr. FARLEY. Did the Senator hear my question?

Mr. HOAR. I did not hear the question.

Mr. FARLEY. I read from the report of Senator Morton. I am sorry the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts was engaged, because I wanted an answer to my question. Governor Morton, in his report as chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the question, made use of this remark—for the benefit of the Senator I will read it again, as it is short:

But before entering upon the discussion of any other principles, I may be permitted to observe that, in my judgment, the Chinese cannot be protected in the Pacific States while remaining in their alien condition. Without representation in the Legislature or Congress, without a voice in the selection of officers, and surrounded by fierce and, in many respects, unscrupulous enemies, the law will be found insufficient to screen them from persecution. Complete protection can be given them only by allowing them to become citizens and acquire the right of suffrage, when their votes would become important in elections, and their persecutions, in great part, converted into kindly solicitation.

Such was the language of Senator Morton in that celebrated report from which the Senator yesterday quoted. I now put the question to the honorable Senator: Does he indorse that sentiment expressed by Senator Morton?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it strikes me that is rather an unusual method of conducting debate in this body.

Mr. FARLEY. The Senator need not answer the question unless he desires to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I was perfectly aware of that when I rose. It strikes me that it is rather an unusual method of conducting debate in this body. I made certain points in regard to this question yesterday, as well as I could, and for the Senator who replies to me to undertake to call me to stand before the Senate to answer his catechism, to state on certain other questions, on which I did not touch, what my opinions are, is rather unusual; but I will answer the Senator's question if he will first answer mine. Who are the fierce and unscrupulous enemies against whom it has been impossible to protect this race to whom Senator Morton referred?

Mr. FARLEY. A very large portion of the class to whom, I suppose, Senator Morton referred were persons who had been driven from employment by the influx of this population; persons who were unable to earn a livelihood for themselves and their families; persons who had become exasperated over what they believed to be a trampling upon their rights as common laborers. I suppose Senator Morton referred to that class.

Mr. HOAR. Does not Senator Morton distinctly affirm in his report, is it not shown by the tables, that the wages of white laborers had risen, and does he not say that the influx of these people into this country was a benefit to the white laborer of California and an increase of her wealth?

Mr. FARLEY. Who said so?

Mr. HOAR. Did not Senator Morton say so in his report?

Mr. FARLEY. I do not know whether he said so or not.

Mr. HOAR. I believe the Senator will find that he said so there. Now I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. FARLEY. I will try to answer yours, also.

Mr. HOAR. I do indorse that sentiment.

Mr. FARLEY. Then I understand the Senator from Massachusetts takes the ground (and that is one of the reasons I suppose why he opposes this bill) that he is in favor of the naturalization of Chinese; that he is in favor of giving to them the right of suffrage, permitting them to vote at the polls and to be as other persons who are citizens of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. FARLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I am in favor of admitting to the privileges of American citizenship, under proper limitations in case of foreigners who have been educated in attachment to other governments, every human being—white, black, red, yellow, copper-colored, or whatever color nature may have seen fit to use in painting men's skins—having first ascertained that they have abandoned all allegiance to other governments; that they are fit in character, in intelligence, in qualities that make good citizens, and are attached to our Government. I would have that ascertained by an inquiry into the character of the individual applicant, and not by looking at the color of his skin. I should be quite as ready to admit to American citizenship Yung-Wing, to whom they gave the degree of Doctor of Laws at Yale College last year, or the learned and admirable gentleman who died at Cambridge last week, to the sorrow of that community, as I should the persons whom Senator Morton described as fierce and unscrupulous ruffians.

Mr. FARLEY. He did not use the word "ruffian."

Mr. HOAR. I believe he did not. I will add that word.

Mr. FARLEY. You can add it. I have no doubt the people of California, certainly those who are opposed to Chinese, will be very thankful indeed to the Senator from Massachusetts for adding that addendum to Mr. Morton's report.

Mr. HOAR. I only applied that term to the men who with crime and cruelty treat in a ruffianly way unoffending human beings without provocation. If there are any such, wherever they live, I think the term I used would put into language their description. I do not apply it to the people of California.

Mr. FARLEY. The Legislature of California provided that the question of the further immigration of Chinese to that coast, or to this country, should be submitted to the vote of the people of that State. At an election held under the forms of law and in accordance with the constitution of the State, the question was submitted, and out of 161,000 or 162,000 votes cast, 154,000 pronounced against the further immigration of Chinese, and 800 voted in favor of further Chinese immigration. A unanimity of opinion upon this question was so fully demonstrated by that vote that there can be no question as to the views or sentiments of the people of that State. The people of the State of California as a people have protected Chinese from being violently treated in that country, except by the rough portion of the people, who sometimes invade other societies, even in the honorable Senator's own State.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will be quite sure that I do the people of his State that justice. I referred only to the class I described.

Mr. FARLEY. I want to say in addition that one of the reasons why this legislation is proposed is to protect the laboring classes of the Pacific States from being driven out of employment. You may go to-day into the city of San Francisco and you will find honest girls who have worked in factories, in hotels, in the various laundries, and other employments in which women do work, driven from their employment and their places filled by this class of people that we are attempting now to exclude from our shores.

We do not propose under the terms of the bill to affect the rights of those who are already here. We do not propose to drive Chinamen from this country who have come here under the stipulations of a treaty. We propose that those who have come here under the law, under the terms of a treaty made between the two Governments in 1868, shall be protected; but so far as Chinamen who shall come here after the passage of this law are concerned, we propose that they shall come under the provision of this act, and thereby stop the further immigration if possible.

I admit that it is a difficult law to frame. I admit that many persons believe that this measure will be ineffectual for that purpose; but at the same time there is such a unanimity of sentiment in favor of some legislation that if the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, who I believe is about the only Senator on the floor who is disposed to openly fight this question, should visit that country and see what I believe he would see, almost desolation in many localities in the State by reason of this immigration, he would join with the representatives of the Pacific coast in doing something to prohibit this incubus that is hanging over that country.

Mr. HOAR. As the Senator from California propounded a question to me, will he allow me, in connection with that question, to propound one to him?

Mr. FARLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I have here a statement contained in the Congregationalist, one of the most eminent journals of one of the leading organizations in this country, known as the Orthodox Congregationalists. The statement is in a speech made in my own city of Worcester last November by Rev. Lysander Dickerman, who I understand to be a clergyman of great distinction from the fact that he was invited to address a meeting of the American Missionary Association, which implies the distinction and character of the person. Speaking of the Chinese, and the reason why they do not become naturalized, he said:

It takes two to assimilate. Not infrequently when a vessel from Hong-Kong is landing its cargo of Chinamen on the wharves of San Francisco, they are met with jeers and hoots and stones and brickbats. And, not so far back but what men still living remember it, they have been stoned all the way from the wharf to Chinatown, until their scalps hung down the sides of their heads, the blood on the streets showed the track which they pursued, and they were taken from the carriages unconscious and helpless. What a wonder that they do not "assimilate"—wretched delegates of this low, degraded, submerging civilization! What a wonder that they do not send home for their wives and their children, that they, too, may come and enjoy the blessings of this "higher civilization of the Pacific coast!" I do not blame them for demanding that their bones be sent home when they die.

He goes on to say, after speaking of the famine in China:

It is the voice of 10,000,000 foreigners warning us of dangers from 105,000,000 other foreigners; it is the men whom I have heard over and over again on the sand-lots, at the end of every impassioned paragraph, with a breeziness worthy of a Western cyclone, exclaiming: "Immiriky for Immirikans, be jabers!"

Mr. MILLER, of California, rose.

Mr. FARLEY. I did not understand the question. My colleague seems to have understood the question.

Mr. HOAR. I want to know whether that is correct?

Mr. FARLEY. I do not think it is. I deny that it is so.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I want to ask the Senator who is the author of that blood-thirsty story?

Mr. HOAR. Rev. Lysander Dickerman, in an address made before the American Missionary Association.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At what date?

Mr. HOAR. It is in the Congregationalist of December 21, 1881. I wish to say that this American Missionary Association is the one body in this country which, in my opinion, is accomplishing more, by reason of the vast work it is doing for Christian education throughout the country, and especially in the South, than any other body in the country. It is an association composed of all the evangelical bodies of the country, so called, and they raise yearly by voluntary contributions a sum equivalent to the interest of over $9,000,000. The members of that association, by their charity and their liberality, form a perpetual and permanent educational fund, contributed——

Mr. FARLEY. I did not yield for the purpose of permitting the Senator to make an additional speech.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator seemed to question the respectability of the source.

Mr. FARLEY. I did not question the respectability; I said I did not believe it was true.

The Senator spoke about citizenship. In the State the honorable Senator from Massachusetts represents the courts have admitted Chinese to citizenship. I do not know whether they are permitted to vote in that State or not. I suppose if they are tax-payers and can read the Constitution of the United States in the English language, they would be allowed to exercise the right of suffrage. I know that the circuit court in my State has denied that Chinese were entitled to be admitted to citizenship. The senior Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] during a debate which took place in this body in 1879, said in a colloquy carried on between that Senator and Senator Blaine and Senator Sargent, my immediate predecessor, that Chinese were admitted by the courts of Massachusetts to citizenship. By that authority I say they are so admitted. I submit the question, if the Chinese can be admitted to citizenship in this country, whether the elective franchise would not at once be conferred upon them? In many of the States, as soon as they would become citizens they would be entitled to vote without any restriction. In the State of Massachusetts, where they have admitted them, there are certain restrictions as to foreigners voting who cannot read the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. Foreigners no more than natives. There is one law for all.

Mr. FARLEY. This question is not by any means one that is agitated in our State by the class referred to by the distinguished Senator [Mr. HOAR] as the persecutors, the ruffians, as he was disposed to term some of them. It is the entire population of the country. The merchants, the mechanics, the business men throughout the State, with a unanimity unprecedented, oppose the further immigration of these people. It is true there are some capitalists, some gentlemen engaged in large enterprises, who can employ Chinese at a much lower rate than they can employ American or white laborers; and therefore those men prefer having what they call "cheap labor;" but the masses of the people, the agriculturists, the miners, all the industrial interests in the State have proclaimed in unmistakable terms their voice, not to be misunderstood, that the immigration of these people is a detriment to the best interests of the populations of California, of Oregon, and of Nevada.

The honorable Senator [Mr. HOAR] yesterday referred to a portion of the report of Senator Morton, in which he said that in passing over the State of California he saw so many uncultivated acres of land. What was the cause of that? I will answer the honorable Senator. The cause is that this class of immigration, these laborers, have prevented white immigrants from seeking a home in California. They have driven from employment the every-day laborer. They have provoked riot, I admit. They have driven, as I said a few moments ago, the laboring classes from their employment. They have driven women from the every-day employment by which they could earn a livelihood for themselves and families. Yet I find only the Senator from Massachusetts advocating the free immigration of this class of people to this country without limitation.

Why, sir, they are within eighteen or twenty days' sail of the city of San Francisco. A population which is understood to be over 400,000,000 can come to the State of California, to the State of Oregon, and to the State of Nevada, and when there they can wend their way across the continent even into Massachusetts, and there create difficulty and trouble with the laboring classes. Not long ago (I have forgotten the number of years) a very large number of Chinamen did think of going over to the land of steady habits, to the puritanical State, as it is sometimes termed; I call it the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts. They moved into the city of Lynn and engaged in employment there. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] shakes his head. I understand that a colony of Chinamen went to the city of Lynn, in Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator is mistaken in the locality; that is all.

Mr. FARLEY. What was the city, if there was one?

Mr. DAWES. It was not a city, but it was the town of Adams.

Mr. FARLEY. There were some of them in Lynn also. In the town of Adams, then, there was a colony of Chinamen; and as I have understood the history of that colony the troubles there were such that they were soon compelled to leave, and they had to wend their way back to the Pacific coast, where they have remained serenely for years and years, being employed by the men engaged in large enterprises in the country. What drove them from Massachusetts? What was the cause of their leaving the section where such high morals prevail, where there is such a high state of education? Why were they driven back to the West? Why were they not permitted to remain in that good old State?

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. FARLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. The town to which those Chinamen came was a town in which I resided for some years, and I am very familiar with the subject why they came and why they are not there now. They came there, or were brought there by a very extensive manufacturer, and entered into his employment. They continued for six or eight years in his employment, obeying the laws and conforming to the customs of Massachusetts, and making as little trouble and contributing as much to the advancement of the industries of Massachusetts as any equal number of her laboring people. They were very industrious, and learned very quickly every employment that was open to any person in Massachusetts. They came there at low wages. They began from the moment they were there to improve their own condition and to improve the results of their labor for their employer, and to increase their demand for compensation. They continued in this gentleman's employ for six or eight years, until their wages became precisely upon a level with all others, when it ceased to be an object to employ them in preference to others, and of their own accord, one by one, they sought employment elsewhere. Some of them are still in the State of Massachusetts, pursuing other employments from that which they came there to follow; some of them have gone down into the State of North Carolina, and are pursuing the mining business there; some of them have gone back to California, and some of them have gone into other States; some have gone back to China. I saw two of them upon the cars not long since on their way to California, as I have seen many people who have bettered their condition in one place moving to another. After the first few days of their arrival in Massachusetts they never experienced any hostile treatment there. They were not driven out. They were received and protected there according to their merits, and made their own position among men.

Mr. FARLEY. I was about to put a question to the Senator from Massachusetts, but his remarks have perhaps made it unnecessary. I wished to know whether the Chinese had not been slightly persecuted there, but he says no. I will ask him another question. According to the Senator's position and that of his colleague, did not the Chinese show that they were at least equal, if not superior, to Massachusetts laborers who were engaged in every-day labor, if they could command the same rate of wages and thereby bring about a state of things that made it necessary for them to leave the country where they could not be employed profitably? I ask if they were not better laborers than the Massachusetts laborers employed in that business?

Mr. DAWES. I think it might be said of them that when they first came there they showed a quicker apprehension than others who came from other countries, and who had about the same amount of education and experience in labor; but in the time they remained there they came to be about upon a level with others in Massachusetts who had had the same opportunities to learn the arts and the industries to which they applied themselves. They did not leave there because of any ill-treatment or any prejudice against them. They have not all left as yet; but nearly all have. They came there to better their condition. They succeeded, and had an idea that there were employments at other points more attractive and more profitable to them. Like everybody else that ever I saw in the world, they are seeking all the time to better their condition.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the public interest requires that we should proceed to the consideration of executive business, and I so move.

Mr. FARLEY. I had not yielded the floor, except for the purpose of hearing the answer of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon of my friend from California; I did not know he held the floor. I will ask him then to yield the floor so that I may make that motion. I think the public interest requires an executive session.

Mr. FARLEY. With the understanding that the public interest so demands, and with the further understanding that I may conclude my remarks to-morrow, I consent to yield the floor now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, the Senator will have the floor when the consideration of the bill is resumed to-morrow.

Mr. FARLEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 2, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SUSAN MARSHALL MASSIE.

Mr. PHISTER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie, and that it be now taken up and put on its passage. I think no member will object. It is a bill which ought to be passed immediately.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the United States pension agent for paying pensions at Louisville, Kentucky, be, and is hereby, authorized and required to issue to Susan Marshall Massie, of Mason County, Kentucky, a duplicate of his check for $1,466.67, dated June 30, 1881, and payable to the order of said Susan Marshall Massie, after said Massie shall furnish to him sufficient proof of the loss and non-reception by her and non-payment of said original check; and said duplicate shall be paid to her, or order, as if the original was presented.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PHISTER. The general law authorizes the issue of duplicate checks for amounts less than $1,000——

Many MEMBERS. All right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHISTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURT AT WICHITA, KANSAS.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and considered now the bill (H. R. No. 429) to provide for holding a term of the district court of the United States at Wichita, Kansas, and for other purposes. This is a bill affecting the administration of public justice; and as it has been approved unanimously by the Judiciary Committee, I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be one term of the United States district court for the district of Kansas held at Wichita in each year, on the first Monday of September, from and after the passage of this act; but no cause, action, or proceeding shall be tried or considered in the court herein provided for unless by consent of all the parties thereto or order of the court, except as otherwise hereinafter provided. The clerk, marshal, and district attorney for said district of Kansas shall perform the duties pertaining to their offices respectively for said court, and the clerk and marshal shall appoint a deputy to reside and keep their offices at Wichita, who, in the absence of the principals, shall do and perform all the duties appertaining to their said offices respectively. But the city or county authorities shall provide a suitable building, without expense to the United States, in which to hold said court.

SEC. 2. That all that part of the Indian Territory lying north of the Canadian River and east of Texas and the one hundredth meridian not set apart and occupied by the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indian tribes shall, from and after the passage of this act, be annexed to and constitute a part of the United States judicial district of Kansas; and the United States district courts at Wichita and Fort Scott, in the district of Kansas, shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed within the limits of the territory hereby annexed to said district of Kansas against any of the laws of the United States now or that may hereafter be operative therein.

SEC. 3. That all that portion of the Indian Territory not annexed to the district of Kansas by this act, and not set apart and occupied by the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Indian tribes, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be annexed to and constitute a part of the United States judicial district known as the northern district of Texas; and the United States district court at Graham, in said northern district of Texas, shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed within the limits of the territory hereby annexed to said northern district of Texas against any of the laws of the United States now or that may hereafter be operative therein.

SEC. 4. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect in any manner any action or proceeding now pending in the circuit or district court for the western district of Arkansas, nor the execution of any process relating thereto; nor shall anything in this act be construed to give to said district courts of Kansas and Texas, respectively, any greater jurisdiction in that part of said Indian Territory so as aforesaid annexed, respectively, to said district of Kansas and said northern district of Texas than might heretofore have been lawfully exercised therein by the western district of Arkansas; nor shall anything in this act contained be construed to violate or impair in any respect any treaty provision whatever.

Mr. MANNING. I hope this bill will be passed at once.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to the consideration of the bill now. It is too important a bill to be passed in this way.

Mr. MANNING. It has been examined and approved by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist on my objection.

PORTS OF DELIVERY IN MISSOURI.

On motion of Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No 740) to extend the provisions of sections 2990 and 2998, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States to the ports of Kansas City and Saint Joseph, Missouri, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. K. BELDING.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 839) for the relief of H. K. Belding be taken from the Private Calendar and brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us hear the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a question of order. Gentlemen sitting right here in front cannot hear a word that the Clerk reads.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. Business will be suspended until the House is in order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say that this bill has twice passed the House of Representatives in former Congresses, and at this session has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims. I trust there will be no objection to its consideration now. There is a report, which can be read if called for.

Mr. ATKINS. No one, I imagine, except the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] knows what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,566 to H. K. Belding, of Minnesota, the amount due him for carrying the mails of the United States between the years 1858 and 1862.

Mr. ATKINS. I object to the consideration of the bill; and I would like to give my reason for objecting. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

JAMES CARROLL.

Mr. ARMFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4753) granting a pension to James Carroll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

STEAM-PLOW MACHINERY FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. KASSON. By direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I ask leave to report, as a substitute for House bill No. 3562, a bill (H. R. No. 4754) to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco. This substitute consists of but a few lines; and I will take the liberty of asking the House to hear it read, as I think there will be no objection to its immediate passage, and there is special reason for action now.

The substitute was read, as follows:

A bill to admit free of duty certain steam-plow machinery now at the port of San Francisco.

Be it enacted, &c., That all the steam-plow machinery ordered by M. C. Fisher for his own use, prior to the expiration of the time limited by section 7 of the act approved June 6, 1872, and now in the public stores or bonded warehouse at San Francisco, shall be delivered to him free of duty, and subject only to the other charges provided by law.

Mr. KASSON. A single word of explanation. The Ways and Means Committee of the last Congress reported a bill of similar purport to this——

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve the right to object after we understand what the bill is.

Mr. KASSON. And the present bill is reported unanimously. The fact to which I wish to call attention is simply this, that by the act of June 6, 1872, two years were allowed for the importation of certain steam-plow machinery free of duty. There was reclamation of land on a large scale going on in California, and this gentleman ordered a steam-plow and machinery during that period. It arrived after the expiration of the period. It remains subject to duty in consequence of its late arrival. The Legislature of California has memorialized as a matter of public interest to this end. The delegation from California, one of whom is by my side, and who introduced this bill, tells me they have by simple kindness of the customs officer saved the steam-plow and machinery from sale to give Congress time to act. As there is no objection in the committee, and none known elsewhere, why he should not be relieved of what was a misfortune in the machinery arriving too late to avail himself of the previous law, we have recommended he be allowed to take the machinery out subject only to other charges incidental to its storage in warehouse, &c. That is the bill. If there be no objection, I find the delegation from California deem it important it should be acted on this morning.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask the gentleman from Iowa why the committee does not report a general bill for the admission free of duty in the future of steam-plows?

Mr. KASSON. It was proposed as a general bill, but it was found there was objection to its consideration at this moment.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I object to any special bill.

Mr. KASSON. This was introduced because of its exceptional character.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I object to a special bill.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HUTCHINS. I object.

Mr. KASSON. Let it go to the House Calendar, then, and be printed with the accompanying report.

Mr. CARLISLE. That bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole House, as it proposes to remit certain duties on an imported article.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion, on the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky, the bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and it will be so referred, and ordered to be printed, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LOCATION OF MILITARY WARRANTS.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have House bill No. 277, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, which was reported from the Committee on the Public Lands to this House and placed on the House Calendar, transferred from that Calendar to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which it ought to have gone, and that it take its place there as though it had been referred properly at the time, and not to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

STEAM-PLOW FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that unless this is done before the 27th of March it can be of no effect, and therefore I withdraw my objection to the bill reported by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] I sincerely hope, however, that committee will report a general bill admitting all steam-plows free of duty.

Mr. AIKEN. I object.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman's objection comes too late.

Mr. AIKEN. I called out "Mr. Speaker" at once. If the Chair will require members to occupy their seats in the Hall we will have better order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman was too late.

Mr. AIKEN. I object. I rise now to a parliamentary inquiry. If any bills are asked to be presented and put on their passage I object to them, and I wish it understood that I object unless gentlemen rise from their seats and introduce their bills. Those of us who remain in our seats cannot hear what is being done. And a great deal of legislation is being done by members getting in front of the Speaker and having their bill introduced in a surreptitious manner—their voices are not heard, and they are stolen through the House, as it were. If the Speaker will require gentlemen to occupy their seats we can all hear what is going on. I shall object to every bill that is asked to be put upon its passage, unless the member rises in his own seat.

Mr. WASHBURN. I demand the regular order of business.

UTAH CONTESTED-ELECTION REPORTS.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to know whether it is necessary for a special order of the House to have reports of committees printed in excess of the number ordinarily ordered?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask, then, that 2,000 additional copies of the reports in the case of Campbell vs. Cannon be printed, as they are being rapidly called for.

The SPEAKER. A resolution of that kind would have to be introduced and referred to the Committee on Printing under the law where the expenditure is of a certain sum.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask by unanimous consent that may be done this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amount?

Mr. CALKINS. I ask that 2,000 extra copies of the report in the case of Campbell vs. Cannon be printed by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Reports of the Committee on Elections?

Mr. CALKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman may ask to have it reprinted, and that means the usual number.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read an extract from the Revised Statutes on the subject of printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

All motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other public document, shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing of the House in which such motion is made.—Revised Statutes, section 3793.

The SPEAKER. This is a statute, and not a rule of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is for publishing extra copies; but if the gentleman makes his resolution in the shape of a motion to reprint, then he will accomplish his purpose.

Mr. WILSON. I understand the rule is that all printing which does not cost more than $500 can be by a resolution of the House; in excess of that sum, it must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I submit this resolution, and ask its reference to the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of House Report No. 559, first session Forty-seventh Congress, be printed for the use of the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the committees were called yesterday for reports, I venture now to move to dispense with the morning hour of to-day, my object being to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The House divided; and there were ayes 115, noes not counted.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who desires to introduce a bill for printing and recommitment.

CONSTRUCTION OF WAR VESSELS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4755) authorizing the construction of vessels of war for the Navy of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires at this time to submit a message from the President of the United States, and certain executive communications for printing and reference.

CHEROKEE INDIAN LANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message, with accompanying papers, from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication, dated the 28th of February, 1882, from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, in relation to the request of the Cherokee Indians of the Indian Territory, for payment for lands belonging to them in said Territory; ceded to the United States by the sixteenth article of their treaty of July 19, 1866, for the settlement of friendly Indians.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1882.

SILVER BULLION PURCHASED BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Director of the Mint, in response to a resolution of the House of January 25, 1882, relative to the silver bullion purchased by the Treasury Department, and the number of standard dollars coined each month from March, 1878, down to and including December, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

OFFICIAL EMOLUMENTS OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an abstract of the official emoluments and fees received by customs officers during the year which ended June 30, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SETH M. WHITTEN.

Mr. BROWNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4756) for the relief of Seth M. Whitten; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. BERRY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 19, a bill (H. R. No. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NEAL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman will withhold his motion to enable me to introduce a resolution from the Committee on Ways and Means for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon his demand for the regular order.

Mr. NEAL. I do insist upon it.

Mr. KELLEY. It is simply a resolution which I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to offer for reference, as to the propriety of printing certain data; and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the regular order for the present.

Mr. NEAL. Very well; I will withdraw it for the present.

REPRINT OF CERTAIN PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. KELLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to present the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed —— copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 46, first session Forty-sixth Congress, being a compilation of imports and duties from 1867 to 1878, and the compiler of the same is hereby authorized to prepare the matter relating to the various tables included in said book for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1879, 1880, and 1881, respectively, and such additional tables as the Committee on Ways and Means may approve.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CONTESTED ELECTION—M'DOWELL VS. GEORGE.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit at this time a privileged report from the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the case of McDowell against George, from the State of Oregon, be dismissed by this committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to hear that resolution read again. From my understanding of the reading, it seems that the committee propose to dismiss this case. It ought to be the House and not the committee.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change suggested by the gentleman from Illinois will be made, and the Clerk will report the resolution as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the case of McDowell against George, from the State of Oregon, be dismissed by this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JACOBS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, at this time, consent to introduce a joint resolution in reference to printing and distributing the official records of the war of the rebellion.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is simply a resolution in regard to the distributing of these records, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STEELE. I must insist upon the demand for the regular order.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, in the Chair,) and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection; and the first and formal reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I presume I shall meet the demands of the committee, and I certainly shall reach the full limit of my own desires, by simply stating wherein the bill under consideration differs from the present law.

The amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, was $1,210,955. The amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill is $1,198,530; a reduction from the appropriation for the current year of $12,425. The estimate of the State Department for the year ending June 30, 1883, was $1,315,055. The amount recommended by the bill is less than the estimate by $116,525. In distributing this sum, while the committee have not lost sight of the diplomatic service, we have sought specially to sustain, encourage, and foster the consular service, that channel through which we hope to build up our trade with the nations of the earth.

I desire now, in the briefest manner possible, to call attention to the changes proposed by this bill. The first change suggested is in the thirteenth line of the bill. I am authorized by the committee to offer an amendment to that clause, to insert after the word "Brazil" the words "and Paraguay;" so that the minister accredited to Brazil shall have diplomatic relations with Paraguay. At present we have a chargé for Paraguay and Uruguay, which office we dispense with and impose upon the minister to Brazil the duties of the diplomatic service with Paraguay. They are very slight, trifling indeed, and our trade with that country passes almost entirely through Brazil. So we have imposed upon our minister to Brazil the duties of our diplomatic service with that country.

The next change is simply in title. At present we have a minister resident to Turkey, at a salary of $7,500.

Mr. BLOUNT. In what line of the bill is that?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. In line 18. We simply raise the rank from minister resident to that of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

The next change is in the twentieth line of the bill.

Mr. McLANE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the minister resident to Turkey, with a salary of $7,500, is raised to the rank of minister plenipotentiary without an increase of salary?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Yes, sir; that is correct. His rank is advanced, but not his pay.

Mr. McLANE. I am very sorry to hear that.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It is done for the purpose of giving him official position at that court. That is all.

The next change in the bill is in the twentieth line. Under the present law we have a minister resident at Belgium and a minister resident at the Netherlands, with a salary of $7,500 for each. We have united these countries and allow one minister, at a salary of $7,500.

Mr. McCOOK. What mission is that?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am speaking of Belgium and the Netherlands.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please come to order and preserve order. Gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The distance between The Hague and Brussels is less than five hours by rail, and either place can be reached any day from the other. The diplomatic duties at these two courts are not large. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, at The Hague and at Brussels there were issued four passports, two at each place, yielding to the Government a revenue of $20. For reasons which will be obvious it was thought we might unite both these countries under one minister, and in doing that we should conform to the practice of other countries. For it will be found that Portugal has but one minister to Brussels and The Hague; Roumania has but one; Sweden one; Japan has but one minister to Belgium, Holland and Denmark; and I might name other countries who do the same thing.

In the same line we have united Demark with Norway and Sweden. Norway and Sweden under the present law have but one minister resident, at $7,500, and there is a chargé at Denmark with $5,000. We have dropped that officer, and united Norway and Sweden and Denmark under one minister at a salary of $7,500. The inhabitants of those countries are essentially one people.

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not question the wisdom of the action of the committee in making a consolidation, but I ask the gentleman from whom they have received the information on which they have based their action? What is the reason why these missions should be united? Why should Belgium and the Netherlands be united? And why should Denmark, Norway, and Sweden be united?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have sought to state the reasons which influenced the committee.

Mr. McCOOK. I did not hear the reasons; I simply heard the fact.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I stated the reasons and it is scarcely worth while to repeat them.

The next change in the bill is the following: We have a minister resident to the Argentine Republic at a salary of $7,500. We had a chargé to Paraguay and Uruguay at $5,000. I have already explained that we have united Paraguay to Brazil. This bill proposes to attach, for diplomatic purposes, Uruguay to the Argentine Republic. Communication is very easy; and in doing this we should follow in the line of other governments. I believe the only two governments that have any diplomatic relations with Paraguay and Uruguay are Brazil and the Argentine Republic.

In the thirty-second line of the bill we have made some changes in salary and some in title. To each of the following countries, Liberia, Hayti, Switzerland, and Portugal, we send a minister resident. Under the law as it now stands we have a chargé at Switzerland and Portugal. We increase the rank without enlarging the pay.

In the thirty-fifth line of the bill we provide for a minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece at a salary of $5,500. That is a change from a chargé d'affaires and consul-general at Roumania at $4,000 a year. We include Servia and Greece, and increase the rank and also the salary to $5,500. These are the principal changes in matters of consolidation.

In line 39 of the bill we have made another change. We have at St. Petersburg an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, at a salary of $17,500 a year; a consul-general, at $2,000 a year, and a secretary of legation, at $2,625. We propose in this bill to unite the offices of secretary of legation and consul-general in one office, and to pay the one officer a salary of $3,500. There was a great demand for an increase of the salary of the consul-general at that point, but after examination of the matter we thought it wise to unite those two offices.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] if there will be any conflict of duties by combining these two offices?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It has been impossible for the committee to discover any conflict. The two offices are united at Constantinople.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the proposed change been recommended by the State Department?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will say in answer to the gentleman that the same plan has been practiced at Constantinople, and with very great success. The duties of consul-general and secretary of legation have been performed by the same person at Constantinople.

Mr. ROBESON. The true answer to the question of the gentleman is this: the secretary of legation has nothing to do, and the duties of the consul-general will not interfere with him.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I was about to say that we thought the duties were not so onerous but that one person might perform them. During the last year at St. Petersburg the legation issued twelve passports, or at the rate of one a month, yielding a revenue to the Government of $60. The consular fees at that place for the year amounted to but $499.

The entire number of pieces of work done by the consul-general at St. Petersburg during the year amounted to only one hundred and eighty-three, counting every description of service. So far as the labor is concerned, unless there should be some conflict between the two offices, we thought the duties might be performed by one officer, and hence we have recommended this change. We propose the same change at Vienna and Rome, and believe it might be done with advantage at other places.

There are some other changes to which I do not now care to call special attention, excepting one. By the law of last year there was appropriated for clerk hire the sum of $57,400, and the law designated the number of these clerks, fixed their salaries, and also designated the posts at which they were to be employed. This year the State Department asks for an additional sum of $16,400 for clerk hire, and a further sum of $6,000; making in all $79,800 for clerk hire.

We have been informed by the State Department that the designation of clerks at certain points and the fixing of their salaries was unwise in this particular; often the service of a clerk was unnecessary except for two or three months in the year. The Department claims that by making an appropriation of a gross sum, and leaving the distribution of it to the discretion of the Department as it might be needed to meet the demands of the service, it would result in a saving of money to the Government and promote the efficiency of the service. We therefore, without distributing the amount, appropriate in gross the sum of $65,000.

In conclusion, I desire to say that I have called the attention of the committee only to the main changes proposed by this bill. The diplomatic service of the country for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, cost the Government $379,322.21; more than one-third of the entire appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service. And I will say in this connection that the fees derived from the diplomatic service were $5,132.14, leaving the net cost of our diplomatic service $374,190.17.

The consular service is not only self-sustaining but yields a revenue to the Government varying from $25,000 to $75,000 annually. The purpose of the Committee on Appropriations in this bill has been, while not crippling or belittling the diplomatic service, to strengthen and uphold the consular service, through which we hope to extend our avenues of trade. I trust I have stated enough to advise the Committee of the Whole of the general features of this measure.

Mr. MULDROW. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. MULDROW. I would inquire of the gentleman why we are called upon to maintain prison-houses for American convicts in Siam and Turkey and other places?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that we had better postpone the consideration of that matter until we reach that clause of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will answer the gentleman now. In some of the barbarous countries we have a jurisdiction which is judicial. We have courts and prisoners, mostly American sailors, who cannot be tried by foreign tribunals. It has been the custom from time immemorial to have that sort of courts.

Mr. MULDROW. Why cannot they be tried at home?

Mr. COX, of New York. It would cost more than the gentleman would be willing to pay, if he is an economist.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ELLIS,] that he may address the committee in his own right.

Mr. ELLIS. I had thought of expressing some views on the foreign policy of our Government and enunciating my desire that a more vigorous policy should be pursued than has characterized our Government for the last ten years. But I apprehend that a more appropriate occasion will soon be presented, and I will defer the remarks I desire to make until that occasion. I will now yield such portion of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] as he may see fit to occupy.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Sympathizing with my friend from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] in his advocacy of a vigorous foreign policy by the American Government, I have to thank him for his courtesy which enables me at present to occupy the attention of this committee.

Mr. Chairman, in the outset of the remarks which I propose to make on the present occasion, I beg to call the attention of the committee to the following reference to the export and import trade in the commercial history of the United States for the last few years, which I take from the recent report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

The exports, as contrasted with the imports during the last fiscal year, (1881,) are as follows:

Exports of domestic merchandise	$883, 925, 947
Exports of foreign merchandise	18, 451, 399
Total	902, 377, 346
Imports of merchandise	642, 664, 628
Excess of exports over imports of merchandise	259, 712, 718
Aggregate of exports and imports	1, 545, 041, 974

Compared with the previous year, there was an increase of $66,738,688 in the value of exports of merchandise, and a decrease of $25,290,118 in the value of imports. The annual average of the excess of imports of merchandise over exports thereof, for ten years previous to June 30, 1873, was $104,706,922; but for the last six years there has been an excess of exports over imports of merchandise amounting to $1,180,668,105—an annual average of $196,778,017. The specie value of the exports of domestic merchandise has increased from $376,616,473, in 1870, to $883,925,947 in 1881, an increase of $507,309,474, or 135 per cent. The imports of merchandise have increased from $435,958,408, in 1870, to $642,664,628 in 1881, an increase of $206,706,220, or 47 per cent.

This is a most gratifying exhibit of commercial progress and prosperity. And when we compare this aggregate of exports and imports with that of the principal commercial powers of the world, and see from that comparison that we are now the peer of the greatest, save and except only the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and reflecting that under the control and administration of that government there are quite two hundred and fifty millions of people, we have just cause of pride in the miraculous growth and progress of the trade of our people.

And, sir, as we reckon the vast amount of our agricultural and manufacturing products, especially as shown in the grand aggregate of our increasing exports, all indicating the great wealth and prosperity which the recent years have given to our labor and industry, and when realizing the tremendous growth in our population we come to contemplate the possibilities of our national grandeur and resources and endeavor to grasp the consideration of the demands of our vast commerce in the near future—made urgent and necessary by increase of population, increase in production, and increase in domestic facilities to reach the markets of the world—we are brought directly and immediately to the reflection that our domestic legislation and our foreign diplomacy should become responsive to these demands and necessities; our statesmanship, whether in legislative hall or in the Cabinet, must keep pace with American progress. The American statesman must not only look to the growth of the trade and power of his own country, but to that of its competitors and customers. He should know and govern his conduct by the needs and friendly disposition of its customers and friends, and carefully study the resources of its rivals and thwart its antagonistic policy. In so doing no timidity should mark his action or deference to the equanimity of his adversary control his counsel. Knowing the rights and interests of his own country, he should dare maintain them.

Claiming only to be a student in the teachings of the statesmen of this country, I now only discharge the duty I owe to the people as one of their representatives when I attempt a criticism on the foreign policy of this Government. Before making it, Mr. Chairman, I deem it proper, outside of the mere home contemplation of our commerce, to call the attention of the committee to the condition and demands of the commerce and trade of other countries, and especially to those markets wherein rivalry already or may hereafter exist.

Indeed, just now, and with the purpose I have in making these remarks, it is not necessary to refer to our trade with the European states or those eastern countries which are more or less under the control of the European states. The countries to whose trade and commerce I shall refer are principally those who are, or claim to be, independently governed, and where rivalry in trade exists, and where supremacy in commerce may be thereby secured. These markets I shall assume without argument or further statement of fact to be Mexico, the Central American states, South America, the West India Islands, Oceanica, Asia in part, and Australasia.

The total export and import trade of these countries, as far and as correctly as I can obtain the statistics, I here exhibit, and I do so from the advanced sheets of the American Almanac—a work valued by all statisticians, because it is edited by that careful, faithful, and able worker, A. R. Spofford, the esteemed and worthy Librarian of the Congressional Library—and to this exhibit in the following table

I call the attention of the committee, as showing the value of the trade referred to:

Countries.	Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
Argentine Republic	1880	$44,660,204	$66,497,423	$111,157,627
Bolivia	1879	5,000,000	5,600,000	10,600,000
Brazil	1880	81,752,900	102,029,250	183,782,150
Chili	1878	22,740,000	37,771,440	60,511,440
Colombia	1879	10,787,634	13,711,511	24,499,145
Costa Rica	1878	3,116,290	6,187,062	9,303,352
Ecuador	1879	6,000,000	5,371,912	11,371,912
Guatemala	1876	2,717,000	3,918,912	6,635,912
Guiana	1879	10,325,225	13,577,675	23,902,900
Hayti	1877	7,971,000	8,474,000	16,445,000
Honduras	.....	.....	1,305,000	1,305,000
Mexico	1879	29,000,000	31,000,000	60,000,000
Nicaragua	1880	1,470,114	2,057,622	3,527,736
Paraguay	1880	1,030,000	1,163,900	2,193,900
Peru	1879	27,000,000	45,000,000	72,000,000
Salvador	1880	22,294,542	4,583,538	26,878,880
Santo Domingo	.....	1,745,654	1,546,809	3,292,463
Uruguay	1879	18,328,225	19,752,201	38,080,426
Venezuela	1876	14,800,000	11,300,000	29,100,000
China	1878	70,804,027	67,172,179	137,976,206
Japan	1879	32,964,632	28,711,527	61,676,159
Total				791,239,448
Oceanica, Cuba, and West India Islands, not given above, estimated				350,000,000
Total				1,141,239,448

Presenting as a grand total of the annual trade of these countries the sum of $1,141,239,448. Unquestionably these States in their trade have increased since the dates given, and it is not too much to estimate its grand aggregate for the year 1881 to be $1,400,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, before making any comment on this exhibit I beg to submit and to call the attention of the committee to the following table showing the trade and commerce of the United States with these governments in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, as I take it from the report of Hon. Joseph Nimmo, jr., Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, submitted to the present session of Congress. The present table represents, therefore, the value of the imports from the countries named into the United States and the value of the exports from the United States into the same countries.

Imports and exports.

Countries.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
From and to—
Mexico	$17,454,126	$11,172,738	$28,626,864
Central American States	3,402,969	1,793,757	5,194,726
British Honduras	464,500	486,959	951,459
West Indies	87,524,552	31,013,537	118,538,089
South America	81,501,718	25,871,953	107,373,671
Asia, Australasia, and Oceanica	82,136,453	28,154,857	110,291,310
Total	272,482,318	98,493,801	370,976,119

A comparison of these two tables shows, first, that notwithstanding the proximity of the United States to these countries, and with natural advantages to secure the major portion of this immense trade, yet we do not enjoy it. If perchance it was secured, who doubts that it would largely contribute to the value of our products and add largely to our national wealth? Secondly, this comparison shows that while we buy or import nearly 33 per cent. of their export trade, namely, the sum of $272,482,318, yet we only sell them about 12½ per cent. of their imports. The balance of trade is largely against us. Why this is so, and as to the remedy, I shall have a word to say before finishing my remarks; but not now, because, pertinent thereto, there are other facts to be stated and considered.

While, Mr. Chairman, we note with exultant pride the marked increase in our foreign trade and the great development in the capacity of this country to supply the wants of the world, yet it must be said and admitted that this has not been made at the expense of any serious decline in the volume of the exports and imports of other countries, though it may be true in certain articles in the production of which the United States has rapidly and successfully passed all competitors. And, again, it is to be noted that our domestic trade and commerce have with even greater stride moved forward and increased.

The immense increase in the commerce of the world is a resultant from the improved facilities for the exchange of the products of labor given by steam. The railway car and the ship moved by steam have wrought miraculous changes in the civilization of mankind. With this mechanical power, obedient to the will of man, and with the multiplication of artificial wants, which, it is said, marks improvement and progress in civilization, no one can foretell the limit to which trade and commerce may extend. It is an accepted axiom that the extension of commerce by any given country attests alike its intelligence and wealth. When, therefore, the American statesman studies the growth and development of his own country in its industries, trade, and commerce and reflects that in the race of intelligence and wealth there is "no pause"—unless followed by death and decay—he must, if faithful to the trust of his position, take such steps as will promote this growth and development.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the present status of our trade and commerce, internal and foreign, is such that it demands this thought and attention upon the part of our statesmen, no matter whether their sphere of labor is in the Senate, the Cabinet, or the field of actual struggle. Look at your immediate surroundings. I need not repeat the figures of the tables already shown you. The goal to be reached by the great manufacturing and producing countries lies in the fields south and west of us. These fields comprise the commerce of the States of South America, Mexico, the West India Islands, the Central American states, Oceanica, Australasia, and Eastern Asia. The value of their present trade I have shown you, now $1,400,000,000 annually, but how rich and valuable will it become when under the magic touch of steam new energy and life are given to the people who shall inhabit these domains, and when the world shall demand of these countries the vast mineral wealth that now sleeps peacefully in the recesses of their mountains and their valleys? The day the world will demand this of Central America, Mexico, and South America is not far distant.

Mr. Chairman, the keen instinct of our business men is ahead of our legislators and diplomates. Appreciating the value of the trade to be won, already has the enterprise and capital of our citizens built iron channels of commerce across the continent, and they are building others extending into and across the Republic of Mexico. They are fast traveling to points of advantage with a view to seize and control the principal marts of the commerce and trade of the countries referred to.

In this connection I beg, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to the increase in the mileage of railroads in the United States within the last eleven years. In 1870 the number of miles in operation was 52,914; in 1881, 103,000; showing an increase of 50,086. This increase has been principally in the Western and Southwestern States, and constructed with the view and in the effort to reach the Pacific coast and the boundaries of Mexico. The large amount of capital invested in these enterprises manifests the estimate placed by the business men of our Government on the present and prospective value of the trade of South America and the countries washed by the Pacific Ocean.

Sir, on the 12th day of March, 1878, in the discussion of the consular and diplomatic bill, then pending before this House, and at that time in advocating and urging the duty of the American Government to provide by treaty with Mexico for the protection of the capital and labor of our citizens which might be enlisted in the building of railroads, &c., in that republic, I then took occasion to say, what I here repeat, "that our people with their commerce and trade have moved up to the northern border of Mexico. It is the law alike of population and trade that such a tide must move forward. And now, knocking at the door, they peacefully ask that it may be opened, or, in other words, that the channels of trade and commerce shall be unobstructed to the flow of wealth and population. They will be; and the statesman of either country who hinders or delays the work simply provides a heritage of serious if not bloody complications for the future. Looking facts—the proximity of the two peoples, their mutual and reciprocal wants and wealth—squarely in the face, it is the injunction of wise statesmanship at once to set about establishing the trade and commerce of the two peoples upon a basis of fraternity and peace, and thus realize to the people of the United States by friendly offices all that was hoped for by France in her warlike movements. And commencing thus with our nearest neighbor, let it become fixed in our policy that in the outlets demanded by our commerce protection and security to the capital and labor of the American citizen shall be assured, as is the Monroe doctrine in our relations with our sister states on this continent. This being so, wherever it is desired to open markets for our surplus wealth we shall find volunteer pioneers for our trade and willing missionaries for our commerce."

Mr. Chairman, the statesmanship as well as the enterprise and capital of European governments appreciates the value and importance of the "goal" to be reached in this struggle for supremacy in the commerce of the South American states and of the countries in and bordering on the Pacific Ocean. Already and now does Great Britain enjoy the major portion of this trade, and by diplomacy as well as by taxation of her own citizens, as does the Government of France, seek to maintain their present hold on it, but by our domestic enterprises referred to—the building of railroads—our people are on the eve of reversing this order of things. And hence European governments are seeking, not alone by capital invested in trade, but by "diplomatic suggestions" in the counsels and administration of the affairs of these governments, to make them hostile to American interests and jealous of American influence. And not content with these measures, European diplomacy and capital seek, in the building of an Isthmus canal, to "head off" the efforts of American citizens and to place a limit to American power and American progress.

Is it not singular, Mr. Chairman, that so stupendous an undertaking and one so likely to affect seriously the commerce, if not the peace, of the United States as the building of the interoceanic canal by foreign capital and foreign enterprise, under a foreign charter—and this project inaugurated and promoted by those who have for years, together with other dreams of the family, dreamed of a Latin empire on this continent—should apparently have arrested so little attention upon the part of those charged with the conduct of our foreign relations? Who that studies a moment does not see that in a military and naval point of view it will become necessary upon the completion of such a canal that the United States should increase its naval armament and multiply its works of military fortification? This very fact might and, in my opinion, should induce the United States to regard the construction of such a canal as a menace to its power and its security. Again, with the progress of our railroad system, and with the development of mining, manufacturing, and agricultural wealth in the interior-Western and Pacific States, very soon from the Pacific coast we will be able and ready to supply the wants of trade to the countries in and bordering on the Pacific Ocean.

Conflicting as such a canal will with our vast railroad system, in which there is over six billions of capital invested; giving as it will the advantages in competition to our European rivals over the interior-Western and Pacific States; creating as it does an artificial Bosphorus around which diplomacy and war are to play their false and bloody roles—making "armed powers" a necessity on this continent—it is profoundly surprising that the American Government has been apparently so indifferent to "the progress of events" on the Isthmus. And yet, Mr. Chairman, even if the apprehensions which I have pictured should be esteemed as idle and without reason, and the country accept the contrary views, and that this artificial channel is to prove a great highway to commerce, still it must have a large influence upon the trade of this Government and our relations with the other governments on this continent. But, Mr. Chairman, to return to the main line of thought, who dares believe that the capital of Europe seeks investment in this canal either in sentiment or for the benefit of our people and their wealth? Certainly those who are building it are not guided alone by effusive sentiment. The people of the United States should not forget the efforts of Louis Napoleon, either in Central America or his attempt to found an empire in Mexico. In relation to this attempt at empire in Mexico I here again quote and read what it is said a distinguished Frenchman wrote of it. Abbe Dominick, in behalf of France, writes:

> Behind the Mexican expedition there was more than empire to found, a nation to save, markets to create, thousands of millions to develop; there was a world tributary to France, happy to submit to our sympathetic influence, to receive their supplies from us and to ascribe to us their resurrection to the political and social life of a civilized people.

I beg gentlemen, when they consider this great undertaking of French capital, to inquire if these be not yet the motives which induce the Frenchman to enlist in the work. For one I do not doubt it, and therefore it is, and for the other reasons given, I believe, that unless soon the American Government defines and takes its position in relation to the building or control of such a canal, it provides for the coming of a day full of an Iliad of woes to our country.

Not only in this matter but in other regards it is apparent that European governments are not idle as to the condition of things in the states of South America. All the indications point to a struggle over the empire of wealth that lies in the present and future commerce of these southern states of the American continent and the islands of the western ocean. The balance of trade is now against us. The diplomacy of Europe has hitherto, with and since the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, overreached us. And now material progress and advancement have brought us to the practical question, shall America abandon the contest for this grand, magnificent, rich empire of wealth on the Pacific Ocean? American progress will not tolerate an abandonment of the struggle. Can it be won by domestic protective tariffs? Can it be gained and held by subsidized ships? Can it be reached and secured by interoceanic canals? The propositions contained in these queries have each their advocates. Without arguing either upon the present occasion, I content myself with saying that neither would prove efficacious and satisfactory in my opinion. Either one would prove illusory and futile unless diplomacy had first entered the field and secured respect and protection for American capital and enterprise invested in the struggle being made.

The executive department should, in its office, obtain the friendship, good-will, and kindly disposition of the country with which commercial intercourse is sought; the partial barriers, burdens, and taxation upon trades there prevailing should be modified or removed; reciprocal advantages should be sought and given. The proximity of country, the similarity of institutions, the harmony of thought in that the people must rule and not dynasties govern, being essentially American, should therefore unite American governments to work together for the promotion of popular government, in which the alleviation of human want and the promotion of human happiness was and should remain the object of all American governments; that, being so identified, they would sedulously and by all peaceful agencies promote the wealth and prosperity of each other so far as it could be done without injustice to their own citizens. And, beyond all this, it should be known and adhered to under all circumstances that the American citizen in his person and in his property—let him be where he may and when engaged in lawful pursuit—should be protected with all the power of his Government. Let the American citizen know and recognize this; and this being so, as I have already said, you will find that "wherever it is desired to open markets for our surplus wealth, we shall find volunteer pioneers for our trade, and willing missionaries for our commerce." It is because we have not been willing to incur hazards for the protection of our citizens who may have the courage to embark capital and labor in commercial enterprises in foreign countries, and prompt to give them relief when oppressed, that "the balance of trade" is often found against us. Let the executive department do its duty in this behalf and the people and their Congress will support such an administration, and we will find a reversal in the existing order of things as regards our commerce with the countries of which I have spoken.

Mr. Chairman, I come now to speak in this connection about recent efforts in our diplomacy with regard to the questions I have referred to. Let me premise, with the statement of opinion, that immediately upon the commencement of the administration of James A. Garfield it appeared that the great body of the people believed that his administration would be given to the solution of questions affecting the industrial pursuits of all classes and sections of the country and without prejudice, and that hence in the future parties in the country would be divided upon economic instead of sectional questions. Indeed, the common sense of the country had already taken up these questions, and it was quick to see that President Garfield was willing and ardent to enter upon them. In necessary connection with these domestic economic questions was the present and urgent one of the character of the foreign policy of the Government. The people were gratified with the indication that the policy of the Administration in this regard was to be a vigorous one and in harmony with the ancient policy of the Government. I do not believe, sir, that I misunderstood or that I now misrepresent public opinion when I say that one of the chief elements of grief in his sad and unfortunate death was the great fear of the people that this policy was to be reversed. Full many a patriot of both parties was more than anxious that the bitterness of sectional strife should cease, and that the inglorious and corrupting struggle for office—by machinery at least—should forever disappear, and that in lieu thereof the talent and energy of the country should be enlisted in the combat of principles which should determine what was best for the peace, wealth, and glory of the country; hence, having learned to believe that the administration of President Garfield promised to give at least opportunities for such a combat, it had secured in a very marked degree the respect and good wishes of the large mass of the people.

While, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree in all of the details of the foreign policy of the late President, especially the personal parts, yet I am free to say that in the steps taken by Mr. Blaine to modify or cancel the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and in the main in the efforts made by him with the sanction of President Garfield, and at first with the approval of President Arthur, to bring about a cordial and sympathetic understanding between the powers representing "American progress in American governments" in relation to questions purely American, I am in thorough accord, because I believe they are the first, most urgent, and necessary steps to the assertion of a vigorous American policy. Before the Government of the United States can do anything effectively in regard to the Isthmus canal it is absolutely essential that our sister American governments should know the obligations of this Government under existing treaties, as well as its duties to its own citizens and territory; and they should know that our efforts made in that quarter were not exclusive of a due and proper consideration of their rights and interests, which would be more or less common, especially in view of possible policy upon the part of European powers. To invite a common consultation of those most directly interested, not alone in their trade, but in their governments, in the results likely to flow from the completion of the canal, was not only proper, but, to my mind, vitally important.

I may be in error, Mr. Chairman, but I venture the opinion that the completion of an Isthmus canal is followed by increased military works and naval armaments upon the part of every American Government that has the ability to make them. And then, shall I add, that the necessity for this will go on increasing, and ever at the expense of the people, and inevitably involving the character and form of their governments? Then the careful statesman, mindful always of the future, makes no mistake if he can in the present secure such guarantees as insure the future peace and glory of his country. But that statesman must not purchase the peace of his country at the expense of its honor and wealth. Such, Mr. Chairman, seems to have been some of the reasons governing the policy of the late President and his Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine; and if so, they are such as will, in my judgment, meet the approval of the people of the United States.

But, Mr. Chairman, Garfield is dead, and Blaine is no longer Secretary of State. The great West and the enterprising East do not now govern. It is the shadow of Wall street. Speculative capital, always timid, grows pale, and for fear of offense withdraws the brave words that the representatives of energy, power, and honor have spoken. The United States will not move, when the honor, the trade, the commerce of its citizens demand their presence and their protection, lest forsooth "jealousy and ill-will" in some foreign power—our rivals it may be—should be created. And to this complexion has American policy fallen! Is there a lower depth to be reached? We are invited to it, so at least it would seem, in the reply of the English Government to Mr. Blaine's dispatch in relation to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. In this reply it is suggested that a conference of the great commercial powers be called to give a mutual guarantee of the neutrality of the Isthmus canal. What is the value of the guarantee? In case of war what would it be worth? Are we to have the drama of "the Balance of Power" re-enacted on this continent? If so, how many bloody and tragic acts is it to contain? Is this to be the heritage which our timid and courteous statesmen are to prepare as an inheritance for the republics that now make the American family? The honor of our country forbid!

A conference of European powers suggested! A conference of American Republics rejected! Limits to be prescribed to American diplomacy, limits to American progress and American prowess! Who is to bind and determine the growth and extent of American commerce and American territory? Sir, let it be said to the honor of the late administration that it seems in its foreign policy to have been imbued with the teachings of the grand old patriots, whose words and deeds illustrated with brilliant luster the brightest, bravest pages of American history—Jefferson, who gave us Louisiana; Monroe, who gave us a definite American policy; Adams and Clay, who sought American unity; Polk, who gave us California; Everett, whose memorable dispatch to the Comte de Sartiges should be constantly read by the American patriot; and Cass and Douglas and Marcy, who gave us their protest against the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. Chairman, permit me in exposition of this American policy to quote from Mr. Everett's dispatch already referred to. Mr. Everett therein gave a historical review of the acquisition of territory made by the United States, and of the policy of this Government proceeds to say that—

No person surveying these events with the eye of a comprehensive statesmanship can fail to trace in the main result the undoubted operation of the law of our political existence. The consequences are before the world. Vast provinces which had languished for three centuries under the leaden sway of a stationary system are coming under the influences of an active civilization. Freedom of speech and the press, the trial by jury, religious equality, and representative government have been carried by the Constitution of the United States into extensive regions in which they were unknown before. By the settlement of California the great circuit of intelligence round the globe is completed. The discovery of the gold of that region, leading as it did to the same discovery in Australia, has touched the nerve of industry throughout the world. Every addition to the territory of the American Union has given homes to European destitution and gardens to European want. From every part of the United Kingdom, from France, from Switzerland and Germany, and from the extremest north of Europe, a march of immigration has been taken up such as the world has never seen before. Into the United States, grown to their present extent in the manner described, but little less than half a million of the population of the Old World is annually pouring, to be immediately incorporated into an industrious and prosperous community, in the bosom of which they find political and religious liberty, social position, employment, and bread.

It will be remembered that the United States have been invited by the Governments of France and Great Britain to enter into a convention by which the three Governments would disclaim "now and for hereafter all intention to obtain possession of the island of Cuba." This invitation was declined by the United States Government in the admirable and bold dispatch referred to, and in which he uses the language I have already quoted, and in which he further adds:

But whatever may be thought of these last suggestions, it would seem impossible for any one who reflects upon the events glanced at in this note to mistake the law of American growth and progress, or think it can be ultimately arrested by a convention like that proposed. In the judgment of the President it would be as easy to throw a dam from Cape Florida to Cuba, in the hope of stopping the flow of the Gulf stream, as to attempt, by a compact like this, to fix the fortunes of Cuba "now and for hereafter."

And in this the great American statesman meant to be understood that no human power could define and limit the extent of American growth and progress.

At a later period in our history, when it was supposed that this was attempted to be done by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that brilliant American statesman, who in his life and speech more nearly typified American thought and American aspirations than any of its recent statesmen, Stephen A. Douglass—the grand representative of American Democracy—in protesting against the treaty referred to spoke as follows in reference to American growth and progress:

But I cannot close my eyes to the history of this country for the last half century. Fifty years ago the question was being debated in this Senate whether it was wise or not to acquire any territory on the west bank of the Mississippi River, and it was then contended that we could never, with safety, extend beyond that river. It was at that time seriously considered whether the Alleghany Mountains should not be the barrier beyond which we should never pass. At a subsequent date, after we had acquired Louisiana and Florida, more liberal views began to prevail, and it was thought that perhaps we might venture to establish one tier of States west of the Mississippi; but in order to prevent the sad calamity of an undue expansion of our territory, the policy was adopted of establishing an Indian Territory, with titles in perpetuity, all along the western border of those States, so that no more new States could possibly be created in that direction. That barrier could not arrest the onward progress of our people. They burst through it, and passed the Rocky Mountains, and were only arrested by the waters of the Pacific. Who, then, is prepared to say that in the progress of events, having met with the barrier of the ocean in our western course, we may not be compelled to turn to the north and to the south for an outlet?—Appendix to Congressional Globe, Second session Thirty-second Congress, volume 27, page 26.

Mr. Chairman, in the progress of events we have reached that point. Our adversaries realize this. The trade and commerce of the Pacific is to American progress a necessity. Shall the peaceful weapons of diplomacy and the kindly offices of friendship secure it, or shall we submit to bind the giant by lithes and postpone the day of power to the future, then to be obtained by a bloody drama?

No, Mr. Chairman, this struggle cannot be postponed. The six billions of capital invested in railroads all concentrating on your coasts and on the borders of this sought-for land; the immense annual value of the products of your farms, workshops, and mines, amounting to billions; the grand and increasing aggregate of the commercial capital and enterprise of our people; the great Mississippi Valley, from whose productive fields, if rightly encouraged, the support and sustenance of the world is to be drawn; the very law of our existence and growth, with our rapid increase in population, demand that the statesmanship of the country shall aid in securing this empire of wealth and commerce for our industry and labor.

Within the sound of my voice, and on this floor as representatives of the people, are those who will see within the limits of our present Union over one hundred millions of population. Imagine if you can the progress of this country in material wealth within that time. Grasp if you can the then demands of our commerce and trade. In making the effort you will comprehend the wisdom and patriotism of the statesmen of this country who by their counsel prepare in the ways of peace for the grand march of American civilization and American progress.

It must be ever onward. And, sir, looking far away into the future, and contemplating the vast possibilities of free Government, with prosperous trade and commerce to the thriving millions who are to occupy, possess and enjoy this continent of ours, it seems to me that wise statesmanship would hail with ambitious pride this propitious hour to inaugurate commensurate movements to meet these magnificent possibilities. I say propitious, Mr. Chairman, because now, while mere trade politicians would traffic in sectional feelings and passions or run office by machinery, the people, who comprehend the misfortunes of overproduction and surplus products, anxiously desire material relief and material support, and will hail him or that party as entitled to their confidence who by peaceful agencies brings wealth, peace, and prosperity to their doors.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, when I asked the gentleman in charge of this bill to allow me some time for its discussion, I proposed to devote it to some suggestions which my study and experience had led me to conclude would improve the consular service of the United States, especially in connection with that part of the service which relates to the Treasury; and I have prepared some notes with reference to that branch of the subject. I do not suppose, however, that I shall be able now to engage in that line of discussion; and if I find that my time and strength will not permit me to do so, I shall ask the permission of the committee to incorporate these suggestions in my printed remarks.

There are two questions connected with our foreign relations as to which the popular judgment has come to absolute and positive conclusions: first, that our citizens, whether naturalized or native, shall have full and complete protection at home and abroad; second, that the Monroe doctrine, as it is called, shall be asserted and maintained at every cost and hazard, even to the issue of the cannon's mouth.

When the resolutions offered by my colleagues, [Mr. COX and Mr. ROBINSON,] and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, were under consideration upon the report of the committee, the gentleman in charge of the subject [Mr. ORTH] made some statements which were as surprising as they were unfounded. He held the closing hour, and he did not allow any reply whatever to be made to the allegations in which he indulged; and as the discussion upon this bill affords the only opportunity for such reply, I feel that I am justified, in fact constrained, to forego what I intended to say in the strict line of business, and to attempt as best I may to reply to the propositions of the gentleman from Indiana. He said:

The Democratic party had control of this Government for more than thirty years. They obtained and retained that control mainly by the votes of the naturalized citizens of this country. It was that vote which gave them power and which gives them power to-day.

* * * * * * *

During the thirty years they had the control of the Government, claiming to be especial friends of the naturalized citizen, where is the law within the lids of our statute-book which the Democratic party ever placed there to protect him while visiting his native land?

He then proceeded to claim for the Republican party the credit of enacting in 1868 the provisions of law now known as sections 2000 and 2001 of the Revised Statutes. It is well that these provisions should be clearly understood by the House in order that discussion may be an intelligent one. I will therefore ask the Clerk to read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2000. All naturalized citizens of the United States, while in foreign countries, are entitled to and shall receive from this Government the same protection of persons and property which is accorded to native-born citizens.

SEC. 2001. Whenever it is made known to the President that any citizen of the United States has been unjustly deprived of his liberty by or under the authority of any foreign government, it shall be the duty of the President forthwith to demand of that government the reasons of such imprisonment; and if it appears to be wrongful and in violation of the rights of American citizenship, the President shall forthwith demand the release of such citizen, and if the release so demanded is unreasonably delayed or refused, the President shall use such means, not amounting to acts of war, as he may think necessary and proper to obtain or effectuate the release; and all the facts and proceedings relative thereto shall, as soon as practicable, be communicated by the President to Congress.

DEMOCRACY THE FRIEND OF THE NATURALIZED CITIZEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I pass by as unworthy of notice the allegation of the gentleman from Indiana that the Democratic party obtained power in this country by the votes of naturalized citizens. If he had referred to the message of President Monroe which contains that declaration of policy known as the Monroe doctrine he would have found that Mr. Monroe, speaking of the growth of the country, says:

What is more extraordinary, it is almost altogether native, for the emigration from other countries has been inconsiderable.

Now, certainly the Democrats were in power from the time of Jefferson to the time of James Monroe; and it is quite certain, as there had been no considerable immigration up to that time, that this power was not obtained by the votes of naturalized citizens. But I am perfectly willing to admit, and I take it to the credit of the Democratic party, that it has received the steady support of the naturalized citizens of this country. They have had good reasons for giving this support. They know their friends; and they recognize the fact that the Democratic party is the only political organization to which in the past they could look for the assertion and maintenance of the rights of naturalized citizens. This reliance has never been and never will be misplaced. As I pointed out to the gentleman from Indiana in the question which he was good enough to allow me to ask him, the war of 1812 was undertaken by a Democratic administration, when the country was still feeble, for the express purpose of resisting the claim of Great Britain to search our ships and remove our naturalized citizens from the protection of the American flag. The gentleman replied that the war of 1812 settled nothing; but I pointed to the fact that since that time no American ship had been subjected to search, and no naturalized citizen had been deprived of his right to protection on the high seas.

But I now go further and assert that the right of search was abandoned in fact, and the practical right of expatriation acknowledged by Great Britain at that time, so far as we were concerned, although it was not formulated into a specific law of the realm until 1870. But the treaty of Ghent, which concluded the war of 1812, contained an article which in fact conceded the doctrine of expatriation, but in a covert manner. We were strong enough to resist the claim of inalienable allegiance, but we were not strong enough to compel its express abandonment in words. It was abandoned, nevertheless, by the third article of the treaty, which is as follows:

All prisoners of war taken on either side, as well by land as by sea, shall be restored as soon as practicable after the ratification of this treaty.

To show that this provision in fact abandoned the right of search and of perpetual allegiance, I now give the gentleman from Indiana an authority which he will not gainsay, one of the greatest of living authorities, Lord Tenterden, who was a member of the joint high commission which framed the treaty of Washington. In his report on "naturalization and allegiance" which led to the adoption of the law of 1870, by which the right of expatriation was recognized and affirmed in Great Britain, Lord Tenterden (then Mr. Abbott) says:

The further claim to punish as traitors British subjects found in arms against their native country was practically abandoned when the prisoners taken in the United States service were unconditionally exchanged in 1814 without having been brought to trial, as threatened. * * *

It must be remembered that the theory of treason is the same in England and in the United States. * * * The right of impressment having been given up, and the doctrine of treason thus modified by practice, there does not now remain any claim which Great Britain need seek to maintain upon the allegiance of British subjects emigrating to foreign countries.

The war of 1812 did then settle the question for which it was fought, and from that day to this American naturalized citizens have had equal protection under the law with those of native birth.

REPUBLICAN ATTITUDE IN 1868.

How, then, came it to pass that a Republican Congress and a Republican administration placed upon the statute-book the legislation of 1868? Was it a voluntary movement, or was it forced upon them by the general feeling of indignation which had been aroused in the country in consequence of their neglect to give due protection to American naturalized citizens in foreign countries? I affirm, without the fear of contradiction, that it was a step reluctantly taken to save themselves from the consequences of indifference and neglect. Such legislation was not necessary, because Marcy and Webster had alike asserted the true American doctrine; and up to 1867 there was no call for legislation placing upon the statute-book a declaration of the rights of citizenship which all parties acknowledge, and which had been asserted firmly and fearlessly, even to the issue of war, in the eyes of the whole world.

But in 1867, under a Republican administration, American citizens who had gone to Great Britain (whether for lawful or unlawful purposes it does not matter) were seized, brought to trial, convicted, and put in prison. It was alleged that in these arrests, trials, and convictions the rights of our citizens were not properly asserted and protected, and that the administration had not shown sufficient zeal for the protection of the lawful rights of these citizens.

SERVICES OF HON. W. E. ROBINSON.

The excitement thus produced in the minds of our adopted citizens resulted in the election of Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON to the Fortieth Congress, for the express purpose of securing such action on the part of the Administration and such legislation from Congress as might be necessary for the protection of our naturalized citizens resident or traveling in foreign lands. And this legislation he succeeded in securing; and after carefully examining the steps by which it was secured, I am prepared to say that he is fully justified in claiming the legislation of 1868 as his work, and in declaring in this House or elsewhere—

That, like an eagle in a dovecote, I
Flutter'd your Volcians at Corioli:
Alone I did it.

He claims no more than his just due when he asserts that prior to this legislation the feudal doctrine of perpetual allegiance, which is a doctrine of political servitude, had not been abandoned, except as the result of the war of 1812, by any leading European nation, but after our legislation of 1868 it was expressly abandoned by all of them; so that in fact the rights of our naturalized citizens were as fully recognized by the civilized world as our duty to protect them had been asserted in the war of 1812.

In securing this legislation there is a striking similarity between the scenes of disorder which we have recently witnessed, whenever my colleague from Brooklyn has taken the floor, and the occurrences of the Fortieth Congress. That Congress assembled in extra session on the 4th of March. On the 7th of March Mr. ROBINSON introduced the familiar resolution of inquiry, calling upon the President for information as to American citizens held under arrest in Ireland.

On the 20th March Secretary Seward sends a letter refusing to furnish the correspondence on the ground that its publication might be detrimental to the public interests. Congress then took a recess until the 3d of July, and on the 10th Mr. ROBINSON again renewed the subject in a resolution instructing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report immediately whether American citizens had been arrested, tried, and convicted or sentenced for words spoken or acts done in the United States. Again there was a scene, but the motion was carried. On the 20th of July the State Department stated to the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it had no such information. On the same day Congress took a recess until the 21st November, and upon that day Mr. ROBINSON offered a resolution of impeachment against our minister to England, and made a speech in which he outlined the measures of legislation which were subsequently adopted. But at that time there was a scene as usual, and no action.

On the 2d December, on the very opening of the second session, Mr. ROBINSON got the floor, and for an hour pressed his views, amid great opposition and excitement, upon the attention of the House. Up to this time he had stood alone in advocating the right of expatriation, but on this occasion Mr. Judd, of Illinois, came to his support in an able speech, and the resolutions of Mr. ROBINSON were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which happily he was a member.

Then followed a series of vast public meetings over the whole country, in which the principles of Mr. ROBINSON'S resolutions were indorsed, the result of which was that Congress was flooded with petitions and resolutions, showing that the country was thoroughly aroused on this question, so vital to the independence of the Republic. Nearly every member of the House was suddenly waked up to the magnitude of the question, so that in the course of a month a dozen or more bills and resolutions were introduced declaring for the right of expatriation and for the protection of our naturalized citizens.

On the 27th of January, 1868, Mr. Banks, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill providing for reprisals as a remedy for the unjust arrest of our citizens. There is a change! The first report was a bill for reprisals. This bill was most elaborately discussed, all the leading members of the House taking part in the discussion. Meanwhile, the State Department relented and sent in the correspondence, filling now two bulky printed volumes. On the 18th of February the House passed, under suspension of the rules, in five minutes, a bill appropriating $50,000 for the relief of our citizens imprisoned abroad. The vote was 114 to 29, the negative votes being, with one exception, all cast by Republicans. On the 10th of March Mr. Banks reported an amended bill, which, after much discussion, was finally passed on the 20th of April, with only four votes in the negative, all Republicans. I have not time to follow the elaborate discussion which took place in the Senate, but the bill, with amendments, was finally passed by a vote of 39 yeas to 5 nays, the latter all Republicans. The House concurred in the amendments, and the act was approved by the President on the 27th of July, 1868, a day which witnessed a declaration of rights scarcely less important to the freedom of the world than the Declaration of Independence.

This was the work of my colleague, WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, and there is no man, not even a Republican, who can justly contest his claim to the credit of this great measure of justice and natural right.

Be to his virtues very kind,
Be to his faults a little blind.

The passage of this bill was followed by treaties in 1870 with Great Britain, France, Prussia, and other countries, recognizing the right of expatriation; so that now and henceforth international law recognizes no difference between native-born and naturalized citizens.

It has been necessary to recite the history of the passage of this bill at such length in order to refute the claim of the gentleman from Indiana, that the legislation of 1868 was due to the Republican party and is to be credited to their record. It was, in fact, not a party measure, and the best men on both sides contributed to its success; but so far as it was opposed, it was opposed only by Republicans. It owed its final triumph solely to the courage and persistence, in order and out of order—and generally the latter—of my ever-genial but sometimes rather impetuous colleague. [Laughter.]

DOMICILE AND PROTECTION.

Having thus disposed of the historical errors of my friend from Indiana, I now take issue with some of the doctrines of his speech. I think that he does not concede sufficient strength to the claim which domicile, without actual naturalization, gives to the protection of the Government. I understand the position in the Martin-Koszta case to go much further than I infer from his speech he is willing to concede. He was pleased to speak contemptuously of Governor Marcy as the exponent of the Bourbon era of American politics; but I should like to know whether he disavows the position of Marcy as to the rights acquired by domicile.

I ask to have read from the desk the passage I have marked in the dispatch of Mr. Marcy in regard to the Koszta case so far as it relates to domicile. The position there taken is a very important one, and very much in advance of any position which seems to be at present maintained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Hulsemann, as the undersigned believes, falls into a great error, an error fatal to some of his most important conclusions, by assuming that a nation can properly extend its protection only to native-born or naturalized citizens. This is not the doctrine of international law, nor is the practice of nations circumscribed within such narrow limits. This law does not, as has been before remarked, complicate questions of this nature by respect for municipal codes. In relation to this subject it has clear and distinct rules of its own. It gives the national character of the country, not only to native-born and naturalized citizens, but to all residents in it who are there with, or even without, an intention to become citizens, provided they have a domicile therein. Foreigners may, and often do, acquire a domicile in a country, even though they have entered it with the avowed intention not to become naturalized citizens, but to return to their native land at some remote and uncertain period; and whenever they acquire a domicile, international law at once impresses upon them the national character of the country of that domicile. It is a maxim of international law that domicile confers a national character; it does not allow any one who has a domicile to decline the national character thus conferred; it forces it upon him, often very much against his will and to his great detriment. International law looks only to the national character in determining what country has the right to protect. If a person goes from this country abroad, with the nationality of the United States, this law enjoins upon other nations to respect him, in regard to protection, as an American citizen. It concedes to every country the right to protect any and all who may be clothed with its nationality.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. For one, I am not willing to yield one particle of the doctrine which was thus announced by Governor Marcy in regard to the right of domicile, even when it is not claimed for naturalized citizens or persons who have declared their intention to become citizens. I hold with Governor Marcy that the right of domicile, without such declaration of intention, secures a right in certain cases to the protection of this Government.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

Now if the doctrine thus enunciated by Marcy be Bourbonism, the gentleman from Indiana must study a different kind of lexicon from the one I am in the habit of consulting for my political definitions.

But I must go a step further and take issue with some of the conclusions which my friend from Indiana draws from what I cheerfully concede to be well-settled principles. He says:

When American citizens go to a foreign state or nation they are amenable to the laws of that nation to the same extent as the citizens of that nation themselves; but in case they are charged with an infraction of the laws of another nation they are entitled to the same course of procedure and to the same mode of trial in all respects as the citizens belonging to that nation; and it is equally clear when that principle is departed from, when one principle of action is applied to the stranger and a different one to their citizens, this Government then has a right, and it is its duty, to interfere and claim for its citizens that they shall be treated no more harshly and in no different manner than that in which such foreign government treats its own citizens.

As a general proposition this statement is correct, but in practice there are and must be many exceptions to its application. For example, for many hundreds of years, from the time of Edward III to the year 1868, a foreigner in England was entitled to a jury de medietate linguæ, to which no native citizen had a right. And again in oriental countries we should protest very vigorously if our citizens were subjected to local laws; and we have established consular courts, for which the bill under consideration makes provision, and secured by treaty the right to try our own citizens according to our own laws. In other words, the doctrine of extra-territoriality is a substantive right under some circumstances. But no such privilege exists in regard to Great Britain. And yet it seems to me that even there there is a limit to the doctrine of absolute conformity to municipal law laid down by the gentleman from Indiana.

The laws of Great Britain and of the United States have much in common. They spring from the same great fountain and our system of jurisprudence is substantially that of the mother country, whose colonies we were. Among the rights dearest to both nations and to all English-speaking people is the writ of habeas corpus. It may be suspended under certain circumstances in both countries, but it can only be suspended by law especially enacted for the purpose in certain contingencies and within certain limits of time and place. Now it seems to me that when the right to this writ is suspended and the citizens of the United States are thrown into prison and denied a speedy trial, there does arise a grievance which demands the interference of the Government. It seems to me that we have a right to ask that as to our citizens there shall be a speedy trial or a release from imprisonment; otherwise an innocent man may be left to rot in jail and the protecting arm of his government paralyzed by an act which is unusual, abnormal, and contrary to the spirit of the law under which both nations live and move and have their being. I do not think it unreasonable that under such circumstances the actual facts should be investigated promptly and thoroughly by our Government, and in the absence of a speedy trial that the release of our citizens shall be demanded, unless a conclusive prima facie case is made out against them on the facts as developed by such investigation. I would be the last man to embarrass a foreign government in a crisis of its fate by unreasonable demands, but I will never consent to any doctrine, or the application of any principle, which shall abandon an American citizen to the tender mercies of a foreign government which suspends that great muniment of personal liberty, the writ of habeas corpus, secured by so much precious Anglo-Saxon blood and so dear to every lover of freedom. If my friend from Indiana has correctly stated the Republican view of this principle, then I do not wonder that the naturalized citizen who has fled from political oppression supports and will continue to support the Democratic party.

RIGHT TO SPEEDY TRIAL.

Now let me quote a recent letter of our minister in London in reply to an application from our consul at Cork asking his intervention in behalf of American citizens thus lying in jail in Ireland, and who have been lying there for months untried:

The "coercion act," so called, is an exceptional and arbitrary measure. Its chief object is to enable the authorities to arrest persons whom they suspect of illegal conduct without being obliged to produce any proof of their guilt. Its very substance and main purpose are to deprive suspected persons of the speedy trial they desire. This law is of course contrary to the spirit and foundation principles of both English and American jurisprudence. But it is the law of the land, and it controls all persons domiciled in the proclaimed districts of Ireland, whether they are British subjects or not; and it is manifestly futile to claim that naturalized citizens of the United States should be excepted from its operation.

Unless I am instructed to the contrary by the Department of State, I must take this view of my duties, and it is proper you should give this intimation to the parties interested.

J. R. LOWELL.

Now that is a doctrine to which I cannot subscribe. I reassert that it is the duty of this Government to require of the British Government that these American citizens shall either be put to trial, convicted if they are guilty, and punished if convicted, or else that they shall be released. It is not reasonable that an American citizen who may be as innocent as any gentleman in this House, going to Ireland on lawful business or for his pleasure, shall be taken by the throat, carried to prison and kept there to rot, because the writ of habeas corpus happens to be suspended.

And I am told that in answer to a request made by the Committee on Foreign Affairs for information as to two citizens in June and July last, the demand for information having been forwarded to London, that no reply has yet been received. Will this House justify such delay in the case of an American citizen who has the right to claim the protection of his country? I answer no; and I hope the Department of State will at once, if it has not already done so, send to Mr. Lowell the instructions without which he declares that he must decline to intervene in behalf of our fellow-citizens to whom a speedy trial is refused.

EXPATRIATION.

Before I leave this branch of my subject, and in order to give it a practical application, let me say that the neglect of Congress to define how the doctrine of expatriation, which it has announced with so much emphasis, is to be carried into effect when an American citizen wishes to expatriate himself, is not at all creditable to its sense of duty. So early as 1869, after the passage of our declaratory laws, the British Parliament enacted the statute entitled "the naturalization act of 1870," in which it is provided that—

Any British subject who has at any time before, or may at any time after the passing of this act, when in any foreign state, and not under any disability, voluntarily become naturalized in such state, shall, from and after the time of his so having become naturalized in such foreign state, be deemed to have ceased to be a British subject and be regarded as an alien.

Now we have no such provision for expatriation, and the result is that many questions of a very embarrassing nature have arisen in regard to this subject President Grant called the attention of Congress to this subject in his annual message at the first session of the Forty-third Congress, in the following emphatic language, which I commend to the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as in need of pressing attention:

Until the year 1868 it was left embarrassed by conflicting opinions of courts and jurists to determine how far the doctrine of allegiance derived from our former colonial relations with Great Britain was applicable to American citizens. Congress then wisely swept these doubts away by enacting that "any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of this Government which denies, restricts, impairs, or questions the right of expatriation is inconsistent with the fundamental principles of this Government." But Congress did not indicate in that statute, nor has it since done so, what acts are deemed to work expatriation. For my own guidance in determining such questions I required (under the provisions of the Constitution) the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments upon certain questions relating to this subject. The result satisfies me that further legislation has become necessary. I therefore commend the subject to the careful consideration of Congress, and I transmit herewith copies of the several opinions of the principal officers of the Executive Departments, together with other correspondence and pertinent information on the same subject. The United States, who led the way in the overthrow of the feudal doctrine of perpetual allegiance, are among the last to indicate how their own citizens may elect another nationality.

President Grant then renews very earnestly the recommendation that immediate action should be taken to save the Government from the embarrassment of this question. Nothing has ever been done in this direction. The Foreign Affairs Committee of the Forty-third Congress, of which, if I am not mistaken, my friend from Indiana

[Mr. ORTH] was chairman, never took any action. These gentlemen who claim so much for the Republican party (and I will concede every item of the claim which is just—I am glad to welcome their efforts for the protection of naturalized American citizens) never secured any legislation upon this recommendation, though the volume which I hold in my hand is made up of opinions of Cabinet officers, all agreeing that such legislation was absolutely necessary.

As the matter now stands, those of our foreign-born citizens who by treaty are limited to two years' residence in the land of their birth under the penalty of forfeiting their claim to protection as American citizens have just reason to complain of the discrimination against them; and this inequality presses with peculiar severity upon our citizens of German birth. We owe it to them and to our own safety to have one uniform rule of expatriation, applicable, as is the British rule, to all countries alike; and if the Committee on Foreign Affairs will mature and report such a measure, I think it will receive a hearty support on this side of the House.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Upon the other branch of the subject to which I referred, the assertion of the Monroe doctrine, I have listened with very great interest to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] who has given in his adhesion to a doctrine much more advanced than any that was ever propounded by President Monroe, or by any President who has occupied the Executive office since his day, or by any Secretary of State who has preceded the late Secretary of State. It is important to the destinies of the United States that what is known as the Monroe doctrine should be properly defined, asserted, and maintained.

The gentleman from Indiana may possibly have had reference to these novel claims when he characterized Mr. Marcy as a relic of Bourbonism; for Mr. Marcy never for one moment denied that European nations had, and might continue to have, commercial interests on the western continent which they might justly protect, and which would entitle them to the use upon equal terms of any intercommunication which might be established across the Isthmus of Panama between the two great oceans. Neither did he ever reject the idea that treaties guaranteeing the neutrality of such avenues of communication might properly be made by the maritime powers of the world, with the nation through whose territory such communication might be constructed. Such guarantee surely can only strengthen the full use upon equal terms to all the world, which the very nature of the enterprise suggests and demands.

So far as I understand the Monroe doctrine, it does not reject the willing co-operation of European nations in assuring the neutrality of the proposed Isthmus transit, but it relates rather to the acquirement of new or additional political jurisdiction on the American continent, or to the assumption of any protectorate over or in behalf of any existing political power on this continent. Mr. Mouroe's statement limits his opposition to further European colonization on this continent, and against any attempts of the allied powers to extend their system to any portion of this continent. But to extend this doctrine to the denial of the right to guarantee neutrality, and to reserve the right of such guarantee to ourselves alone, is certainly a novel departure, and one which, if approved and sustained by Congress, will tend to isolate this country and its commercial interests from the rest of the world. Such isolation would not accomplish the results at which my friend from Tennessee aims in extending the area of American commerce. It would simply restrict it to the territory which we now occupy, and which we may take under our control or into our possession whenever it may suit us to do so.

I do not think that we are prepared for such isolation. On the contrary, while we will not tolerate or permit European interference either with our internal affairs or any intervention which will impair the sovereignty or autonomy of our neighbors, we should be ready now, as of old, to accept their assurance that they will recognize and confirm the guarantee which we have made with the Colombian Government that the great Isthmus highways of commerce shall be and remain forever free to all comers for legitimate commercial purposes, but not for warlike operations. That the control of these highways should be in our hands, so far as this continent is concerned, is just as reasonable as that the control of the Suez Canal should be in the hands of European powers. But the Monroe doctrine does not apply to commercial interests. It is political in nature, and in its political application to the non-interference of European nations in the politics of the American continent, it is to be asserted and maintained at all hazards and at any cost.

In conclusion let me reproduce the language of Mr. Monroe. A great deal is said about it, but it seems to me that very few persons can have read it. In his message to Congress in 1823, in which what is known as the Monroe doctrine was announced, Mr. Monroe said:

> The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments. And to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure, and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity the whole nation is devoted. We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere, but with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by a European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

That is the Monroe doctrine. From the doctrine thus announced we have never departed, nor did we fail to assert it when France, taking advantage of our embarrassments in the throes of a civil war, undertook to set up an imperial government in Mexico. We shall maintain this doctrine at all cost and every hazard, but we shall never permit it to be used as the cloak for speculative enterprises, or as the covert means of gratifying personal ambition.

It is always to be borne in mind that while the Monroe doctrine expressly denies the right of European nations to acquire any new or additional jurisdiction on the western continent, it makes no limitation whatever as to the right of the United States to acquire new territory or continental jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, we have acquired Texas, California, and other portions of Mexico since his day. Any limitation, therefore, to such acquisitions is a violation of the spirit of the Monroe doctrine, and if at any time, as I think is the case in what is known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, we have limited this right of acquisition and extension, we have departed from the ways of the fathers, and should retrace our steps, taking care, however, to protect our honor while we protect our interests, by conducting the negotiation for the unavoidable abrogation of the treaty, with a proper regard to the rights and sensibilities of the contracting parties. The other side should be made to see that it is not possible to put limits to the enterprise of a free people whose very principle of government involves the possibility of indefinite expansion, and may demand it in the interests of progress and humanity.

THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR BILL.

To the diplomatic and consular bill as reported by the committee I do not propose to take any exception. The appropriations are mainly in accordance with the requirments of law, and any criticism which I might deem it my duty to offer will be directed rather to the law under which these appropriations are made, than to the appropriations themselves. The laws relating to the commerce of the country and to its diplomatic and consular service are the growth of a century, during which time they have been patched to meet particular exigencies and have never received a thorough and intelligent revision, such as has been given from time to time to the commercial legislation of England and France. The present time is peculiarly appropriate for the consideration of this question. We have peace within our borders, and there are no disturbing causes which are likely to produce dissension.

The political reconstruction of the southern part of the Union is now complete—the attention of the country is fully drawn to the great resources of that portion of the Union, and the work of development already inaugurated will surely be prosecuted until these resources in minerals, and in the great staples of commerce, will be fully exploited and converted into national wealth. We no longer lack capital or machinery, or intelligent views as to the possibilities of our industrial future, we only need to remove the artificial obstructions, which have been raised by legislation in order to enter upon a career of progress which shall outdo anything which has been witnessed in any country or in any age. These obstructions are of two kinds; first, those imposed by the fiscal legislation of the country, and secondly, those of an administrative nature in the imposition of taxes for raising revenue for the support of government. It is with the latter class that I propose to deal to-day, reserving what I have to say in regard to the tariff and its provisions hereafter, when the bill creating a commission for the revision of the tariff shall come up for consideration.

Yet I may say now that as each appropriation bill comes up for consideration I shall endeavor to point out the administrative reforms which may be made with advantage to the trade and industry of the country, in the hope either by independent legislation or by such provisions attached to the appropriation bills as may be proper, the reforms may be effected. In what I shall say to-day I hope to have the sympathy and co-operation of the committee who have reported this bill, and whose attention was not specially directed to the abuses which I think should be reformed.

CONSULAR SYSTEM SUPPORTED BY TAXATION.

In the report which accompanies the bill the committee very highly commends the consular system of the United States, and congratulates the House upon the fact that it is self-sustaining and contributes very largely to the prevention of fraud on the importation of goods. It is stated that the—

> Receipts by fees paid into the Treasury of the United States amount annually to from $75,000 to $100,000 more than the entire expenses of the consular system, so that in the mere money view of it the result is extremely satisfactory.

The exact fact as shown by the report of the Fifth Auditor on pages 3 and 4 is that the receipts were $873,229.67 and the expenses were $847,986.02, making the excess of receipts over expenditures $25,243.65. The receipts were from two sources: fees received for official services $843,066.36, and for the extra wages of seamen discharged in foreign ports $30,163.31. The proper statement is, therefore, that the commerce of the country was taxed for fees collected to an amount sufficient to pay all the expenses of the consular system, which is no more self-sustaining than any other department of the Government, which is also maintained by taxes levied upon the general business of the country through custom-house and internal-revenue agencies. In other words, there is no distinction to be made in favor of the consular system by reason of the fact that special taxes are levied for its support. The only question to be considered is how far this taxation is necessary, and how far any portion of the consular system is useless or injurious to the general business of the country.

CONSULAR FUNCTIONS.

Consuls are of two kinds, those who attend to commercial business in the ports and those who attend to custom-house business in interior towns. The latter are not consuls in the proper sense of the term; they are Treasury agents to whom the name of consul is given because they serve in foreign countries, but they have none of the ordinary functions and duties of consuls to perform. The proper duty of a consul, and the only duties which the consuls of other commercial nations perform, is to attend to the shipping and see to the sailors who may come into the ports where consuls are stationed. They are there for the protection of our maritime rights and the rights of our citizens in foreign ports. Upon this class of consuls, however, has been devolved commercial duties pertaining to invoices of goods, and to the extent that this work is done by consuls stationed in ports of entry, they also are Treasury agents doing work which has no necessary connection with the maritime business of the country. These Treasury agents are now stationed in nearly all the industrial centers of foreign countries, where their chief duty is to verify invoices in triplicate, and to give consular certificates that the true value of the goods is stated in the invoices. These consuls were unknown to our system, as they are to the consular systems of other commercial nations, until the exigencies of the war of the rebellion required us to establish the present tariff of high duties upon foreign goods, and as a consequence to introduce the ad valorem system more largely in the schedules than would otherwise have been possible or desirable. These Treasury consuls came into existence under the act of 1864, and the theory under which they were created was undoubtedly sound.

CONSULAR CERTIFICATES.

The idea was that they would make themselves familiar with the market value of goods shipped to the United States, certify to it in each case, and thus prevent fraud upon the customs, but as a matter of fact the system has been a total failure. It is not possible, where the business is large, for the consul to make himself familiar with the fluctuations in value; and inasmuch as nearly all our imports come in steamers, a very rapid handling of goods is required, so that the invoices are usually brought into the consul's office on the day before the sailing of the steamer, and the pressure is so great that he can do no more than affix seals and sign his name in order to return the invoice in time to catch the mail, without making any investigation whatever as to value. In fact, in London and Paris, where I have personally inspected the operation, it is not an uncommon thing to find a long line of merchants with consular invoices awaiting signature, which cannot be procured in time for the mail, and during my last visit to London I was especially requested to call the attention of the Treasury to this matter, in order that the inconvenience and annoyance of delay might be avoided. I am glad to say that the new consul at London, General Merritt, has promised, and doubtless will adopt, some measures to remedy these just complaints. But, aside from delay, the fact is that the subject of value is entirely and necessarily overlooked, and the officers of the customs on our side do not regard the consular certificates as of any practical value. When the Jay commission was sitting in New York this matter was fully discussed, and Colonel Burt, who is now the naval officer of the port of New York, made a series of recommendations, the first of which is as follows:

The repeal of all laws requiring consular certificates and invoices—they are absolutely useless. No attention is given by consuls to the accuracy of invoices either as to naked market price or to discounts and charges. Apart from the simplification of business, consulships would only be necessary at the principal seaports.

I have since communicated with Colonel Burt in order to learn whether his opinions on this subject have been changed; but he reaffirms them, and his opinion is confirmed by that of every officer of the customs I have consulted.

It will be remembered that the Jay commission, as it was called, investigated the New York custom-house, and the merchants of New York had a hearing before it, in which they pointed out the reforms which the Chamber of Commerce had requested them to recommend. They submitted their views in writing, which will be found on pages 10 and 11 of the pamphlet published by the Chamber of Commerce, from which I make the following extract:

III. THE ABOLITION OF TRIPLICATE INVOICES.

The committee suggest the abolition of the present system of triplicate invoices as provided for in section 2853 of the Revised Statutes.

This system of triplicate invoices was originated by the act of March 3, 1863, prior to which time triplicate invoices had never been required. The system was meant to be an improvement on the act of March 1, 1823, which necessitated simply the production by the importer of a single invoice.

Triplicate invoices are a source of expense, because under existing laws at least four copies must be made—three for the Government and one for the merchant himself; and each copy must be written out by itself, no press copies being allowed. Triplicates are also a source of delay in shipping goods. This is emphatically true under the existing custom of ordering goods by cable, on the eve of the sailing of a particular steamer, where there is often not time enough to multiply invoices in offices employing but a limited clerical force. Merchants complain that the secrets of their business are often exposed, the one of the triplicates filed for preservation in the consular office being usually accessible to rivals in business.

IV. THE ABOLITION OF CONSULAR CERTIFICATES.

Triplicate invoices and consular certificates, being parts of the same system, should be treated together. The committee propose the abolition of triplicate invoices, also of the foreign declaration to accompany one of the triplicates, also of the consular certificate, all provided for in sections 2853 to 2855 of the Revised Statutes.

Consular certificates on all invoices were not required prior to the act of July 14, 1862. That act was repealed by the act of March 3, 1863, which originated the system of triplicate invoices. The theory of this system is perhaps a good one. It is that a consul becomes an agent of the Government to collect information relating to imports, and to collect samples of all goods shipped to the United States, and that he will make himself an authority upon market values, and will so familiarize himself with the prices of goods, by a comparison of invoices and otherwise, as to make himself a skilled instrument in detecting and preventing frauds.

It is generally admitted that this system, however good in theory, is practically a failure. Consuls do not become experts in value, nor do they regularly collect and forward samples, nor are they efficient instruments in discovering frauds; even the revenue officials themselves paying but little attention to the statements of consuls, and rarely giving to their certificates any consideration. It is not too much to say that every importer can from his own experience furnish instances showing the ignorance and inefficiency of consuls touching the revenue laws and their administration, the letters received by the committee containing numerous illustrations of this kind.

Two complaints are made against this system, namely: the expense to the merchant, and the delay. The expense is now a larger item than it was formerly when there were less facilities for ordering goods, and when invoices were less frequent and of larger amounts. The statute, section 2851, authorizes a fee of $2.50 for a certificate, and that amount is usually increased by another dollar, by local usages.

Delays, however, are a more serious complaint. Before merchandise can be shipped three invoices must be made out for the consul, and his certificate must be obtained. If for any reason he is absent from his post, or if his office hours are either very short or are not strictly observed, the merchant may lose the opportunity of making his shipment on a certain day. The telegraph has revolutionized the system of doing business within the last few years. Instead of large importations made at the beginning of each season, frequent and small orders are now sent by cable, often with reference to the sailing of particular steamers. Into the merchant's calculations as to whether his goods will be shipped, there enters, under the present system of triplicates and consular certificates, the uncertain quantity of the length of time that may be required to pass his invoices through the consulate.

The power to detain invoices is another serious objection to the present system. It is given to consuls by section 2862 of the Revised Statutes. This discretionary power is sometimes abused, causing expense and vexatious delays to merchants without any adequate benefit to the revenue.

Our committee recommend that the entire system of triplicates, declarations, and certificates be abolished, and that the substantial provisions of the act of 1823 be revived. Under that act entry was made on an invoice verified by the owner of the goods, such verification being made in this country if the owner was here, or before a foreign consul if the owner was abroad. The substantial requirement was simply this: that entry should be made on a sworn invoice, verified by the actual owner of the goods, wherever he might be.

HOME APPRAISEMENT.

It thus appears that the judgment of the customs officers is confirmed by the opinion of the leading merchants who handle the foreign business of this country. But the difficulty does not stop here; the law as it stands provides two things in regard to the invoices: first, the market value at the time of procurement or manufacture; and second, the market value at the place of such procurement or manufacture. And then the law provides two other things with reference to the entry at the custom-house: first, the market value at the period of exportation; and second, the market value at such period in the principle markets of the country of exportation. Now these two values are often very different, and the merchant is left to choose between them, and if by any chance the difference is more than 10 per cent. his goods are liable to forfeiture and he is liable to fine. This question of dutiable value, which is thus complicated by two sets of rules governing the shipment of goods, would be embarrassing enough, but it is coupled with another provision of the law that the goods when they arrive shall be appraised at the custom-house, and the judgment of the appraiser is final unless appealed from. After providing elaborate machinery abroad for the determination of value, the machinery costing at least $500,000 a year, and which all the authorities agree upon as useless, another organization of machinery is provided at home in the custom-house, also at a cost exceeding half a million of dollars a year, for the determination of the dutiable value which the consuls are supposed to know and verify. I have not time to describe the extent and ramifications of the appraiser's department of the New York custom-house, but it occupies a building nearly as large as this Capitol, and is filled with as many active and contradictory individuals.

PRACTICE OF OTHER COMMERCIAL NATIONS.

Moreover, we are the only commercial people in the world who require triplicate invoices and consular certificates. In the custom-houses of Great Britain and France they are entirely unknown. All that is required at the hands of the importer, is to furnish the government with a descriptive list of the goods imported and proof of ownership, which it receives, and takes upon itself the examination of the goods, and the making out of a bill of duties, which the importer pays and receives an order for his merchandise. Neither are invoices or bills of lading indispensable; nor are oaths on bonds required, and there are no fees or charges except in the use of stamp paper, costing two cents a sheet. This is the French system. In Great Britain all that is required is to submit a formal entry, which must contain the particulars corresponding with the description of the goods and packages given in the report of the ship, with a memorandum of the duties which may be payable upon the goods mentioned in the entry, which, when paid, is to be signed by the collector or his deputy and transmitted to the proper authority, who will deliver the goods. Neither invoices nor bills of lading are essential, but these with other papers can be demanded by the government if fraud is suspected. No consular certificates, however, are required in any case. There are some customs fees, but neither bonds nor oaths are required. When goods are incorrectly described to the prejudice of the treasury, they are forfeited, with the penalty of £100.

The only countries in the world besides the United States who require consular invoices are the Hawaiian Islands, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru, Venezuela, and Colombia, all nations without any considerable commerce, and who have blindly followed our legislation because it makes possible the collection of fees appropriated to the maintenance of a feeble consular system, which in their case might otherwise be abandoned.

REFORM NEEDED.

If I am correct in my views in regard to the inutility of triplicate invoices and consular certificates, and these views are confirmed by every known authority, then the tax imposed for this purpose is an absolute obstruction to commerce, and an unnecessary charge upon the consumer, who has to repay to the importer all the expenses, governmental or otherwise, which adhere to the delivery of the goods.

The only effect of maintaining this system of Treasury consuls is to provide places at the expense of the tax-payer for a large number of officials, who, finding it impossible to earn a living at home, are thus provided with positions abroad at the expense of the tax-payers. I estimate that about one-third of the whole expense of the consular system is incurred for these Treasury consuls who do not reside at ports of entry. They are as useless as a fifth wheel to a coach, and should be discontinued. The saving will be about three hundred thousand dollars a year to the tax-payer, and the Government will be relieved of a large number of useless placemen.

How is this reform to be brought about? When I discussed this subject in the Forty-fifth Congress I recommended that the Committee on Foreign Affairs should bring in a bill repealing so much of the Revised Statutes as provides for triplicate invoices, consular oaths, and the maintenance of these consuls, whose sole business is to receive and verify these documents. No such legislation has been brought forward. I am not in favor of this kind of legislation on appropriation bills, but reflection has brought me to the conclusion that if permissive authority be given to the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion to dispense with these invoices and certificates, and with the consuls who do no other business but to verify them, the reform might be tentatively undertaken. This was the system pursued in regard to consular fees, to which I shall advert hereafter. A request was made to the President to revise them and the revision has already resulted in a large reduction in the exactions heretofore imposed upon our merchant marine. There is certainly no occasion for these invoices or certificates for goods upon the free list, or where the duties are specific—probably one-half of the fees which, as I said before, are only a charge upon commerce, would be saved by dispensing with consular certificates in such cases, and the other half, being practically useless, would very soon be abandoned.

In order that the committee may act intelligently upon the suggestion I annex a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, giving a statement of the fees received and the expenses incurred at seaport consulates, and at inland consulates, by which it appears that the inland consulates, collected $327,341.14, at a cost of $200,821.80. The fees collected by seaport consulates are $515,725.22, in which are included, however, as I understand it, fees collected from shipping amounting to $122,000. If the suggestion which I shall make be adopted, and the consular certificates upon triplicate invoices are dispensed with, the whole of the inland consulates will be abolished and a considerable portion of the expenses of the seaport consulates will be saved, but the fees collected will no longer suffice for the support of the consular system, which will then be paid for as the diplomatic service is, by appropriations from the Treasury, as is the case with other commercial nations. The cost of the consular service of Great Britain is about one million three hundred thousand dollars per annum. They maintain no consuls in interior towns, but they have consuls in every port where the British flag floats. I advocate the same system. I would strengthen the consular system all over the world in ports of entry; I would pay an adequate compensation for men competent to perform the duties, subjected to preliminary examination, and I would let the charge fall upon the whole country, and not place a positive obstruction in the way of its general commerce. But particularly I would avoid the imposition of tax which produces no beneficial results, as is the case with the fees taken to support inland consulates for the protection of the Treasury—a protection which it does not and cannot receive in that way.

The amendment which I shall ask the committee to accept at the proper time will be as follows:

Authority is hereby given to the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion to dispense with the triplicate invoices and consular certificates now required by sections 2853, 2854, and 2855 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and he is hereby authorized and requested to make such regulations in regard to invoices and consular certificates as in his judgment the public interest may require, and the President is hereby requested to withdraw the consuls of the United States from all places which are not ports of entry whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury they are no longer required for the protection of the revenue.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF NEW YORK.

There are some other points wherein the operations of the consular system connect it with the laws and regulations under which the Treasury Department exercises supervision over the commercial marine of the country. These points of contact have been made the subject of an investigation by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, and led to a report of a special committee, which was adopted on the 16th of January, 1882. This report deals with what are alleged to be impediments to the prosperity of our shipping interests. The committee sum up its recommendations under ten heads, all of which I have carefully examined, and to some of which this is the proper time to refer.

The first recommendation is that the existing law of Congress requiring three months' wages to be collected by the consul for all seamen discharged in foreign ports should be repealed. In view of the facilities of transportation introduced in recent years, the object of the law would certainly be gained by collecting one month's wages only, which should be paid to the seamen, and the remaining two-thirds be altogether remitted.

The committee also recommend the abolition of all consular fees, and they seem to be under the impression that the consuls of the United States are paid chiefly by fees and not by salaries. In this they are in error. The fees collected by the consuls were formerly vexatious in number and excessive in amount, but in 1879, in the bill making provision for the support of the consular system, I offered, and the House inserted, a provision requesting the President of the United States to revise the tariff of fees and to reduce them to the standard adopted by other commercial nations. This duty was performed under the last administration, and I had hoped to be able, in answer to a resolution which I offered early in the session, to furnish the official reply of the State Department as to the action which has been taken, but it is enough to say now that no real grievance any longer exists in regard to the consular fees. I am in favor of their entire abolition so far as services to ships and seamen are concerned. These fees now produce $122,000 per annum—a sum too small to be permitted to cause annoyance, and sometimes hardship, to the shipping interests of the country; and if the committee approve I would recommend that the President be requested to discontinue the collection of fees so far as in his judgment may be practicable and advisable.

The ship-builders of this country have fallen into the same error in regard to these fees, and Mr. Roach in various publications, and particularly in his testimony before the Naval Committee, expressly charges that the whole amount of fees collected by American consuls, about eight hundred thousand dollars, is a direct burden upon American shipping and an impediment to its growth. As a matter of fact three-quarters of the entire sum collected, as we have seen, is derived from consular certificates on triplicate invoices of merchandise, and does not in any way affect the shipping interest of the country, although it is an unwise and unnecessary charge upon its commercial trade.

REVIVAL OF AMERICAN SHIPPING.

There are some other trivial and unnecessary impediments in the way of American ships engaged in the foreign trade, but if they were all removed, as they should be, we should not secure the restoration of our foreign commercial marine. Foreign commerce we have to the extent of $1,500,000 per annum, but it is carried on mainly in foreign bottoms and will continue to be so carried until we can build, or buy ships, and run them as cheaply as our competitors. We are the only people in the world who are forbidden to purchase foreign-built vessels, but we permit all the world to enter our ports with vessels purchased in the open markets of the world. We thus prohibit our own citizens from engaging in the carrying trade upon equal terms with foreigners, and yet we complain that the carrying trade has passed from our grasp. The ocean is free and ships should be free, and until the right is granted to American citizens to get ships in the open markets of the world it is idle to talk of the restoration of our shipping to its old pre-eminence by the removal of a few petty charges, which, however objectionable, are not differential, but are imposed on every ship, foreign and domestic alike, which enters our ports.

Nor will subsidies improve our case. We may indeed bribe capitalists to float the American flag, but the subsidies thus paid will be taken from the pockets of our own people in the shape of increased or unnecessary taxes, and what we pay for the luxury of running costly ships will, after all, come from the pockets of the producers of the freight with which these ships will be loaded. We are now at least clear of this form of injustice, if it be not entitled to a stronger descriptive appellation. Let us remain clear, and let us remove the real obstructions to the growth of our investments in ships, by adopting the policy of the rest of the world, and that is, the purchase of ships designed for the foreign trade where we can get them cheapest, reserving the monopoly of our coasting trade as the needed and ample nursery for seamen. We shall then have an American shipping interest that will be healthy in its character, permanent in its operation, and beneficent in its results to all classes in the community.

Mr. KASSON took the floor.

Mr. ORTH. I ask my friend from Iowa to yield to me a few minutes.

Mr. KASSON. I can yield to the gentleman from Indiana for ten minutes.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Chairman, on the 31st of January I had the honor to submit to this House a few hurried remarks, not a prepared speech, in reference to the doctrine of the rights of American citizens abroad, whether native-born or naturalized; and in the course of my remarks stated, what I am ready to-day to reaffirm, that the Democratic party of this country had obtained and retained control of the Government for more than thirty years, mainly by the vote of the naturalized citizens of this country, and yet during all that time had failed to place within the lids of the statute-book a single law for the protection of such citizens while visiting fatherland. I ought probably to have said the "modern Democratic party," for my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] would hardly be included in the democracy of Jackson's time. I submit to that gentleman in all conscience whether it is not going a little too far back—[Mr. HEWITT, of New York, rose]—I have but a few minutes and cannot yield. I submit to the gentleman in all candor whether he does not go back a little too far into the dim vista of the past to ascertain the paternity of modern Democracy?

He stated I had made a challenge and refused to yield for reply. The RECORD does not so disclose.

Mr. McLANE. Yes, I asked you to yield, and you would not do so.
